Among the buildings burned were the Chinese and Siamese bazars. The officers commanding the British forces have telegraphed to Lord Dufferin, the Viceroy, that they are powerless to prevent the rebellious rioting of the natives, and have urgently asked for re-enforcements.

LATER NEWS ITEMS.

The machinery manufacturers of Chicago contemplate closing their places of business until the employes will agree to accept ten hours' pay for ten hours' work. Chicago advices of Friday thus outline the industrial situation in that city:

Some of the smaller shops, where iron molders and metal workers are employed, have given eight-hour concessions to their men, but the larger employers, like the Crane Brothers, are still standing out. The wood-workers have agreed upon eight hours, but without extra pay. The bakers have bettered their condition, and the brewers now receive full pay with shortened hours of work. The furniture-workers have won in a few cases, though most of them are out on a strike against a solid organization of manufacturers. At the McCormick works the men are receiving an advance of 15 per cent in wages. There are 3,500 men out at the car-shops of the Chicago and Northwestern, the Illinois Central, and Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific. All of the men at Pullman are still out. In the tobacco factories there are 1,000 girls and women working for $3 or $4 per week. The Eight-hour League will try to benefit them. The freight-handlers' strike seems to be growing hopeless. They expect the section men to strike shortly if none of the skilled unions come to their rescue. The brickyards are working, the owners having compromised the differences between the men and employers. There are strikes at the principal bridge-building works. The employes at the coal and wood yards are nearly all striking. The furriers are formulating demands to be presented soon. The barbers are trying to have Sunday work done away with, but are not striking. Every organ factory in the city is shut down, the men being out on strike. The planing mills have started up. The railroads are trying to run without their men, whom they are paying off and discharging. At the soap works of Kirk & Co. 600 persons have obtained eight hours. A hopeful tone pervades many of the striking communities, and they look for the ultimate success of the eight-hour movement when the present excitement has subsided.

CONGRESSIONAL.

The Work of the Senate and House of Representatives.

THE postoffice appropriation bill occupied the attention of the Senate on the 30th ult., and Mr. Hale, of Maine, finished his speech in support of the subsidy amendment. Mr. Brown, of Georgia, also spoke in favor of it. The bill to make Omaha a port of entry was vetoed by the President for the reason that at that place the Government does not have the necessary officers for the appraisement of merchandise and the collection of duties. The President sent the following nominations of Postmasters to the Senate: At Brooklyn, N. Y., Joseph C. Hendrix; at Baltimore, Md., Frank J. Brown, vice I. Parker Vesey, resigned; at Shippensburg, Pa., J. A. C. McClune; at Washington, Kansas, James S. Vodder. In the House of Representatives the Committee on Indian Affairs reported favorably a bill giving the Chicago, Kansas and Nebraska Railroad the right of way through the Indian Territory. The House rejected an amendment to the river and harbor bill offered by Mr. Warner (Ohio), providing that the appropriation for the improvement of the Mississippi River shall be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War instead of the Mississippi River Commission, and providing for a Congressional committee to investigate the work of the Mississippi River Commission. The House refused, by a vote of 33 to 123, to strike out the levee clause.

THE Senators took a rest, and the House of Representatives only was in session on the 1st inst. Mr. Cox, of North Carolina, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported a bill amendatory of the Chinese immigration act. Also, providing indemnity to certain Chinese for losses sustained within the jurisdiction of the United States. Mr. Ward, of Indiana, from the Committee on Postoffices and Roads, reported a bill authorizing the employment of messengers in the mail service. Mr. McAdoo, of New Jersey, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported a bill authorizing the construction of dry-docks at certain navy-yards.

MR. INGALLS' resolution making April 30 instead of March 4 the beginning of the Presidential term and of Congress was favorably reported to the Senate on the 3d inst. Mr. Dolph offered an amendment to the fortifications appropriation bill appropriating $10,000,000 for the construction of fortifications and other works of coast defense. The Senate considered without action the postoffice appropriation bill. Senators Vest and Colquitt opposed the subsidy amendment. Senator Eustis advocated it. Speeches were made by Senators Ingalls and Miller. The Committee on Privileges and Elections reported favorably to the Senate a bill creating a commission, to be appointed by the President, to select an accurate ballot-box and counting device, which shall be used in all Congressional elections. In the House of Representatives the delegate from Arizona introduced a bill to authorize the President to offer a reward of $25,000 for the killing or capture of Geronimo, the Indian chief. The House passed under suspension of the rules bills providing for the adjustment of land grants made by Congress to aid in the construction of railroads in Kansas and for the forfeiture of unearned lands, and appropriating $153,000 for the repair and enlargement of the public buildings at Des Moines, Iowa. Mr. Breckinridge, of Arkansas, introduced a resolution to give silver certificates a full legal-tender character, and providing for the issue of certificates of the denominations of $1, $2, and $5. Mr. Findlay introduced a resolution declaring a reduction of the tariff duties impolitic and impractical and abolishing the excise taxes on tobacco and its sale and manufacture.

THE Senate passed the postoffice appropriation bill on the 4th inst., with an amendment giving $800,000 for transportation of foreign mails by American steamships. Mr. Hoar read a letter from Mr. Tompkins, Secretary of the committee of the Ohio House that investigated the Payne affair, to the effect that in the copies of the report printed for the Senate there appeared an interpolated paragraph reflecting on the majority of the committee. The letter was referred to the proper committee, and the report was ordered printed in correct form. In the House the Weaver-Campbell election contest from the Sixth Iowa District was taken up, the majority report in favor of Weaver, the sitting member, being adopted.

THE bill to grant right of way through the Fort Seldon military reservation to the Rio Grande, Mexico and Pacific Railroad Company passed the Senate on the 5th inst. The Senate confirmed the nomination of Z. M. Zulick to be Governor of Arizona, and rejected that of Charles Pollard for Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of Montana. The nomination of R. S. Dement, to be Surveyor General of Utah, adversely reported from the Public Lands Committee, was recommitted. In the House of Representatives an adverse report was made on the Senate bill providing for a commission on the subject of the liquor traffic.

India-Rubber Gathered in Colombia.

When the hunter has found a rubber tree, he first clears away a space from the roots, and then moves on in search of others, returning to commence operation as soon as he has marked all the trees in the vicinity. He first of all digs a hole in the ground hard by, and then cuts in the tree a V-shaped incision with a machete, as high as he can reach. The milk is caught as it exudes and flows into the hole. As soon as the flow from the cut has ceased the tree is chopped down, and the trunk raised from the ground by means of an improvised trestle.

After placing large leaves to catch the sap, gashes are cut throughout the entire length, and the milk carefully collected. When it first exudes, the sap is of the whiteness and consistence of cream, but it turns black on exposure to the air. When the hole is filled with rubber, it is coagulated by adding hard soap or the roots of the mechvacan, which have a most rapid action, and prevent the escape of the water that is always present in the fresh sap. When coagulated sufficiently, the rubber is secured by bark thongs, carried on the back of the hunter to the bank of the river, and floated down on rafts.

The annual destruction of rubber trees in Colombia is very great, and the industry must soon disappear altogether, unless the government puts in force a law that already exists, which compels the hunters to tap the trees without cutting them down. If this law were strictly carried out, there would be a good opening for commercial enterprise, for rubber trees will grow from 8 to 10 inches in diameter in three or four years from seed. The trees require but little attention, and they begin to yield returns sooner than any other. Those that yield the greatest amount of rubber flourish on the banks of the Sinu and Aslato Rivers. The value of the crude India-rubber imported into the States annually is about $10,000,000.

FROM statements recently made at a meeting of the New York Charity Organization Society it appears that at least one-third of all who apply to our medical institutions for aid are unworthy of free treatment. It was also stated that the average physician spends at least one-third of his time in charitable work.

SHORTER WORKING HOURS.

Progress of the Great Movement in the Cities Looking Toward That End.

Some Manufacturers Accede to the Demand, Others Refuse, and Others Are Waiting.

Outside of the city of Chicago the movement by the trades-unions for the adoption of a rule making eight hours a day's labor was not as general as had been expected. There appeared to be no concert of action among the workingmen, and in only one city—Milwaukee—did the movement reach any magnitude. In that city the demands of the brewery employes were refused, and 3,000 of them struck. This number included the drivers, and the breweries can deliver no beer. The men in E. P. Allis & Co.'s machine shops went out, and enough men in various other trades to swell the number of strikers in the Cream City to nearly 5,000. It is reported that an equal number of men are forced into idleness in consequence. In St. Louis, St. Paul, Minneapolis, Indianapolis, Akron, O., Boston, Pittsburg, and a number of smaller cities demands were made by but few of the trades. In some cases the reduced hours were granted by the employers, in many more answer was deferred, and in others strikes ensued. There is no report of demands being made by railroad employes. In New York the movement was confined to the carpenters and joiners. There was a monster demonstration in Union Square, at which 20,000 people listened to addresses by friends of the short-time movement. It was free from disorder or Communism. In Chicago thousands of men from the lumber-yards and planing mills paraded the streets with red flags and listened to incendiary speeches in foreign tongues. The most notable strike at Chicago was with the railroads, all of the twenty-five in Chicago being affected, with the lone exception of the Baltimore and Ohio.

The Situation in Chicago.

The labor and industrial situation at Chicago on Monday, the 3d inst., was thus outlined by special dispatches from that city of that date:

It was estimated last night that 40,000 of the 225,000 wage-workers of Chicago have already profited by the eight-hour movement. About 65,000 are supposed to be out on strike this morning. In many instances, where large bodies of men are solidified under a trade movement, long strikes are threatened if the present attitude of the employers is maintained. The movement has not yet been attended by any violence, though in some quarters the socialistic element has caused seeming bickering and disquiet. This is particularly true of the lumber region and North Side furniture district.

The report received that the Milwaukee & St. Paul Company was sending 400 men into the city to take the places of the striking freight handlers caused no little uneasiness in railroad quarters. The strikers decided to resist any attempt of the imported men to handle the freight.

Previous to Saturday 1,000 brewers, as many bakers, 800 furniture workers, 1,500 clothing cutters, and 100 tuck pointers had secured a reduction of their working hours.

According to the reports received up to midnight by Mr. George A. Schilling, chairman of the eight-hour committee, the demands of the following have been satisfied: Eight hundred tobacco handlers, 700 street-car employes, all the members of the Cigar-Makers' Union, 300 beer-barrel makers, 950 dry-goods and notion store employes, 8,500 packers, and a large number of workmen employed in smaller industries. Besides, the following unions have adopted the eight-hour standard: Brick-Layers', Stone-Masons', Hod-Carriers', Plasterers', and Lathers'.

Out of the thirty-seven establishments wherein iron-molders are employed, twenty-three shops have won, five of the firms are resisting the movement, and the remainder are negotiating. The Machinists and Blacksmiths' Assembly, which is striking for eight hours, with the ten-hours wages seeded, reports general success. The upholsterers are being resisted in nearly every instance. Thirty-three hundred brickmakers are striking for eight hours' work at ten hours' pay. About one-half of the 650 butchers in the city have secured reductions from sixteen to ten hours. The Shoemakers' Assembly has modified its demands to eight hours' pay for eight hours' work, and expects to gain this concession. The Clerks' Union will be satisfied with ten hours. Four hundred wagonmakers begin work to-day under the eight-hour reform. The marble-workers have also won under the eight-hours' pay agreement. The Coopers' Assembly is still standing out for nine hours' pay.

The larger iron and brass works are closed to await events. Only one planing-mill was in operation yesterday. The laborers of the Equitable Gas Company struck for eight hours' work and full pay. The agitation in Chicago has thus far resulted in no acts of violence.

Following is a summary of the workers in the leading trades of Chicago: Fifty packing houses, 15,000 to 20,000; twenty-two breweries, 1,500; fifty wholesale bakeries, 1,100; three gas companies, 1,200; four street railways, 4,500; railroads, 15,000; one hundred cigar factories, 1,200; two express companies, 1,200; telegraph and telephone companies, 1,800; sixty-seven boot and shoe manufactories, 2,500; forty wholesale clothing manufactories, 5,000; twelve dry-goods dealers, 8,000; twenty brass foundries, 1,000; twenty tanneries, 1,300; eighty-seven foundries, iron-works, and rolling-mills, 8,000; 100 carriage and wagon factories, 1,500; 140 furniture and upholstry, 6,000; forty planing-mills and box factories, 2,500; 200 lumber yards, 7,000; 20,000 men are employed in the building trade as carpenters, paper-hangers, lathers, painters, stone and brick workers, stone-cutters, plumbers and gas-fitters, roofers and slaters.

The Situation Elsewhere.

The most of the furniture factories at Grand Rapids, Mich., were closed on the 3d inst., preparatory to the inauguration of the eight-hour movement. At Cincinnati the factories, employing about twelve thousand men, were closed, and will so remain until terms can be made. With the other trades there was considerable commotion, but in many instances the troubles were compromised. At St. Louis a great many workmen in the various branches of trade quit because their employers refused to grant their demands for an increase of pay. At Pittsburgh the trouble was confined to the building trades, and in most instances where the demands were not granted a strike was ordered, in which the carpenters and furniture-workers will lead. At Buffalo there was no trouble worth mentioning, though the socialists were trying to foment strife. In Washington there was no trouble, but, on the other hand, rejoicing among the street-car men, whose working time was, in accordance with an agreement made some months ago, reduced to twelve hours. The trades, however, were expected to strike for eight hours. In New York the piano-makers demanded eight hours work, and threatened to quit if they did not get it. From Ohio, where the eight-hour law went into effect, great depression of business was reported. Where employers were unable to get their men to work ten hours, they either dismissed them or hired them by the hour. At Indianapolis all demands were refused and a few of the factories closed. At Boston the trades united in a demand for eight hours with ten hours' pay, and will strike if their demands are not acceded to. At Milwaukee the employes in the breweries quit work because their demand for an increase of wages was not granted. The other workmen joined in a street demonstration, and along the docks there was considerable trouble on account of the interference of the strikers with the men at work. At Detroit the employes of most of the breweries quit work because the employers refused to discharge non-union men, increase wages, and decrease the hours of work. The coal operators at Pittsburgh granted an increase to the miners, and everything was quiet, but in the Monongahela district the advance was refused, and the men were at work. The advance was also refused at Youngstown, Ohio. The strikers at the New York sugar refineries were paid off, and most of them asked to return to work at the old scale of wages. The stonecutters of Pittsburgh have generally secured nine hours, but nearly every furniture factory is closed. Two hundred plumbers quit work in St. Louis and five hundred furniture men in Cincinnati. Five thousand carpenters of Boston threatened to strike for eight hours. About two thousand journeymen carpenters of Baltimore struck for eight hours' work and pay. The bosses were ready to concede ten hours' wages for nine hours' labor. The proprietors of all the planing-mills at Evansville, Indiana, agreed to open their doors to employes at eight hours' work and pay, or close for an indefinite period.

THE LABOR SITUATION.

The Great Movement of Wage-Workers for Shorter Hours of Labor.

From the mass of telegraphic dispatches to the metropolitan press on the morning of the 1st of May we glean the following summary of the industrial and labor situation at that date: At Chicago the eight-hour agitation had resulted in closing all the furniture and box factories and in the suspension of work at most of the iron and brass shops. The great army of meat-packers threatened to strike for shorter hours. Workmen in the lumber yards demanded the eight-hour concession and double pay for extra work. Freight-handlers at the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy and Chicago and Alton freight houses struck work in consequence of a refusal of the companies to adopt the eight-hour system. The workmen in different manufacturing establishments had either struck or were threatening strikes on the same ground. The demands made by laborers were not uniform, nor were the answers of employers to the propositions of the employes. The Furniture Manufacturers' Association at Grand Rapids, Mich., decided to refuse the demand for a reduction of hours of labor to eight accompanied by a 10 per cent. advance in wages. It was decided to treat with employes only as individuals. The Woodburn-Sarken Wheel Company, of Indianapolis, the largest establishment of the kind in the country, refuses to pay ten hours' wages for eight hours' work. The 6,000 miners and laborers in the Clearfield (Pa.) region were ordered to stop work if the scale adopted by the Columbus (Ohio) convention was not signed. The army of idle men at Milwaukee has created apprehensions lest an outbreak should result, and arrangements had been made to swear in several hundred special policemen. A New York dispatch of the 1st inst. says:

An extended inquiry by Bradstreet's as to the details of the agitation by labor unions generally to secure the adoption of the eight-hour day shows that the unions have already gained some ground and that the members will strike if necessary in large numbers to enforce the desired rule. The 35,000 anthracite miners in Eastern Pennsylvania demand the eight-hour rule and threaten to strike. They would do so to-day were they sure of the Luzerne and Lackawanna region men, where the organization is not as perfect as elsewhere. Missionary work is being done at the north to the end that the demand may be enforced. From Chicago word comes that a careful canvas reveals 62,001 members of various trades who will strike if the demand for eight hours is not granted, including 35,000 packing-yards employes. Associated foundrymen and metal-workers in New York and vicinity to the number of 20,000 promise trouble if nine hours are not granted them as a full day's work. At Baltimore, Milwaukee, Chicago, and Detroit there is promised a very general demand for the eight-hour day, and in the event of its refusal strikes will follow. It is noticeable that the furniture, wood-workers, and building trades unions are those most prominent, as a class, in the demand for fewer hours of work per day. At St. Louis, Louisville, and Philadelphia concessions have been made by manufacturers, and in a number of instances compromises have been made at nine hours daily at ten hours' wages. In most all directions it is reported that many manufacturers will make concessions if it comes to the question of a strike. There were to-day over six thousand men striking for eight hours per day, two-thirds of whom were at Chicago and Milwaukee. There are records of the eight-hour day having been granted to at least thirty-two thousand workmen, two-thirds of the total being at Chicago, and one-half of the remainder at Louisville and Philadelphia. There are also twenty-five thousand workmen at Chicago who have asked for eight hours per day, without as yet threatening a strike, fifteen thousand at New York City, and ten thousand scattering. Excluding the six thousand men now striking for eight hours, there are reported to be one hundred and five thousand men, exclusive of many at Baltimore and Milwaukee not enumerated, who will promptly strike if the request is not granted. This total includes the 35,000 anthracite miners, the 50,000 mentioned at Chicago, and 6,000 at New York, but does not cover the 20,000 metal-workers in the vicinity of New York who demand nine hours. At least 12,000 skilled workmen throughout the smaller industrial cities in Pennsylvania have asked for eight hours, and will compromise on nine hours per day. At many points the subject has not become actively prominent, notably at Pittsburgh, where so much of the work is piece-work, not dependent on hours of labor, and at Wheeling W. Va. In such lines at Pittsburgh as the demand has been made, there has been a compromise of nine hours. There is apparently very general demand for reduced hours of daily labor among trades unions. It is probable that the larger proportion of the employes' demands will be settled by compromise or mutual concessions. In others, to a significant degree, the demand for eight hours with ten hours' wages will be pressed with strikes. The nine-hour compromises have generally been passed on ten hours' wages, amounting to an advance of 10 per cent. in pay. Active resistance is promised by many manufacturers to pay 20 per cent. advanced wages, or ten hours' pay for eight hours' work. In brief Bradstreet's reports 105,000 men who will strike—85,000 for eight hours and 20,000 for nine hours—6,000 men now on strike for eight hours, and that eight hours have been granted 32,001 employes at various points. There are additionally 75,000 men who have asked for the eight-hour rule, but who have not stated they will strike. At leading centers alone it is probable that over 225,000 industrial employes are actively interested in the movement.

History of the Eight-Hour Movement.

It is difficult to fix an exact time at which the eight-hour movement can be said to have begun. Previous to 1856 twelve hours constituted a day's work. In that year the working hours were decreased to ten, and, generally speaking, have remained unchanged up to the present.

The eight-hour day was established in Australia thirty years ago, and one day in each year—April 21—is celebrated in commemoration of the event—just as it is proposed to celebrate May 1 in this country hereafter for a like reason. The eight-hour movement in this country received its first noticeable impetus just after the war of the rebellion, and a million and a half of men, mustered out of the army, were thrown upon the labor market, overstocking it to a distressful degree. Eight-hour leagues were formed throughout the country with the avowed purpose of securing a decrease of working hours, in order that there might be a corresponding increase in the number of laborers, thus affording the idle soldiers an opportunity of earning a living.

In 1866 a labor convention was held in Baltimore, at which delegates were present from all parts of the United States. It pronounced in favor of an eight-hour working day. Very little was said concerning any change in current wages. The stone-cutters' craft was the only one which, at that time, secured the eight-hour day.

INVOKING AID FOR IRELAND.

He Argues His Position Broadly, Claiming the Opposition Embraces Wealth and Social Influence.

Mr. Gladstone has issued a manifesto to his Midlothian constituents, in which, after explaining that his age and desire to reserve his strength for the coming contest in Parliament has prevented him from taking part in the Easter recess campaign, he referred to the messages received by him from such capitals as Washington, Boston, and Quebec as proving that the sympathy of the English-speaking race is with the home rule movement. He says that they must not be discouraged if, in the upper ranks of society at home, they hear a variety of discordant notes, and continues:

GENTLEMEN—You have before you a Cabinet determined in its purpose and with an intelligible plan of its own. I see very little else in the political arena either determined or intelligible. I will now proceed to speak of the state of things within and without Parliament and the nature and import of the next great step to be taken for the progress of my measure. I speak now of the home-rule bill and leave the land-purchase bill to stand on the declaration already made, adding only an expression of regret to find that while the sands are running from the hour-glass the Irish landlords have given no indication of a desire to accept the proposal framed in a spirit of the most allowable regard for their apprehensions and interest.

I do not underestimate the grave importance of differences of opinion among Liberals. Some are inclined to rule the whole question against us by authority. They say: "Surely such a number of able, consistent, even extreme Liberals would not have succeeded except in obedience to the imperative dictates of truth and reason." I will say nothing of the motives which determined us to confront the risk of such a parting. I earnestly recommend a reference to the lessons which history supplies. It is not the first time in the history of liberalism that a section of the Liberals under chiefs of distinction and ability have dissented from the general view of the party, to the delight and doubtless the advantage of the Tories.

There was an illustrious secession previous to the war with Bonaparte. There was a similar secession when it was proposed to disestablish the Irish Church. But eventually, in both cases, it was proved that in principle the party was right and secession was wrong. Comparing those with the present secession it was impossible not to be struck with a vital difference. In each previous secession the dissentients agreed upon an active, substantial policy.

It is not so now. Some are in favor of unlimited coercion; others of moderated doses, while a few oppose coercion altogether. On the other side, some oppose local government, some would give it to the counties, some to the provinces; some, again, would give an administrative center with legislative prerogatives, while some propose a legislative center without executive power. Some, indeed, go beyond the proposition of the Government, and actually recommend federation. Some alter the proposals which they would recommend with every new speech.

All this is proof not of the weakness of the men but of the helplessness of their cause. We have at least the advantage of one voice. The secession, however estimable it may be otherwise, is a perfect babel on Irish politics.

It is admitted on all hands that social order is the first of all political aims. To secure this in Ireland the Liberals who are in secession offer a hundred conflicting remedies—or else no remedy at all. These remarks are as applicable to the Tories as they are to the Liberals. The opponents of the Government's measure make a remarkable omission in their speeches. In each, whether suggestive or critical, they fail to express confidence in the permanent success of their opposition. To live from hand to mouth seems to be the height of their ambition, while they suspect what we all know—that the strife can only end in the concession of home rule.

If this is so the real question is not the triumph of Irish autonomy, but the length and character of the struggle. Therefore we want to shorten, they to prolong the struggle. We say "Give freely:" they, by acts if not words, say "Let us only give what we can no longer withhold." We say "Give now, while the position of the kingdom in the affairs of the world is free and strong;" they prefer to wait for a period of national difficulty, that we may yield to the Irish demand in terror, as we did in the war of 1778, as we did to the demands of the volunteers in 1782, as we did to Bonaparte in 1793, and as we did in the civil war of 1829.

We say: "Act now, when moderation of thought and language rules in Irish counsels, when by the willing concurrence of all sides every arrangement for the reservation of imperial prerogatives can be made complete and absolute." They would postpone till an hour comes when the demands may be larger and means of resistance less. We say: "Deal as with a matter between brothers—a matter of justice and reason." They renew a tale, alas! too often told, whose prologue is denial with exasperation and resentment; whose epilogue is surrender without conditions and without thanks.

CALEB WALTON WEST,

Newly Appointed Governor of Utah Territory.

The man whom President Cleveland has selected to succeed Eli H. Murray as Governor of Utah is a resident of Cynthiana, Ky., where he was born May 25, 1844. He was educated at Millersburg, in the same State. At an early age he manifested a strong bias toward the profession of law, but his reading was stopped by the breaking out of the war. He was only 17 years old when he enlisted in the Army of Northern Virginia, and was one of the company led by Joe Desha. After a year's service under Desha, Mr. West joined the command of General John Morgan, and was one of his staff when that officer was in camp at Greenville.

At the close of the war he prepared himself for the law. He was admitted to the bar in 1866, after serving for a time as Deputy Clerk, during which he read diligently. In the same year—1866—he was appointed County Attorney to fill an unexpired term, and was afterward elected to continue in the same position. He was elected County Judge of Harrison County in 1868, but resigned the position to prosecute his profession. As a lawyer he has been notably successful.

FIRST BLOOD.

A Blatant Socialist Incites a Mob to Deeds of Violence in Chicago.

Serious Riot in Chicago.

A very serious outbreak in connection with the labor troubles in Chicago occurred at the great McCormick Reaper Factory on the afternoon of the 3d inst. About 7,000 strikers gathered in some open lots near the works. They consisted largely of employes of lumber yards and planing mills. Most of the men were Germans, Bohemians, and Poles. A rather "tough" looking individual addressed the crowd from an empty beer keg in German, and other speakers delivered harangues in Bohemian and Polish. All speeches were of an inflammatory character, such as the Anarchists delight to indulge in. Their words did not fail to have an effect upon the ignorant, excitable audience, many of whom were under the influence of beer. When the Anarchist leaders thought that the excitement had been wrought up to a sufficiently high pitch, one fellow exclaimed, pointing to the buildings of the McCormick works: "Do you see that bastile of monopoly? Now is the time for you to wrest it from the hands of your oppressors!" The crowd set up an approving howl and immediately began moving toward the factory, arming themselves on the way with bricks and clubs. When they reached the big gate, the workingmen were just emerging from it. They were greeted with yells of "Scab" and "Rats," and bombarded with stones. The surprised workingmen beat a hasty retreat, but the mob followed them into the yard. The men were stoned and every window in the building was demolished. When the police interfered they were pelted with stones and fired upon. Two hundred officers were rushed to the scene as fast as horses could draw the patrol wagons, and a short, sharp battle between the police and the rabble followed. A number of the mob were shot, but were carried away by their friends, so that their names might not be obtained. A dozen policemen were hurt. The officers finally succeeded in driving the men away. A crowd of about 250 sheet-metal workers undertook to compel the suspension of work at the tin-can factory of Norton Brothers, in River street, but were frightened off by the police. The butchers employed by Swift & Co., at the Stock Yards, were forced by a mob to quit work. The managers of the railways met at the Burlington offices and resolved to act as a unit in refusing all demands for higher wages or shorter hours. An attempt was made at the various yards to handle freight with new men, but considerable difficulty was experienced. The men in Armour's packing-house are to receive ten hours' pay for eight hours' work. Between 400 and 500 women employed in Chicago tailorshops went on a strike for better wages and shorter hours.

New York.

Almost every branch of labor in New York is more or less disturbed over the determination of the men to obtain a reduction in the length of the working day. As a general rule the demand for nine hours five days in the week and eight hours on Saturday has been conceded by the employers with little or no demur, but there is opposition, more or less organized, in the different trades, to the granting of the eight-hour day.

Pittsburgh.

At Pittsburgh about 5,000 men are on a strike. They are the stonemasons, the plasterers, the carpenters, and furniture-makers. The stonemasons want $3.25 per day for nine hours' work, instead of $3.30, which they have been receiving, for ten hours' work. The plasterers ask for nine hours' work every day except Saturday, when it shall be eight, and no reduction in wages from those paid for ten hours' labor. Carpenters demand a reduction of working hours from ten to nine, wages to remain the same.

Detroit.

One thousand men employed in the shops of the Michigan Car Company quit work at Detroit. There seemed to be no organization, and there was some little confusion as to the demands, but it all amounted to less work for the same pay. Some wanted nine and others eight hours' work for ten hours' wages.

Boston.

Four thousand men—carpenters, painters, plumbers, and masons—are on a strike in Boston. Work on a number of buildings has ceased, while on others the master builders have employed non-union men to carry on the work. The strike affects buildings in all stages of construction, and contractors have had to shut down on some foundations.

St. Louis.

The whole force of employes out in St. Louis through the eight-hour movement probably numbers between two and three thousand, reports a dispatch from the Bridge City. As yet there seems to be no likelihood of the movement becoming general here, though the indications may be the other way to-morrow. There has been no violence so far, and no request for police protection has been made.

Louisville.

The refusal of the furniture manufacturers to concede ten hours' pay for eight hours' work caused a general lock-out of furniture workers at Louisville, Ky., which is the second largest furniture market in America. About 3,000 men are idle as a consequence.

The Gould Strike at an End.

The great strike on the Gould system of railroads has been declared off, and the idle employes of the road will endeavor to regain their old situations. This result, says a St. Louis dispatch, has been brought about by the efforts of the citizens' committee, appointed about three weeks ago, which has been in constant communication with the Executive Board of the Knights of Labor and the Curtin Congressional Investigating Committee, which recently made a formal request to the Knights to bring the strike to a conclusion.

DYNAMITE IN CHICAGO.

An Organized Attack by Criminal and Vicious Men Against Life and Property.

Anarchists and Socialists Execute a Deeply-Laid Plan to Destroy and Kill.

The result of the pernicious and incendiary doctrines which have been for several years preached in the streets and halls of Chicago by alien and criminal agitators, says a Chicago paper of Wednesday, was seen last night, when a dynamite bomb was thrown into the midst of a squad of policemen who were performing their sworn duty, and sixty of them were dangerously wounded, some fatally. That it was an organized and premeditated attack admits of no doubt, and the outgrowth of the riot at the McCormick reaper-works on Monday, when some anarchists were most justly punished for an attempt to destroy property. Monday night, after that riot was quelled, the following circular was scattered around the city:

"Revenge! Workingmen, to arms! Your masters sent out their bloodhounds, the police; they killed six of your brothers at McCormick's this afternoon. They killed the poor wretches because they, like you, had the courage to disobey the supreme will of your bosses. They killed them because they dared to ask for the shortening of the hours of toil. They killed them to show you, 'free American citizens,' that you must be satisfied and contented with whatever your bosses condescend to allow you, or you will get killed!

"You have for years endured the most abject humiliations; you have for years suffered unmeasurable iniquities; you have worked yourselves to death; you have endured the pangs of want and hunger; your children you have sacrificed to the factory lords; in short, you have been miserable and obedient slaves all these years. Why? To satisfy the insatiable greed, to fill the coffers of your lazy, thieving masters. When you ask them now to lessen the burden he sends his bloodhounds out to shoot you, kill you!

"If you are men, if you are the sons of your grandsires, who have shed their blood to free you, then you will rise in your might, Hercules, and destroy the hideous monster that seeks to destroy you. To arms! we call you; to arms!

"YOUR BROTHERS."

Tuesday afternoon it was followed by the following, which was thrown broadcast throughout the streets of the city:

"Attention, Workingmen! Great mass-meeting to-night, at 7:30 o'clock, at the Haymarket, Randolph street, between Desplaines and Halsted. Good speakers will be present to denounce the latest atrocious act of the police—the shooting of our fellow-workmen yesterday afternoon. THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE."

In response to this, a large crowd of anarchists and socialists assembled at the point indicated, and were harangued by a trio of blatant communists. Their talk was of a most reckless and incendiary character. One, Sam Fielden, a socialistic Englishman, was the last speaker. Said he: "We who come here to address you are socialists; rebels to the law! Legislation will never help you, never! Martin Foran went to Congress in the interest of labor, and yet he tells you that no legislation can be had for the workingman. Can't we? When the rich man understands that it is not healthy to live among a lot of discontented workmen we shall be able to get legislation and not before." Fielden continued in this strain until 10:20 p. m., when 150 police officers left the Desplaines Street Station and marched north on Desplaines. He stopped when the first line of officers was ordered to halt opposite the wagon from which he spoke.

A thousand men had meanwhile gathered. The police marched toward the crowd in platoons, headed by Inspector Bonfield and Capt. Ward. The line of the first division of officers filled the street from side to side. The police marched into the crowd, sweeping it to the pavements, and pressing it before them. When the front column reached the speakers' wagon Inspector Bonfield ordered "Halt!"

Capt. Bonfield cried: "In the name of the State of Illinois I command this crowd to disperse!"

As the words left his mouth a spluttering spark of fire arched through the air from the opening of the alley and over the speakers' wagon. It was the burning fuse of a dynamite bomb. It was well aimed in its deadly mission. It fell directly in the middle of the street, and between the first two double columns of police. The instant that it struck the ground it exploded with a terrible, sullen roar. It did its deadly work well. Twenty-nine mangled men fell groaning to the ground. The bomb broke the ranks of the officers. A gatling gun could not have cut a wider swath. A scene of horror followed, the details of which may never be known. The officers were demoralized and broke ranks. Many huddled together in the street and stood their ground. Others fled after and with the crowd. They needed no order to fire. In an instant every man's revolver was in action, and every man shot to kill. For an instant after the explosion, the crowd seemed paralyzed, but with the revolver shots cracking like the tattoo of a mighty drum, and the bullets singing in the air, the mob plunged away into the darkness with a yell of rage and fear. It was almost an indescribable scramble for life. Scores of men were knocked down by those behind them, and trampled upon like cattle in a car, unable to rise. Over twenty wounded persons were picked up and borne away. Those on the inner circle of the crowd were at the mercy of the police, and were shot down. The police pursued the mob for half a block up and down Randolph street. No man was spared. All who were overtaken by the officers were shot down and clubbed. In a moment after the explosion the streets were cleared, but within a radius of 100 feet of the spot where the bomb had fallen fully sixty men lay wounded on the ground. The center of the street seemed full of writhing, groaning men, calling for help. Under the iron stairway on the northwest corner of the street two citizens lay, one insensible, the other moaning feebly and unable to rise. Down the basement stairway, under them, three men lay. Propped against the lamp-post on the corner was a wounded man, and at his feet, in the gutter, another. Across the street, on the northwest corner, three men lay in the gutter. At the head of the basement stairway one lay silently. Another sat up, holding a bleeding leg and begging the officers not to kill him. Reclining on the stairs below them were two suffering men, and in the area-way below, three more. East and west on Randolph street wounded men lay in doorways. Within five minutes after the firing had ceased eight men lay in the alley, near the wagon, between Randolph and Lake streets. No citizens were dead that had been found within an hour after the riot. For some minutes after the mob had dispersed the police kept up a frenzied search for any who had taken refuge near by. Those who met the officers calmly were allowed to go, but all who attempted to escape were mercilessly clubbed. The work of gathering the dead, dying, and wounded was promptly begun. Forty-eight policemen were found to be wounded, eight or ten of them, it is feared, fatally. The fugitives from the scene of the riot poured into Madison street in an irresistible stream. The open stores, which here offered the first shelter, were besieged and instantly occupied by breathless and terror-stricken crowds. Close in the rear of this terrified throng the wounded followed at the best speed their injuries would permit. Men ran at a staggering pace, with the blood trickling through their clothing. Others rushed frantically through the street, shrieking with pain. Couples and small groups came dragging a wounded friend whom they had the courage to rescue. Several fell fainting in the streets and were picked up by sympathetic men in the crowds.

MICHIGAN AFFAIRS.

—A shower of minnows was observed at Cross Village one day last week. Some of the minnows measured two and three inches in length.

—Otter Lake Knights of Labor are arranging for a monster celebration July 4, to include an address by some prominent member of the order.

—Mrs. Martin Brunnell, of Bronson, who weighs only 350 pounds, may be seen at the Chicago dime museum, where she exhibits herself for $25 a week.

—Jake Countryman, of Dundee, became intoxicated, and started for home about 8 o'clock the other evening. When near the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern depot he was struck by the west-bound passenger train and instantly killed. He leaves a wife.

—A deaf mute carrying the mail from the postoffice to the Flint Deaf and Dumb Institution was discovered behind a pile of heading bolts examining the contents of letters which he had taken from the bag. While being taken to the institution where he now remains in custody, he drew a knife on one of his captors but was disarmed.

—Professor Kedzie, chemist of the Agricultural College at Lansing, has made an analysis of the contents of the principal grenades, tubes, and other patent devices for the extinguishment of incipient conflagrations. He finds the only active ingredient in all that he analyzed is common salt, and his investigations go to prove what is generally known, namely, that salt water is better than fresh water for putting out fires.

—It is generally thought among those best informed that Congress will declare forfeited the unearned portion of a valuable land grant of the Marquette, Houghton & Ontonagon Railroad, says a special from Ishpeming. The earned portion has been sold to the Michigan Land and Iron Company. The last State Legislature extended the time for building the balance of the road from L'Anse or Houghton to Ontonagon till July 4 of the present year, but the railroad company has not even begun the grading for the extension. It would appear that the railroad officials care very little whether the grant is forfeited or not.

—Aronet Richmond, senior member of the firm of Richmond & Backus, Detroit, who was placed under the guardianship of Alfred P. Toulmin over a year ago, by the Probate Court, has filed a petition asking that the guardian be removed. He claims that undue influence was brought to bear upon his wife when she filed the petition asking that a guardian be appointed, and that such action was without proper justification. Mr. Richmond claims to have protested against the appointment of Toulmin, and sets forth that a bond in the sum of $5,000 only was filed, when his interest in the firm amounted to at least $60,000.

—The directors of the Detroit Base-Ball Club have hit upon a scheme by which they hope to avoid financial loss should any member of its team become disabled while traveling from one city to another. The accident insurance companies have heretofore strictly refused to assume any risk on professional ball-players, but exceptions have been made to members of the Detroits, and every member now has his life insured. The policy is made payable to the Treasurer of the Detroit Club. Should one of the players be injured while traveling, and compelled to abstain from playing, the club is to be paid an indemnity of $25 per week, and should he be killed the club will receive $5,000. The policy has no reference to injuries sustained in games.

—A remarkable funeral took place recently near Adrian. Last December Mr. and Mrs. S. D. Moore, a well-known couple of the neighborhood, celebrated their golden wedding. A few days ago Mrs. Moore died at the age of 71. Mr. Moore is an unbeliever, and refused to procure the services of a minister of the Gospel. At the funeral ceremonies at the house the venerable husband read an extract from the "Footprints of Life," by Philip Havy, M. D., which he followed with a sketch of the life of his departed companion, and then extended an invitation to any one to make remarks from a secular standpoint. The eldest daughter read a poem which she had prepared for the occasion, in which, however, she acknowledged a Heavenly Father, who "folds His loved ones in His arms, and quiets them to rest." At the grave the husband simply and tenderly bade his wife farewell, closing by saying: "We are all of the earth, and must return to the earth again." The daughter, standing by her father, recited another verse, in which she frankly acknowledged God and the spirit land.

THE COUNTY SEAT.

The board of supervisors have met and canvassed the vote on the removal of the county seat, accepting the certificate of Evangeline township at one hundred more votes than were reported on the night of election. The calling of the meeting at Boyne City instead of East Jordan, the canvass of the votes by a partisan committee with closed doors instead of by an open board, the refusal of the clerk to permit members of the board to examine the certificates without permission from the prosecuting attorney, the appearance of bluff throughout the whole proceeding, and many other things not necessary to mention here, serve to strengthen the suspicion of fraud. However, they have made their chain of plotting and planing so complete and carried it out so well, that if the courts do not order an investigation, and go beyond the canvass of the board to the poll lists and certificates of election from each township, then it will stand, and the records must be moved, and that place hereafter considered as the legal county seat.

If the courts permit this to stand, then our methods of election are a delusion and a snare. If a few men in a community can deceive their own townsmen, misrepresent their vote at the time of election, withhold the returns until such time as they choose to deliver them up, report them when they choose at a figure much higher than that first reported and conceded by their own townsmen who were witnesses of the count, bulldoze the canvass in such a manner that the canvassing board as a body do not know what the returns are from each and every township, and finally have it decided as legal, then we have no assurance whatever of a free vote and fair count.

We are not prepared to say that the parties in this transaction have committed perjury and perpetrated a great fraud upon the people of this county, but there is a great deal to substantiate such belief.

An attempt will be made to have the matter settled by the courts. If the investigation sustains the action of the board, let the defeated partisans submit as gracefully as possible; but if it is proven that a fraud has been committed, then let the perpetrators suffer exemplary damages to the extent of the law.

In the meantime let us be as quiet and conservative as possible.

NOTES AND NEWS.

The recent socialist disturbances in Chicago and other large cities are a legitimate result of the systems employed by certain large corporations during the past dozen years. In many cases when laboring men have organized to resist reductions in wages, they have been locked out, and their places filled by foreign imported labor. A large element of this foreign labor has been a class of socialists and communists exiled from their former homes because of their avowed opposition to the government and good society. Under our republican institutions they have found good ground in which to sow the infamous seed of socialism, and the most active among them have become leaders in a conspiracy, which, if carried to its legitimate end, would overthrow the government that gave them protection and prosperity in their exile. The corporations which nurtured them in their poverty are now their victims, and millions of dollars of valuable property are wasted by rioting and incendiarism. One-half of this destroyed property equitably distributed among our own workmen, in the beginning, would have avoided and prevented the socialist conspiracies which now disrupt the continent. The owners of large manufacturing institutions are not alone the victims of these disturbances. The evil results permeate every grade of society, and those who are at heart in sympathy with the leaders are sufferers with the rest,—not in the loss of property which they have accumulated, but in the loss of labor they might have had, at fair wages, if the industries which support them had not been paralyzed by the interruption and loss of confidence caused by the strikes. In this view of the situation, it behooves all sober-minded citizens to oppose vigously every system which encourages the removal to this country of foreign pauper or socialist labor for any purpose whatever.

That bomb which exploded on Desplaines street Tuesday night should be the last utterance of anarchy tolerated in Chicago. Until peace is restored, life is secure, and the law's supremacy is established all agitation for social or industrial reforms should cease. The interests of capital and labor unite in repudiating the rabid sentiment and hideous deeds of the socialists. There can be no compromise with incendiarism and crime. It is folly to palter with the situation.

* * * * * * * *

It is no time now for reproaches over unheeded warnings. The socialists have let loose their hatred against the peace of the community and the authority of the law in two days rioting and one night's hellish work. With their first attempt to put their theories into practice they have forfeited the right to utter their insane venom against society. If words lead to such deeds, then it behooves the law to stop the mouth that utters and incites incendarism, violence, and crime. The right of free speech must not be construed into the right to advise murder, arson, and anarchy. The nettle communism that has been permitted to flourish in Chicago must be plucked up by the roots now, and those who have watered and tended it must be forever crushed. Chicago invites the residence of the sober, the industrious, and the law abiding of every nation, but it offers no sanctuary for those who would dethrone American law for the rule of the rule of the torch, the bludgeon, and the bomb. The days of socialistic agitation in Chicago are numbered. —Chicago News.

The man who goes into the white house pledged to resist the spoils-hunters and do all in his power to destroy the spoils-system assumes a burden of trial and tribulation that the general public can hardly conceive. Lawrence Barrett, the actor, who recently visited the white house, is reported in the Augusta (Ga.) Chronicle as follows: "I spent a day with him a short time ago when I was in Washington, and really he presents a pathetic picture- a strong man fighting alone a great battle to which he is pledged: ridiculed by his enemies and doubted by his friends. He feels his position keenly. He said to me: 'I have made mistakes; I see them, many of them, and could kick myself when I think about them: but I am only human, and am as liable to err as other men. But I get no generous sympathy and honest patriotic counsel. All I hear is bickering and strife and fault-finding among scheming politicians, who have no aim but to get themselves and friends into office. But for the occasional wave of popular endorsement that breaks its way over the reef of office-seekers and politicians that hedges me about and comes to me like a season of refreshing and a cry of Godspeed fresh from the people, I should break down, heartsick and discouraged."

Gov. Swineford of Alaska is now in Washington to make answer to the charges which have been preferred against him by his enemies. The story of the fellow Carroll that Swineford embezzled over $1,000 which he had received as one of the commissioners representing Michigan at the New Orleans exposition, is a baseless canard. Carroll is a notorious deadbeat and fraud, and was removed from the commission at the instigation of Swineford. Jay Hubbell and other republicans at Washington say there is no doubt that Swineford will be promptly confirmed.—Lansing Journal.

The Milwaukee Knights of Labor have boycotted the goods of the international Cigars Makers' Union for the purpose of driving the members of the Union into the order. The Knights are free to direct their weapon against their friends, but is a noticeable fact that it is seldom used against the workingman's greatest enemy - the saloon. Abolish the saloon, and the labor question is settled forever. —Tradsman.

President Cleveland has sent to the senate six vetoes since he became president, and an attempt to pass one of them, a bill which provided for the disposition of the pauper dead to the medical college of the District of Columbia, failed, there being only six senators who voted for it. The president has already sent to congress during the five months of his term more vetoes than Presidents Arthur, Hayes, or Grant did during their entire terms.—Lansing Journal.

Eight hours as a day's work has been awarded by Chicago employers to 40,000 workmen. The shorter the day the greater the number of employees, and if without increased expense to employer, the 8-hour system can be adopted, it will prove of much advantage to the labor element.

The Marquette Mining Journal of May 8th contains a letter filling seven columns with small type descriptive of Alaska, its climate, customs, prospects, and possibilities, written by Gov. Swineford. Any one interested in that country will find many questions answered in the letter.

Jeff. Davis and the New South.

In commenting on the appearance of Jefferson Davis at Montgomery, the Vicksburg Commercial-Herald, the leading democratic organ in Mississippi, says:

"Mr. Jefferson Davis is not of the new South. He is of the old South. He said things at Montgomery that would have been better unsaid, and did not say things that he, of all men, ought to have said."

We believe this is the sentiment of the best men in the south. Mr. Davis has been a recluse during the last 20 years, and has devoted his time to brooding over the fancied wrongs of the south and his own broken political fortunes. He has taken no part and apparently but little interest in the development of the new south, and has hardly any appreciation of the surprising strides which she has taken in the direction of commercial progress and industrial activity. He has been utterly oblivions to the immense changes which have been wrought in the social, political and industrial life of the South, and is utterly unable to speak for the new generation of merchants, manufacturers, and planters of that regenerated country. He merely gives utterance to the heartburnings of an old and disappointed political Bourbon. —Lansing Journal.

It is reported as we go to press that an attempt was made just before noon to move the furniture of the county clerk's office, and that in a very short time the office and streets were full of interested spectators. No violence was offered, and no interference made beyond crowding the room so full of men that it was impossible to take any furniture out.

M. J. Stockman is out on the street again after his wrestle with the bath in the Santarium. His case will be watched with a good deal of interest by our people. Being the first to come under the care of the institution, on its success or failure will depend a large measure of the confidence of our people in the curative methods employed by Dr. Sweetland.

Rosenthal & Son's advertisement is somewhat diminished in size this week, but it is all there "just the same." The stock of goods which it advertises is constantly changing. Those who come first when he receives a new invoice get the best bargains, but when new goods are received as often as at this store, it is possible for a great number of people to secure good bargains. With the added attraction of a possible chance in his gift distribution, he is selling many large bills of goods.

Bridge Street House Opened.

On Tuesday this house was opened to the public, and a large number of our citizens extended their greeting to the new landlord R. A. Campbell, by going there to dinner. The dining room was tastefully decorated, and if the bill of fare is to be maintained throughout the season we can safely warrant complete satisfaction to the hungry. Our first impressions are that Mrs. Campbell is an excellent entertainer, and we have no reason to doubt that our first impression will be lasting. The sleeping rooms in the house are not all settled, but enough is done to meet the present needs of the public. With Mr. and Mrs. Campbell's acquaintance in the Traverse region, we have no doubt the house will receive its full share of the business of the traveling public during the coming season.

Metropolitan Comedy Company.

Bartholomew's opera hall was well filled last night to witness the opening of the engagement with the above company. The play for the evening, "Divorce," is a strong one, and the characters were generally well sustained. One feature however which should be eliminated is the slang (which approaches vulgarity) indulged in by some of the characters, and certainly not a necessity to a full understanding of the play. To-night they will put on the "Banker's Daughter."

The Supervisors and the County Seat.

The board of supervisors met at Boyne City last Thursday, pursuant to the call mentioned in this paper two weeks ago. Called to order by county clerk Thatcher.

Supervisor Ava Smith, of Eveline, asked the object of the meeting. The clerk replied that he did not remember the special object, but that it was called by request of one-third of the board. Supervisor Harris, of Norwood, asked to have the call read. After some search among his papers, the clerk said he did not have a copy with him.

Mr. Harris then protested in writing that this meeting was illegal, as there was no call presented to the board, no object stated, and no necessity for a meeting at this time.

This protest staggered the managers for a moment, but supervisor Norton of Evangeline, suggested that the protest be put on file, which was done, and business proceeded regardless of the protest.

A. K. Smith, of Melrose, was made chairman

Mr. Harris moved to adjourn to 1 o'clock, to allow the chairman time to appoint standing committees. This was lost by yeas and nays, 9 to 6.

Mr. Norton immediately moved to take a recess of 15 minutes for the same purpose, and this was carried, 9 to 6.

At the close of the recess the committees were read, but it was clear to many that the manager's hand had constructed them some hours in advance.

Mr. Norton moved that a special committee be appointed to canvass the vote on the question of the removal of the county seat. Carried by yeas and nays, 9 to 6. The chair appointed Messrs. Kilborn of Bear Lake, McKibbin of Hudson, and Williams of Resort. These three towns represent only 188 votes,—all but two being for removal. (If the canvass must be made by a committee instead of in open board, it certainly would have exhibited a spirit of fairness to have composed it of five members, giving two members to the west end, representing six townships, and three from the east representing nine townships.)

The supervisors from Charlevoix, Eveline, Marion, Norwood, South Arm, and Wilson protested against the canvass by a committee instead of open board. The protest was placed on file as before, and business proceeded.

Mr. Norton moved that a recess of 30 minutes be taken to allow the committee to make the canvas. Carried.

After the committee came in, and before they made their report, several motions to adjourn were lost, 9 to 6.

The committee then read the vote by townships as follows:

	For Removal.	Against Removal.
Bear Lake	59	.....
Boyne Valley	95	24
Chandler	33	.....
Charlevoix	135	187
Evangeline	589	2
Eveline	43	218
Hayes	106	45
Hudson	30	.....
Marion	24	75
Springvale	37	3
Wilson	86	88
Totals	1,404	1,365

Leaving out South Arm, Resort, Melrose, and Norwood, but giving their totals and majority the same as if the townships were read.

It has been asserted by some who saw the report that it was evidently in the handwriting of a man who had a seat on the floor of the hall and was not with the committee, and not a member of the board, and that it bore evidence of having been prepared in advance; and the fact of part of it being left out by the committeeman who read the report shows that he was not thoroughly familar with it.

Mr. Norton moved that the report be accepted and adopted.

Mr. Harris then asked that two supervisors be appointed from the west and to act with the present committee, and that a new canvass be made. This was lost by the usual vote 9 to 6.

A motion to adjourn was also lost.

Mr. Harris then presented a protest, signed by the six supervisors, against the count of the vote of Evangeline for the reason that more votes for the removal of the county seat are certified than were polled at the election, and that the certificate was not the certificate of election. They also protested against the count of the vote from Hayes, because the certificate presented was not the certificate as required by law, not having been made at any session or meeting of the board of election.

This was also placed on file, and Mr. Norton's motion to accept and adopt the report of the committee was carried.

A motion by Mr. Harris to adjourn to 3 o'clock was lost, and within three minutes Mr. Norton moved to adjourn to 3 o'clock, for the purpose of examining the proposed location for county offices which was carried.

On reassembling, the nine supervisors constituting a majority of the board, ordered the clerk and sheriff to remove the records and county property as soon as convenient; and in case they are not to be found that new records be provided at the expense of the county. At this point, supervisors Harris, Ward, Upright, Smith, Hipp, and Hudkins withdrew from further action with the board, and protested generally against all the proceedings.

These six towns represent a vote of 227 for removal, and 1,199 against removal.

PINE AND HARDWOOD FINISHING. GOOD WORK.

A Great Curiosity.

P. A. Corlen came from Sweden to this country last year and settled in Grand Rapids, Mich. In the old country he was an expert engraver, and being a fine workman and unemployed he set about making a pipe. For four months he worked with his jackknife on buckhorn and amber and made a pipe. It is composed of 5,000 pieces and the engraving is of a superior order. It is fully four feet in length, and around the bowl are pictures of Presidents of the United States. The man intended originally to make the pipe for the Crown Prince of Sweden, but his friends in Grand Rapids advised him to sell it by lottery. He has 1,400 chances at a quarter of a dollar, and of this number has disposed of 800 chances.—Rockford (Ill.) Gazette.

The Great German Doctor.

The remarkable phase in the practice of Dr. Peter W. Schmidt (frequently called Dr. Peter), is, he never asked one to describe their disease, his intuitive perceptions being so strong he can tell any one their trouble without asking a question. His success is phenomenal. His practice enormous. He is sought after by hundreds wherever he goes, because he cures when every physician and remedy has failed. The giving of his great medicine, Golden Seal Bitters, which has made his great success, to the world marks a new era in medicine. Blood, liver, kidney, and stomach disorders yield to this master of disease, and its wonderful cures are regarded as phenomenal, but the germ of faith ever says, "What has been may be again." We say to the sick and discouraged give Golden Seal Bitters a trial. It is all we ask. They will speak for themselves. Sold by Perry Weed and Dr. G. W. Crouter.

THE COQUETTE.

Ah, the soft, the perfumed laces,
Oh, the dear, distracting graces,
And her eyes
Like stars, that from their places
Look very grave and wise;
And her mouth, in mute surprise,
Like a poppy dream reposes
Till she speaks;
Then a smile breaks through the roses,
Through the darling, dimpled roses
Of her cheeks!
Ah! the dream she half discloses
When she sighs.

Roses cannot bloom forever—
They must fade.
Who hath found a light that never Casts a shade?

Lovers hath she—scores of lovers,
But to none her heart discovers
All her mind.
Cruel still, yet half relenting,
Scornful now, though half repenting,
Half inclined, but not consenting
To be kind.
Young and old men, saints and sinners,
Veterans scarred and new beginners,
Sue for love, but none are winners;
She is free—
Heart and hand—and life before her,
Free to lure each fond adorer—
Time and heavenly grace restore her—
Blind is she.

* * * * * * *

Thus in years gone by
I penned the picture of a fair coquette;
To-day I scan the lines—but with the sigh
Of heartful deep regret.

To lightly speak—at all—of womankind
Brings its reward of pain,
And from remorseful thoughts the haunted mind
Shall seek release in vain.

But said I not—the roses fall from blight
However fair they bloom,
And never yet was seen a glow of light
Without the shadow's gloom?

I saw her when at last
A lover sought her from the silent land,
And she—unlike her old self of the past—
Gave him her heart and hand.
And so it came to be—
The cheerful bloom was faded from her cheek
Beneath the touch of lips that did not speak,
But kissed her silently.
And yet—mayhap I dreamed—
But round her lips from whence there came no breath,
There played a smile in which her soul did seem Coquetting still with death.

None shall shame her—none shall blame her,
Since her lover came to claim her,
And she gave him heart and hand;
For the angel that did bear her
Where the gates of heaven stand,
Ever after said, no fairer
Soul had reached that shining land.
Yet, of those who thronged to meet her,
Stretching out their arms to greet her,
There be some who still relate
How they wish for nothing sweeter
Than the smile she gave St. Peter
As she entered through the gate.

A ROMANCE OF THE SEA.

During a visit to some friends in Charleston, while on a leave of absence from H. M. S. Diana, Lieutenant Howard Granville fell in love with a dark-eyed girl of eighteen named Helena Riol.

She was an orphan, living at the house of her uncle, Alfonso Riol, who was an American by birth and a Spaniard by descent.

For some years he had been a sailing-master aboard an armed United States schooner, where, he informed Granville, he had often been promised promotion, but was still neglected, which he ascribed to his descent. He instanced several persons, who had not been so long in the navy as he, and yet had obtained places above him.

"If I were like some men I would be revenged," he added, bitterly.

"A man should always do his duty, whether promoted or not," said the British officer.

A fortnight later the schooner sailed on a surveying expedition off the African coast. Helena Riol accompanied her uncle. Although she and Granville were lovers, there was a singular coldness in her manner when they parted.

The lieutenant often thought of it afterward, and imagined that the sailing-master had prejudiced her against him.

A month later Granville's ship was ordered to cruise for a slaver, which, it was reported, had lately been noticed off the coast of Africa.

In due time, passing the Cape Verdes, the English frigate stood on her way toward the Gold Coast, in the vicinity of which the outlaw craft had last been seen.

On the starboard side of the upper deck the captain was one day walking to and fro, and on the larboard side stood Lieutenant Granville, now and then glancing aloft.

"Where away?" shouted Granville.

"Right ahead, sir! About five miles off!"

The Captain seized his glass, and sprang upon the horse-block.

"She looks suspicious, sir," he said to the lieutenant, as he passed the glass to him.

Granville had an eye like a hawk's; he could see further than most men on the water.

"Ay, ay, sir, a suspicious craft," he remarked, after a brief inspection. "It seems to me she has a familiar look, although I cannot recall where I have seen her before."

"She is not very low in the water, sir," said the captain; "but I do not like her looks for all that."

Granville said he thought she had something the appearance of an armed craft.

"These, sir, are not the days of pirates," rejoined the captain, smiling. "Why do you think she is armed?"

"I may have been mistaken, sir, at so great a distance," answered the lieutenant, "but, when I looked through the glass, I fancied I saw a port closed."

"Try her with the colors, quartermaster."

"Ay, ay, sir."

And up went the union jack even as the old tar spoke.

The other vessel hoisted the same colors.

"Now, signals, quartermaster."

The signals were hoisted and responded to, until the one questioning the stranger's name shot up aloft.

Then there seemed to be some hesitation aboard the schooner—a long delay, that caused the quartermaster to move the signal flag up and down peremptorily.

All at once a white flag, with the letters "L-O-S-T" distinctly revealed upon it, with the aid of a glass, appeared at her gaff.

"Ah! by George!" cried the frigate's Captain. "Caught now, my fine fellow! And yet," he added, thoughtfully, "she may really have lost the signal."

Meanwhile the schooner, which now was not more than half a mile off, held on her way; but, instead of adding to her canvas, she began to take some of it in.

Nimble forms, in dark blue shirts and trousers, swarmed all over her graceful masts and yards, and sail after sail was rolled up until she showed nothing but a close-reefed main-topsail and a topmast staysail.

"One would think she expected a storm," said the captain of the frigate.

He glanced up at the sky, but he could see no indication of a tempest.

True, the wind had fallen away a little, and there was a thin, hazy strip of cloud on the otherwise clear surface of the heavens; but in these, in his opinion, were no signs of a gale.

He at once ordered a carronade forward to be fired as a signal for the schooner to heave to.

The quarter-gunners sprang to their places; there was a flash, and the gun roared, sending a shot whirring past the stranger's bow.

She promptly hove to; but when he was within a quarter of a mile of her the captain noticed that the wind had died away with suspicious suddenness.

The shrill piping of the boatswain's call soon was heard.

"Stand by to take in sail! D'ye hear, there? Stand by!" was the hoarse cry which followed.

A moment later the man-of-war's men covered yards and booms as they took in sail. The huge folds of canvas were rolled up with the regularity of clock-work, and in five minutes the stately vessel was reduced to her close-reefed main-topsail, foresail, and fore-topmast staysail.

Just as he got alongside of her, and a rope was caught and made fast to her bow, there was a roar and a shriek as of a thousand demons, and the schooner, for an instant thrown almost on her beam-ends, was hurled through the now whirling waters before the full fury of a white squall.

Granville sprang aboard. As he reached the deck, a tall fellow darted past him, and jerked from the pin, either purposely or accidentally, the rope that held the boat, thus leaving the latter, with all its occupants adrift.

"Rascal!" he cried. "Who——"

"My orders," interrupted a deep voice.

And, turning, the lieutenant beheld Alfonso Riol.

At the same moment, beneath him, he heard yells and the clanking of chains.

"This, then, is a slaver," cried Granville, as soon as he had recovered from his surprise at seeing Riol, "and you are her captain?"

"Ay, Granville. The story is told in a few words, if you have not already guessed it. I headed the crew of the naval schooner in mutiny. I killed the captain and his officers. I made alterations in the craft, changed her name, and then went into the slave trade with her. At last I have won my promotion with my own hand, for I now command this vessel. Better than all, I have had my revenge on the captain, who was a tyrant. Will you shake hands with me?"

"No. Your hand is stained with a crime which a British officer can not overlook."

"And, were it in your power, you would make a prisoner of the uncle of Helena Riol?"

"I would."

"And marry his niece afterward?"

"Was Helena with you when you mutined? Surely she is not aboard?"

"No; for she would not have approved of the mutiny. She wanted me to take my revenge by simply obtaining my discharge from the navy. I did not even hint to her of my design, but, long before its execution, I left her at Monrovia."

Drawing the young officer further aft, beyond hearing of the sailors, he continued, "Promise me that you will not betray the character of this vessel to your captain?"

"I will give no such promise."

"Then you and I shall both go down in the same coffin."

"What do you mean?"

"I can soon explain. My craft is not a swift sailor, and she could not get away from your frigate. When I sighted the ship I knew I could not escape in that manner. But I hoped that the naval appearance of my schooner, and the exchange of one or two signals, would allay your captain's suspicions, and that he would then keep away from me. When my vessel's name was questioned, I feared that all hope was gone. I hoisted my signal of 'Lost,' which I had ready for such an occasion, still thinking that that might possibly satisfy your commander. When I perceived that it did not, I resolved to scuttle my craft and go down with all on board—slaves and all—sooner than fall into the hands of your naval people. I saw you coming, however, I recognized you, and I resolved that you alone should get aboard here, for I wanted to make my proposition to you. Now, all I have to say to you is this: There, by the after sail, is a good life preserver, and I still give you a chance to save yourself by changing your mind, and also to make my niece your wife. Promise me that if I do not scuttle this craft, you will, when you return to yours, inform your captain that you found my vessel and papers perfectly right and lawful. Promise that, and I will send you aboard when this brief squall passes in one of my boats. You can then wed with my niece and welcome, as soon as you have the opportunity, for I know you both love each other; although I will own that I did not at one time like the thought of wedding her to a Britisher, and endeavored to prejudice her against you."

"I refuse to make the promise you ask, even for the sake of winning your niece, who is dearer to me than life! I am an Englishman, and as such I still repeat that I would do my duty by reporting the character of your craft and her captain."

"That is your determination?"

"It is. My duty before all other considerations."

The slaver ordered Granville to be locked up in a room in the cabin.

A few minutes later he heard the roaring, rushing sound of the water as it poured into the hold, and he knew that Riol had scuttled the schooner. The yells and shrieks of the poor chained slaves, dreadful to hear, were soon succeeded by their gurgling cries, as the water rolled over their heads.

In that storm the vessel sank fast. Granville could hear the men on deck making vain efforts to lower a boat in time to save themselves.

The prisoner was fortunate enough to find an ax. He beat down the door of his room as the schooner was making her last plunge, and flung himself toward the open companion-way. He clutched a spare spar, which, with other things, was being swept past him, and to this he clung.

The squall had nearly gone to leeward; the violence of the gale had abated; and, after tossing about for some time in the heaving seas, the young officer, with about half a dozen of the schooner's men who had also clung to floating objects, was picked up by the drifting cutter, which, with difficulty, had been kept from swamping during the squall.

On arriving aboard the frigate, Granville, gave a true account of what had happened.

Some time afterward he had the painful task of telling the story to Helena Riol.

Sad news it was to the beautiful girl; but, even while almost distracted by her uncle's crime and fate, she owned that she esteemed her lover for having so firmly adhered to his duty. The twain were married a few months later.

Table Manners.

Good table manners are founded on habits of punctuality, neatness, and order, united with that politeness which springs readily from a kind heart.

Do not be impatient to be served, or feel, while eating, that you must hurry and get through so that you can rush off to something else. This is bad enough when it is necessary; it is almost inexcusable when it is not.

Avoid all unusual noise when eating. Never fill the mouth very full nor talk with the mouth full.

Never sit a foot off from the table, nor jammed up close against it.

Never soil the tablecloth if it is possible to avoid it.

Don't be greedy, and don't try to eat all the good things you can, and don't carry off anything in your pocket to eat afterward.

Don't speak of it if you see any one else greedy. It is never polite to appear to notice faults of others in company.

Do not encourage a dog or cat to play with you at the table.

Do not cut your bread—break it.

Never express a choice for any particular part of a dish, unless requested to do so. When asked what part of a chicken you will have, save other people the trouble of choosing for you, and say what you will have, making some choice, though really not particular, as you might say.

Cut the meat with a knife, and do not make an effort to clean your plate or the bone you have been eating from too clean.

Do not attract attention to yourself by calling loudly for anything, or by any boisterous conduct. We have seen children who made their wants known by giving two or three loud knocks on the table with handles of their knives, calling at the same time, water! butter! potatoes! milk! or whatever else they happened to want at the time.

We have seen others sit at the table, and while carving was being done, rub their fingers on the edge of the plate in front of them and feel around the inside of the tumbler also, so that when a plate with food upon it was exchanged for theirs the person receiving it felt unpleasantly. Don't be like such children.

Never handle dishes unnecessarily at the table, or play with your spoon, knife, or fork. "A man is known by his company, and his company by his manners."

Swollen Tonsils.

Even if the phrase "swollen tonsils" be limited in meaning to express only a condition of some duration, it does not always mean the same thing. In health the tonsil is very small—So small that some who have studied throat diseases particularly think that it does not exist in the sense of being a visible prominence. Now, when the tonsil becomes enlarged and remains so it may be from removable causes and conditions, or it may not. The one group of cases may be considered as those in which much of the enlargement is due to an excess of blood in the tissues, and the other group contains cases in which actual overgrowth of the tonsil has occurred. In the former cases the enlargement may diminish until the tonsil, while still larger than proper, gives no very great trouble. In the latter the most experienced observers doubt if any treatment short of removal of the tonsil by some means is of much value. The popular idea about outgrowing the condition is based partly upon the false assumption that what is really a considerably enlarged tonsil is the natural state of things, and partly upon the inability of non-professional observers to distinguish between the temporary swelling of the tonsils, the chronically engorged tonsils, and the really overgrown tonsils. The opinion of the most "experienced mother" can be of no value here. She cannot, at the outside, have seen more than two or three cases of the last-mentioned variety.—Babyhood.

Invisible Clouds.

In the recent English tests of lighthouse illuminants was brought out the curious fact—of great practical as well as scientific interest—that remarkable changes in the transparency of the air occur without any visible haze or mist. Invisible clouds seemed to float by, obscuring the lights for a time; and it sometimes happened that while the distant French lights showed with unabated brilliancy, the experimental lights, only a mile and a quarter away, had lost one-fourth to one-third their power.

JAPAN, according to the new census, has a population of 38,500,000, or about the same as that of the United States in 1870. In area Japan is about five times the size of Pennsylvania.

HE who strives after a long and pleasant form of life must seek to attain continued equanimity.

WEATHER SIGNS.

Which May Be Observed by Early-Rising Students of Nature.

The man who is out of doors at sunrise can form a pretty accurate opinion of what the day will be. If just before sunrise the sky—especially in the west—is suffused with red, rain generally follows in the course of the day. In winter, often snow. If, however, it be frosty weather, the downfall is sometimes delayed. On the other hand, if the sky be a dull gray, and the sun rises clear, gradually dispersing the vapors, it will be fine. If he retires behind the clouds, and there are reddish streaks about; it will rain. Should the sun, later in the day, shine through a gray watery haze, it will probably be a rainy night. The sunset is very unreliable. Often a beautiful sunset will be followed by a bad day. After a rainy day, suddenly at sunset, in the far west, will appear a magnificent steak of crimson (not copper color)—this generally foretells a fine day. A tinted halo around the sun at setting occurs in long-continued rainy weather. A halo around the moon, especially if some distance from it, is a sure indication of downfall at hand. Rainbows are unreliable except they occur in the morning, when rain may be expected. Sundogs, and fragments of prismatic colors during the day, show continued unsettled weather. A dazzling metallic luster on foliage during a cloudless day in summer precedes a change.

Huge piled-up masses of white cloud in a blue sky, during winter, indicate snow or hail. If small, dark clouds float below the upper ones, moving faster than they, rain will follow, as it will if, in the morning, low-hanging, pale-brown, smoke-like clouds are floating about. Red-tinged clouds, high up, at evening, are followed by wind, occasionally by rain. Mists at evening over low-lying ground, or near a river, precede fine and warm days. If a mist in the morning clears off as the sun gets higher it will be fine; but if it settles down again after lifting a little, rain is at hand. No dew in the morning is mostly followed by rain; and a heavy dew in the evening by a fine day. Rain follows two or three consecutive hoar frosts. A shower of hail in the daytime is usually followed by frost at night. If, after rain, drops of water still hang on the branches and twigs, and to window frames, the rain will return; but if they fall, and the woodwork dries, fine weather is at hand. Stones turn damp before wet; at the same time it must be observed that the fact of their doing so does not invariably indicate rain, for they will do so occasionally before heat. Smoke descending heavily to the ground is a sign of very doubtful weather. Objects at great distances, which are generally indistinctly seen, or even not seen at all, sometimes loom out clear and distinct. When this happens bad weather or change of wind ensues. A well-known instance of this is the Isle of Wight, as seen from Southsea. If the opposite shore is plainly seen, there is rain about. If, at night, after being blown out and exposed to the outer air, the wick of a candle continues to smolder a long time, the next day will be fine. Green-colored sky betokens unsettled, bad weather, often long continued. If, on a fine day, the dust suddenly rise in a revolving, spiral column, rain is near.

The howling of the wind indicates, in most houses, but not invariably, that downfall is near. In some houses, owing to their construction, the wind always moans. Wherever the wind is at time of the vernal equinox (March 21 and thereabout) that will be the prevailing wind throughout the next three months. If the stars appear unusually numerous and the "milky way" very clearly defined, with the surrounding sky dark, or if there is a misty appearance over the stars, rain is coming; while if there be but few stars, and those very bright and sparkling, in a pale, steely sky, it will be fine. Swine, before rain, are unusually noisy and restless. Swallows in fine weather will fly high, and at the approach of rain close to the ground; but the latter does not apply if the day is cold, in which case they hawk very low. Common sparrows washing vigorously in a puddle on the road, or at the edge of running water, is a sure sign of rain. A baker who kept a parrot in the dry atmosphere of the bake offices noticed that a few hours before rain the bird took an imaginary bath, fluttering as if splashing water, and preening her feathers.—Cassell's Family Magazine.

The Waiter Gave Him Away.

A Washington correspondent writes: It is one of the fallacies of the capital that there are no intoxicating liquors sold at the House or Senate restaurant. The other day a dignified but thirsty member of Congress took a seat in the House saloon near a party of ladies, and calling a colored waiter whispered to him to fetch a sling of whisky. Straightening up, the darky bawled out at the top of his voice:

"Cold tea for one."

Now, the expression "Cold tea for one" is as well understood at the Capitol bar-rooms as "Hey, Rube!" is in a circus. Therefore, it is not surprising that the Congressman, who didn't want everybody in the District of Columbia to know that he was taking a nip of the forbidden juice, got most infernally mad at the servant who gave him away. Springing to his feet the member grabbed the waiter by the neck, and in his wrath exclaimed:

"You —— black ——! I'll break your —— black head if you ever howl for cold tea like that for me again!"

Nobody but Uncle John Robinson could give you any idea of the way in which that irate Congressman cursed that "nigger," as he called him.

THEY were at a concert in Chicago, and Beethoven's Fifth Symphony had just been played. "It is beautiful," said she, "but I adore the entire nine." "Yes," replied her George, "they are the best in the world." "So striking!" she added. "Can't be beat on striking," he echoed. "So catching!" she sighed. "Their catching was what did the business," said George, enthusiastically. "Their fielding is down to a fine point." "Why, what on earth are you talking about, George—the Beethoven symphonies?" "Not much! I'm talking of our champion nine, the best ball-tossers on the earth!"—Musical Herald.

THERE is a debating society at the Harvard Annex where grave questions of sociology and ethics are discussed by the young women. The historian heard two of them talking very earnestly the other day about their next meeting, and he asked one of them: "What subject do you debate next time?" If you had heard that dreadfully mixed-up reply of the young sociologist, while her cheeks grew as red as fire, you would have thought it delicious.—Boston Record.

THE representative of one of the great so-called religious papers of the country called at one of our large Connecticut factories and offered as a personal favor to write up the whole concern in big shape for $1,000. The offer was declined in the same noble spirit of self-sacrifice with which it was made. Then it was renewed at $500 (under request of secrecy if accepted). This was declined, too; and the religious representative knocked himself down step by step until, while his first demand was for $1,000, his last offer was to do it for nothing if they would take fifty copies of the paper containing the proposed article! And they wouldn't accept that; they didn't so much object to being written up, but they didn't know what to do, they said, with the fifty papers.—Hartford Courant.

ACCOUNTS show that the saltpeter beds of Nevada are far better situated for their development than the nitre region of South America, which is an arid desert. Water for all purposes is condensed from the ocean water and carried to the niter fields, fuel being procured from the mountains in South Chili. In Nevada, the saltpeter deposits are in the vicinity of a rich farming country, with an abundant supply of water and wood at hand.

Lemon Trees.

When raised from the seed the lemon tree matures very slowly, even in a favorable climate, being about eight or ten years usually in coming to the time of bearing. The time can be shortened but little by grafting. The usual method, in countries where the tree is indigenous, is to take up young wild trees and set them in prepared ground, and then bud them with an improved variety of the fruit. The lemon tree is often grown in conservatories, and, with any sort of careful treatment, will flourish. The tree should have a good open soil, and when not in a growing state during the winter needs but little water; new growth begins very early in the spring, when the plant should be watered freely, kept in a warm place, and when the young wood has hardened it should be set out of doors, and kept in a sunny place and sheltered from violent winds during the summer. The plant blossoms in the spring, and the fruit should be allowed to hang upon the tree during all of the following winter to attain its full maturity.—Inter Ocean.

To the traveling public, this admirable safeguard and specific is tendered in a convenient and agreeable shape. An ordinary ship's medicine chest contains no such comprehensive and reliable remedy, a fact well understood by mariners. The commercial traveler, tourist, emigrant, miner and Western pioneer all appreciate the value of the Bitters. It cures dyspepsia, costiveness, liver complaint, malarial disorders, inactivity of the kidneys, and is a fine nervo tonic.

The Game Not Worth the Cost.

While Judge Walton was at work in his chamber at Portland one day many years ago, drawing an opinion in a knotty case, a certain lawyer came in. This lawyer (he is now deceased) was a thin, tooth-pickish, dudish sort of man, whom the Judge did not like very well, and than whom he had rather seen Daniel Pratt himself walking into his chamber. "Well, Brother Lightweight, what can I do for you this morning?" asked Judge Walton, hoping to get rid of the fellow. "Nothing," he replied; "I only came in to make you a call." After a disagreeable silence the Judge looked up again, and asked: "Brother Lightweight, why don't you get married?" "Because I can't afford it; how much do you suppose it costs me to live now?" The Judge said he couldn't guess. "Well, it costs me $6,000 a year for just my own living." An expression of surprise came on the Judge's face. "Lightweight," said he, "I wouldn't pay it; it isn't worth it!"—Lewiston (Me.) Journal.

The manager of the Fort Wayne, Ind., Gazette, Mr. B. L. Holman, says he has often read of the wonderful cures effected by St. Jacobs Oil. After the Medical Commencement.

Two newly fledged physicians met and the following highly interesting conversation ensued:

"And how are you to-day, Doctor?"

"First rate; and how are you, Doctor?"

"I'm all right. Got a good case of meningitis at your hospital, Doctor?"

"Yes, come down and take a look at it. Anything special up your way, Doctor?"

"Man fell from scaffolding and broke his neck two days ago, still alive, may get over it. Pleased to have you call, Doctor."

"Thank you, I will, Doctor. Good-day, Doctor."

By means of the new and ingenious little instrument known as the hyalolyphotype, or hot pen, drawings can be made on glass or glassy substances with a waxy composition, which is solid and somewhat hard at ordinary temperatures. The pen is so contrived that it can be heated either by gas or by an electric current, and the waxy material flows easily from the heated pen, setting so quickly on the glass that cross-hatching can be done more rapidly than with ordinary pen and ink, without risk of blocking up the angles; corrections, too, can be made with the greatest ease by means of a penknife, which leaves the surface afterward intact. After the drawing has been made, the plate is etched by fluoric acid, and when complete it can be either electrotyped, stereotyped, used direct, or applied to any purpose for which engraved surfaces are required.

LADIES OF CHARLEVOIX:—Why is it there are not more christian women interested in the W. C. T. U. of this village? Or, if you are not christians but have any desire to be, it will help you to attend their meeting of prayer and song as much as outside influence can. And if you are a professing christian, I fail to see how you can find a reasonable excuse; for if you are not interested in temperance in all things, and you are surely working for christianity if you are a follower of Christ, and after woman, the first word in our name, (of course you are interested in yourself and our sex,) is christian, not temperance, first but thirdly. But allowing that you are one of those peculiar christians who want nothing to do with temperance, why do you not come and help in the name of woman and christianity? And if not in union with their temperance ideas, are you not aware that the Union comprises thirty-nine distinct departments, which I cannot give in detail here, but all are for the good and improvements of our sex, society, morals and health? Are you not interested in some one of these departments enough to give a little of your time and talents to forward the good work Are you not interested in your own children, in the hereditary, hygiene and scientific instructions, S. S. work, Sunday observance, or the new department of social purity, auxilliary to the White Cross society for men, and can it be that a woman exists who does not believe that man should be held to the same standard of purity as woman; is there a mother who does not desire her boys to be pure as her girls, and will that day ever come unless christian women demand it? Then there is the kindergarten, kitchen garden, drawing, room work, flower mission, suppression of impure literature, and department of higher education, with many more. Surely you are not willing to admit you are not interested, in something for the good of humanity in general or future welfare of your children? Do you daily pray "Lord lead us not into temptation," and do you believe He is more apt to lead you into temptation than you are others? I feel more like saying: Lord keep me from being a stumbling block and leading others into temptation But again, why are you not a worker in the W. C. T. U? Is it as Mrs. Lathrop asked not long ago: "Are you too awfully good, too nice, too intelligent or stylish, too exclusive to associate with women who are working for your good as well as their own?" If so, and you think this is all they lack, come and add your style etc., and leaven the lump. Or, is it because you have not time, if so, I can truly inform you that the workers have no more time than you, and every one of them do most of their own work, even to washing and sewing, and that their families are as well cared for as others who have no time for good works. Or, do you say the Union here does not do as much as it should, or work in all these departments as in other places? This is true, but it is because you christian women do not help as in other places. There is all the work waiting for you, for the old workers are doing all they can, and will still find plenty to do. Will you not think it over and see if you are not interested in some one thing to give your knowledge to make it successful and when one has a matter at heart they develop talent if they only go to work. There ought to be thirty-nine educated christian women in this city, capable and willing to become successful leaders of one department, thus making a Union second to none, and do not stand aside criticising these women for what they are not doing, when you are doing nothing, and neglecting the work at your own door, even a cup of water to the thirsty ones. Is this Christ-like? If you are a christian you ought to be a peacemaker, and if you get along without trouble in other societies, you can in this, but should trouble arise from some discordant element, you would better be on the right side in a trouble than an idler in Christ's vineyard. Neither giving or receiving. And as a member of the Union every women can help or be helped, and you cannot gain strength without God's help, and christian association, and it is for women, christianity, temperance, God, home and native land. Are you not for all or one of these, and if not, why not? "He that is not for me is against me."

Piles are frequently preceded by a sense of weight in the back, loins and lower part of the abdomen, causing the patient to suppose he has some affection of the kidneys or neighboring organs. MORTGAGE SALE.

Whereas, default has been made in the payment of the money secured by a mortgage, made and dated the 4th day of December, in the year A. D. one thousand eight hundred and eighty-four, by Nancy Hause to the Pine Lake Iron Company, a corporation created and existing under the laws of the state of Illinois, and doing business in the county of Charlevoix, in the state of Michigan, which mortgage was recorded in the office of the register of deeds of the said county of Charlevoix, in Book 9 of mortgages, at page 516, on the 1st day of January, in the year A. D. one thousand eight hundred and eighty-five, and the said mortgage is now owned by the said Pine Lake Iron Company. And whereas, the said Pine Lake Iron Company, as owner thereof, has exercised and doth now exercise the option to it given in and by said mortgage, and has declared and doth hereby declare the whole amount of principal secured by and mentioned in said mortgage, as well as the interest thereon to be now due and unpaid. And whereas, the amount claimed to be due on said mortgage at the date of this notice is the sum of one hundred and fifty-three dollars, and ninety cents, ($153.90) principal and interest, and a further sum of fifteen dollars ($15.00) provided by law as an attorney's fee in the foreclosure of said mortgage, which is the whole amount claimed to be due thereon, and no suit or proceeding at law or in chancery having been instituted to recover the debt now remaining secured by the said mortgage or any part thereof, whereby the power of sale contained therein has become operative. Now, therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale contained therein and in pursuance of the statute in such case provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises therein described, at public auction to the highest bidder at the front door of the town hall in the township of South Arm, in the county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan, which is the place of holding the circuit court for said county, on Wednesday, the 4th day of August, A. TEN YEARS AGO, on December 26th, 1875, The CHICAGO DAILY NEWS was founded. It was the pioneer of low-priced journalism in the west. From the first the controlling conviction of its managers has been that a "cheap paper" should be cheap only in price; that its news should be as fresh and complete, its editorial discussion as able, and its general tone and character as pure and healthful as its best and highest-priced contemporary. This has been its ideal. How well it has succeeded in the actual attainment of so high a standard is best evidenced in the fact that it now regularly prints and sells over 150,000 papers a day,—a larger circulation than that of all other Chicago dailies combined.

The CHICAGO DAILY NEWS is an INDEPENDENT newspaper. It is not partisan. Neither is it a neutral. It is a paper of positive opinion, expressed without fear or favor. It seeks the patronage of people who love country more than party.

The CHICAGO DAILY NEWS is the only 2 cent paper in the west that is a member of the Associated Press. It prints ALL THE NEWS.

Sold by all news dealers at two cents per copy. Mailed to any address, postage prepaid, for six dollars per year, or for a shorter term at rate of fifty cents per month. Address Victor F. Lawson, Publisher The DAILY NEWS, 123 Fifth Ave., CHICAGO, ILL.

Prince and Pearl.

In the same year, on the very same day,
Two little babies were born;
One was a doggy, and one was a girl;
One was named Prince, and one was named Pearl—
All on a New Year's morn.

And in one cradle the babies slept
All through the midwinter weather;
One on her pillow, dimpled and sweet,
And one curled up at the darling's feet—
Prince and Pearl together.

But Prince grew fast, as doggies will,
Till he soon was large and strong,
With a coal-black coat that was curly and fine,
With a big, big bark and a sorrowful whine;

Rocking her while she slept,
Gently, lightly, to and fro;
And the mother was free to come or go,
For Prince a true watch kept.

And he'd bear caresses from baby hands,
With never so much as a whine;
For he'd carry her safely all over the farm—
Darling, trusty old Prince!

And when Pearl went to the village school,
A mile or more away,
Prince carried her basket, and primer, too,
And would run to fetch her when school was through,
At the close of the long, long day.

O, they were ever the best of friends,
In sunny or stormy weather;
Up in the mountains or down by the sea,
In town or country, 'twould always be
Prince and Pearl together.

—Emma C. Dowd, in Youth's Companion.

A MAORI DANCE.

What an Astonished English Tourist Saw in the Land of the Golden Fleece.

Before the "haka" commenced the principal chief present made a rather lengthy speech to the intending performers. I understood from the interpreter present that the chief exhorted the corps de ballet, both male and female, to do their very best that evening; not to indulge in any unseemly or frivolous antics—what, in American parlance, are known as "monkey-shines," I presume—but to govern themselves in strict accordance with the immutable traditions of the "haka," as handed down to them from their remote ancestors. Then the chief, a tall, old man, with a very sonorous voice and very dignified mien, sat down on a low stool. Around him crouched, elasping their knees with their hands, a number of ancient Maori women, and then the "haka" commenced in earnest. It may not be altogether correct to term this extraordinary exhibition a dance, since it does not comprise any absolute saltatory movements of the extremities. It is rather a kind of rhythmical stampede, wild but measured—now ferocious, and now sensuous. Of the words of the grim crooning chant intoned by the performers while their excreitation was at its height, I was favored with a full and true copy in choice Maori, the chief courteously dictating the strophes and antistrophes in precise order as they occurred; but no useful purpose would be served by transcribing the Maori libretto here. To the vast majority of my readers I might as well quote the celebrated "Marowski langnage" invented by that eminent musician, deceased, Mr. Tom Cooke; nor is there any reason why I should drive to the verge of insanity a number of respectable compositors and conscientious proof-readers. What my ears seemed to hear was as follows:

Hoticot, hoticot, hoticot, te taira!
Taira! Taira! hoticot! taira!

And so on, ad libitum. And each repetition of "Taira"—or what seemed to be "Taira"—brought about an excess of frenzy in the dusky Mœnads, yelling, panting, groaning, foaming at the mouth. "Taira! Taira! Hoticot te taira!" The stout matron, who might have been the mother of six, was a sight to see, splendid but terrific. Now I fancied that I saw Clytæmnestra, her arms purple to the elbows with her husband's gore; now the British warrior queen, "bleeding from the Roman rods," and rousing the Icena to vengeance; now Helen Macgregor, railing at the Lowlanders. But anon there is a change. "Hoticot te taira." There on a troop of frantic Bacchantes that I seem to be gazing—Bacchantes, their dishelved locks hanging over their shoulders—Bacchantes exultant, drunken, fiercely wanton. And then I have a vision of the Almees and Ghawazie of Egypt; and then, upon my word, I am for a moment persuaded that the howling dervishes of Constantinople must have sisters, and that it is to Wairoa that they have all come. "Hoticot te taira!" the cry is shrilly echoed in the distance. Outside the "whare-pimi" they tell me the small Maori boys and girls are getting up a "haka" on their own account. Within, another transformation has taken place. With astonishing adroitness the front rank opens, the woman retreat to the background, and the men come to the front. They interest me now. They are picturesque, they are horrible. Never mind their squalid European garb; their flannel jerseys and "slop-pants;" or, failing those garments, their ludicrous "arrangement in shirt-tails." I tell you that it is upon their faces now that you should look. Gleaming black eyes, splendid teeth white and glistening, shock heads of black hair in which serpents seem to be uncoiling themselves; the sweat beading on their bronzed brows. I tell you that it is their bared arms that you should mark, the muscles gloriously developed, the hands now slowly raised above the head as in adoration now flung wide apart, now prone, now supine as in entreaty, in deprecation, in remonstrance; but now extended, and with bony forefingers pointing to you—yes, to yourself. The eyes flash defiance at you; the teeth are gnashed in rage; the lips breathe curses on you, the "pakeha." What right have you to an inch of their lands? Why did your missionaries come to worry the Maori? He had his priests, his idols, his ancestors, his superstitions, and his tapu. You have given him pigs and potatoes and steamers, it is true; but where are his war canoes; and in the matter of food, what more succulent could there be found than a carefully-baked enemy? They were the sons and grandsons of cannibals, who were yelling and panting, stamping and writhing, trying to lash themselves, so you thought, into a paroxysm of bloodthirsty madness. And then with what wondrous celerity the scene changed; the men retreated, the women were once more in the front rank, clamoring and shrieking. Now Miriam bidding the loud timbrel to sound, now Cassandra making the shrillest and most discomforting of utterances, now the doomed daughters of Danaus wailing over their interminable toil, now singing in softer strains, as might have the harlots of the sea when they sought to lure Ulysses to his destruction; and all this inexpliceable tumultuous tintamarre, these ululations in a tongue wholly incomprehensible to you, accompanied by indescribable contortions and posturings and gesticulations—now tigerish, now fond; now timid, now bold; but always graceful. But, oh, the pathos! Oh, the pity of it! Through the aisle between the "pakehas" and the dusky Mœnads walked a tall Maori with a short pipe, in his shirt-sleeves and "slop-pants" and a cabbage-tree hat on his head, and bearing a zinc slop-pail full of beer. The ranks were at once broken; the performers, male and female, sank on their haunches, while the Maori cup-bearer went slowly from group to group gravely administering refreshment from his bucket. The dancers were most moderate in their potations. Few took more than a third of the glassful of beer proffered them, while others were content with the merest sip. Nay, I was afterward told that the younger "haka" dancers, both male and female, often decline to drink any fermented liquor at all, and refresh themselves from a bucket of diluted raspberry vinegar especially provided for them. The really influential chiefs do strive their very utmost to inculcate the doctrine of temperance, using the perhaps selfish but certainly practical argument, "If we drink strong drink, in a short time it will be all 'pakeha,' and there will be no more Maoris at all." After this slight "recess for repose and refreshment," the "haka" began again, but that tall Maori in the cabbage-tree hat and with the slop-pail of beer had broken the spell, and it could not be rewoven. We sent our compliments to the chief, with an intimation that we were more than satisfied with the proceedings of the evening; so, after one more "stampede," and one more howling chorus of the "Hoticot te taira" type, the chief made another speech, and the assembly was dismissed. I had witnessed a remarkably strange and interesting spectacle, full of matter for meditation. I have put down neither more nor less than we three "pakehas" saw. The aspect which a "haka" can assume when the natives are plied with rum by thoughtless or by "larrikin" tourists I can imagine—and imagine with a shudder.—George Augustus Sala, in the London Telegraph.

Social Courage.

All are not ladies who wear a woman's dress. When the old beau in Sheridan's comedy said, as he bowed himself out of the parlor, "Ladies, I leave my character in your hands!" he knew his dear friends would tear it to tatters, before the sound of the closing hall door announced his departure.

Sir Charles Grandison and Sir Roger de Coverly may have been a little stiff, not to say pompous, and their old-school manners would be too deliberate for this fast age. But neither they, nor their wives and daughters, ever found fault with host or hostess, nor would they have listened for a moment to any one censuring the person whose hospitality they were accepting.

One of the descendants of these courtly old gentlemen still lives. She is a lady, and resides in Washington. The other day, as we learn from the New York Sun, she astounded a group of female visitors by her courageous rebuke of their bad breeding.

Among the callers on her reception day were several ladies who, on the previous evening, had attended a large party given by a millionaire and his wife. The party was criticised by these callers, and its hostess picked to pieces. In a lull of the conversation, they turned to the lady on whom they were calling, and appealed to her to confirm their criticisms, in such a direct way that she was forced to speak.

"Well, ladies," she answered, with that repose of manner and calmness of tone which are such excellent things in women, "I have never eaten of her bread and salt, and, of course, know nothing of her as a hostess. But if I accepted her hospitality, I should know nothing unkind of her either as a hostess or a woman."

The remains of Thomas J. Barney, a prominent citizen of St. Paul, were cremated at Pittsburgh. The body weighed 240 pounds, and was reduced to eight, the ashes being forwarded by express to relatives.

Joseph O'Donnell, the leading spirit in all the street-car strikes in New York this spring, has been forced to resign his membership in the executive committee of the Knights of Labor. His action in agreeing to end the Third Avenue strike was repudiated by Assembly No. 75.

The R. L. Spencer Novelty Company, of Wallingford, Conn., failed for about $150,000.

Mr. Andrew Carnegie proposes to increase his donation to the Pittsburgh free-library fund to $500,000, provided the city will raise an equal amount and maintain the institution by public taxation.

In a fit of jealousy Norman Lounsberry, aged seventy-eight, a farmer living near Oswego, N. Y., shot his wife, aged sixteen, and her relative, Horace Payson, thirty-five years old, and then killed himself. Mrs. Lounsberry and Payson died within an hour.

A storm in the mountains on the Pennsylvania Road blew several large trees upon the track near Conemaugh. The result was the wrecking of a long freight-train, by which a conductor, engineer, and fireman were killed. Twenty-five cars were broken into fragments.

Dr. Frederick A. Palmer, aged 73, a well-known homeopathic physician at Boston, left his residence with his 4-year-old grandson and took passage on the steamer bound for Portland, Me. During the night the Doctor jumped overboard with the child, but all efforts to recover the bodies proved fruitless.

Gov. Hill's approval of the Arcade Railroad bill forecasts a busy time on Broadway, says a New York dispatch. If the tremendous project is carried out thousands of workmen will be tearing up the street this summer, and within three to five years a four-track electric railway will be carrying rapid trains through the Arcade sub-way under an iron wagon-way. It will occupy all the room from curb-to-curb, and on the two inner tracks express trains will be run at thirty miles an hour, capable of carrying 1,000,000 passengers a day. The route is from the battery up Broadway to Harlem River, with a branch under Madison square running up Madison avenue to the Harlem. The completion of the road will occupy 5,000 men for five years.

WESTERN.

Southern Missouri and Kansas were last week visited by an immense rain-pour. Jordan Creek, which runs directly through Springfield, Mo., rose higher than for many years, overflowing the low land and driving thirty or forty families from their homes. Some of the women and children were carried to safe places on horseback and on men's shoulders to escape drowning, the waters in some places rising even into the second stories of the dwellings. The total damage in Springfield caused by the flood is estimated at $75,000, and in the surrounding country at $40,000. A distressing case of drowning is reported from near Fort Scott, Kan. A dam broke, and the immense body of water, uniting with the already swollen Buck Run, rushed down the valley. The house occupied by Sarah Brown, a widow, was struck by the torrent and swept about one hundred yards down the stream, where it lodged among the trees. Mrs. Brown and four of her children were in it at the time. The water rose rapidly around it to the depth of several feet. The mother held her little six-months-old infant in her arms above the water, leaving her older children to care for themselves. She suddenly noticed that her five-year-old boy was drowning, and in attempting to save him the infant slipped from her arms and was drowned before aid could reach it. The remainder of the family were rescued.

Under a decree of foreclosure, the Quincy, Missouri and Pacific Road was sold by a special master at St. Louis. Edwin Parsons, of New York, acting for the first-mortgage boudholders, paid $1,000,000 for the line.

William Fordyce, of Wabash, Ind., overtook Alf Watkins, a married man, as he was walking with Fordyce's daughter, and cut him dangerously about the head and face. Watkins is likely to die and Fordyce has been placed in jail.

During the recent riots in Chicago, Bohemian anarchists sacked and destroyed a drug-store at the corner of West Eighteenth street and Center avenue. It now develops that nearly a dozen nihilists who participated in the looting of the store have died from drinking poisonous concoctions under the belief that they were swallowing 'tangle-foot whisky. A half-dozen more are sick nigh unto death, and with small hopes of recovery. It also transpires that several of the participants in the riots were buried in the Bohemian Cemetery without permits, which leads to the conclusion that the policemen fired their pistols with better aim and more deadly effect than was at first supposed. The owner of the building occupied by the Nihilistic Arbeiter Zeitung filed a bill to set aside the lease granted to the backers of the paper on the ground that the contract has been broken by the storage of explosives in the office, and the lease was canceled. At the meeting of the Chicago Methodist ministers resolutions were passed denouncing the rioters. There is a decided improvement in the labor situation at Cincinnati, and no violence is now anticipated.

The superintendent of the Assay Office at Helena reports that Montana last year produced $25,000,000 in precious metals, the amount of gold being $5,000,000.

Francis T. Hord, Attorney General of Indiana, having developed an insane jealousy of his wife, has been sent to the asylum. He recently threatened to kill Dr. L. A. Comstock, who thereupon caused an inquiry into Mr. Hord's mental condition.

The deputies who did the shooting at East St. Louis, in April, have been removed from East St. Louis to the Belleville (Ill.) jail. The transfer was quietly effected.

SOUTHERN.

A TREE in the Macon (Ga.) suburbs, from which the recent flood swept two negroes, who were drowned, is said to be haunted. At night a white figure is seen seated among its branches, and moans, which grow louder as the night wears on, are frequently heard.

WASHINGTON.

Companies have been organized in Indiana, with ample capital, to develop gas-wells in Wells, Jay, and Delaware Counties.

George W. Julian, Surveyor General of New Mexico, has sent to the Commissioner of the General Land Office a complaint against the inaction of Congress on opinions as to three fraudulent grants which keep three hundred thousand acres from settlement.

The May crop report of the Department of Agriculture indicates an improvement during April of two points in wheat, with the general average of condition at 95. The season has been favorable, and the crop is more advanced than usual.

Representative Morrow the other day received a monster petition from the Knights of Labor of California. It is over two thousand feet long and contains the names of over fifty thousand persons. Every State, county, and municipal officer, and every Knight of Labor of California, has signed the petition. Every male adult in many of the counties of the State has put his name to it. It prays for action on the part of Congress, either by appropriate legislation or by a change in the present treaty with China, as may be necessary, to forever prohibit the further immigration of Chinese to the United States.

POLITICAL.

The Republican members of the Ohio Senate, by a viva voce vote, declared vacant the seats of the absent Cincinnati Democrats, and seated the four Republican claimants from Hamilton County.

In the Ohio Senate on Monday, the 10th inst., Mr. Van Cleaf (Democrat) moved for a correction of the journal with reference to the seating of the four Republicans from Hamilton County, but the motion was ruled out of order. He then desired to enter a protest, but the Chair refused to receive it. During a recess of the Senate the journal was stolen, resulting in some excitement. Clerk Vallandigham, however, prepared a new record of the day's proceedings, which was certified to by the Secretary of State. During the evening the stolen journal was returned to the State Department.

MISCELLANEOUS.

A fire broke out at Gainesville, Fla., destroying all the buildings and contents on the south side of the city square. The aggregate loss is about $70,000, with very little insurance.

The visible supply of wheat and corn is, respectively, 41,947,531 and 10,629,993 bushels, a decrease of 1,301,186 bushels of wheat and 1,175,529 bushels of corn.

Herr Most, the anarchist and agitator, was arrested in New York at the house of a Mrs. Fischer. He endeavored to elude the officers by crawling under the bed, but was soon hauled out and hustled to the station house. Charles J. Schoemaker, another of the socialistic riot victims, died at Chicago on Tuesday, making the ninth caused by the recent disturbances in that city. Charles J. Bruschke, of the firm of Bruschke & Ricke, furniture manufacturers, Chicago, shot and seriously wounded two strikers who were loitering about the factory and intimidating non-union workmen. There has been a marked improvement in the Pittsburg (Pa.) iron trade since last week. Many of the puddling furnaces are on double time, as well as the finishing departments. The employing metal-workers of Chicago are determined in their resolution not to yield to the eight-hour system. The employees manifest equal firmness, and there is the prospect of a protracted lock out. The 4,000 striking and idle sewing women in Chicago have organized and united with the Trades Assembly. The switchmen in the Vandalia Valley Railroad yards at Indianapolis struck because one of their number, a Knight of Labor, was discharged and a non-knight given employment in his place. The strikers visited other yards and induced their fellow-switchmen to join in the strike. A serious freight blockade was the result. The great strike at the Brooklyn (N. Y.) sugar refineries has collapsed, the men going back without having received a single concession. The union men of all trades locked out on strikes at New York number 5,595. The Third avenue Carmen's strike is about over, the men having failed to gain a single point. Four of the strikers were sent to the penitentiary for shouting "scab" and "rats" at the non-union drivers and making threats.

The steamer Acadia, sailing from Baltimore in the tropical fruit trade, has not been heard from for a month, when she left a port in Jamaica with a load of bananas. She carried a crew of seventeen persons.

The Cullom interstate commerce bill, as it passed the United States Senate, provides as follows:

A commission of five persons shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to carry out the purpose of the bill. Not more than three of the five commissioners shall be appointed from the same political party, and all persons holding stocks or bonds of any common carrier, or holding official relations to such corporations, are ineligible. The commissioners must not engage in any other business. The commission is given authority to inquire into the business and management of all common carriers subject to the provisions of the bill, and to obtain full and complete information as to such business; may require the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of all books, papers, agreements, tariffs, and documents relating to matter under investigation, and may to that end invoke the aid of the United States Courts. All complaints shall be made in writing to the commission. The commission shall send the complaint to the common carrier, and require either satisfaction of the complaint or an answer in writing within a reasonable time specified. If reparation is not made within the time stated the commission shall investigate the complaint. The commission shall also investigate all complaints forwarded to it by State commissions, and may institute inquiries on its own motion. Complaints shall not be dismissed because of the absence of direct damage to the complainant. The reports of the commission shall be in writing, and its decision shall be made prima-facia evidence in all judicial proceedings.

Before the Curtin Labor Investigating Committee at St. Louis several employes of the Missouri Pacific Railroad shops testified that not only had the March (1885) agreement been broken but its provisions had in several instances not even been put into effect. Father O'Leary, editor of the Catholic World, testified that he knew many strikers who were good honest men and church members. He saw that the company was doing its utmost to crush the Knights of Labor, using unscrupulous means to accomplish its ends. The cause of the strike he had studied, and thought he knew. The Knights were a society formed to teach its members justice and equity, but looking at the entire railway system, he thought it was carried on by trickery and unfairness, from Mr. Gould down to the lowest subordinate. He said that the employes of the road who were not Knights of Labor were afraid to speak to members of that organization for fear of being discharged.——Labor notes: Several of the new freight-handlers on the Pittsburgh, Fort Wayne and Chicago Road at Chicago became ill from the change of water and diet. They were doctored up with whisky and ginger, and nearly all the rest of the gang, on discovering what sort of medicine was being given out, became violently afflicted with cramps. One Seidell, a boycotter, was fined $25 and costs at Milwaukee by Justice Mallory, who denounced the boycotting business as an outrage. About eleven hundred carpenters at Allegheny City have struck for nine hours' work at full pay. The Chicago steam-fitters and their helpers have struck for more pay and less hours. The switchmen's strike at Indianapolis has proved a failure. The Pittsburgh ice companies have granted the demands of their striking employes for an advance in wages of $2 per week, and all have returned to work. There were 17,500 lumber shovers on a strike in Chicago last Thursday. The strikers at the Standard Coke Works at Mount Pleasant, Pa., have returned to work, a compromise having been effected.

FOREIGN.

Greece has announced its intention to defend its territory against all advances by foreign soldiers. The Greek fleet has left Salamis, and the foreign squadron has returned to Suda Bay. All the foreign representatives except the Russian Minister have departed from Athens, and a gunboat has gone to Constantinople to take on board the Greek Minister. Two battalions of the garrison at Athens have already started for the frontier, and the reserves at Vola and Velestino have been pushed to the front. There are indications that Thessaly will be the scene of the first hostile operations.

The constables in Ulster, Ireland, are collecting the names and addresses of all persons in that province who during the last three years have purchased arms and ammunition. The work is under direction of the Government at London, which intends to disarm the Loyalists in Ireland. Mr. Morley's motion to continue the coercion act of 1881 was made with a view to its application in the interests of public order against the threatening unnority.

The Greeks are holding mass-meetings throughout the kingdom to protest against the blockade of the powers. Premier Delyannis refuses to convoke the Chamber of Deputies to take action on the crisis. Turkish troops have been sent out to repel Greek forces advancing toward the frontier.

Gen. Lord Wolseley has denied the statement attributed to him that if home rule were granted to Ireland he would resign his command for the purpose of leading an army of Ulster men to resist the new Irish Government, and that 1,000 other British officers would follow his example.

Gen. Wolseley considers Gladstone a traitor and refuses to have anything to do with him even to sit at the same table, and some of the papers claim that the military support the General's views on Irish affairs.

The socialistic member of the German Reichstag, William Liebknecht, will make a trip to the United States in September to agitate his views and raise collections.

In the event of war between Turkey and Greece it is probable that Russia will intervene as the ally of Greece. Such intervention would probably be the commencement of serious complications throughout Europe. Germany, Austria, England, Prussia, and Italy have notified Greece that a blockade of her ports has been ordered.

The Bavarian Ministry has resigned in a body on account of crazy King Ludwig's obstinacy.

A private letter received in Washington to William H. Bissell, the President's former law partner, says that the President will marry Miss Folsom, at Buffalo, on June 12; or, if the illness of Mrs. Folsom, who is suffering with the Roman fever, at Paris, should compel a postponement, within a week after the return of Mrs. and Miss Folsom from Europe.

N. D. Wallace, President of the New Orleans Produce Exchange, has been nominated by the Democrats of the Second Louisiana District for Congress in place of J. C. Beard, declined.

At Baltimore the grain commission house of Tyson Bros. made an assignment. Their liabilities are estimated at about $200,000. The firm had extensive connections in Europe and did a heavy shipping business.

Western railway managers seem to agree that the success of the interstate commerce bill in its present shape would be a calamity, for the reason that the interests of the West have been sacrificed to those of the East.

The Pennsylvania Railroad Company will issue $4,000,000 additional stock to provide for additional expenditures. This will make the total capital stock about $98,000,000.

THE general pension bill was discussed by the Senate on the 13th inst. The Senate concurred in the House amendments to the bill providing for the sale of the old bridewell lot in Chicago. The following nominations were confirmed: Collectors Seeberger of Chicago, Seipp of Milwaukee, Cudwallader of Philadelphia; Marshal W. M. Campbell of Minnesota; H. F. Merritt, Consul at Aix-la-Chapelle; L. T. Boyd, Receiver of Public Moneys at Bayfield, Wis.; and J. B. Webb, Register of the Land Office at LaCrosse, Wis. The House of Representatives passed the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, with an item of $150,000 for contingent expenses at consulates. The House discussed without action the bill to enlarge the powers and duties of the Department of Agriculture. Messrs. McCreary (Ky.) and Weaver (Iowa) supported the measure. Mr. Reagan (Texas) opposed it on constitutional grounds, and said he would offer as a substitute his bill to create a Department of Industries.

CONGRESSIONAL.

The Work of the Senate and House of Representatives.

CONGRESS did nothing of importance on the 7th inst. The Senate was not in session, and the House devoted the day to the private calendar. Fifty-five bills granting pensions were passed.

THE House of Representatives passed a bill on the 6th inst., authorizing the Kansas City and Gulf Road to lay its tracks through the Indian Territory. The military academy bill was passed. It appropriates $227,805 for the maintenance of the schools at Annapolis and West Point. The Congressional Printer notified the House that his presses would have to stop unless an extra appropriation of $200,000 was made before the 25th of the month. Members of the House were taken by surprise on receiving vetoes of two private pension bills, in which the President had taken time to discover grave faults. The Senate was not in session.

A RESOLUTION offered by Senator Logan, directing the Committee on Pensions to report back to the Senate the Ingalls bill, providing for the repeal of the limitation on the arrears of pensions, was agreed to by the Senate. A bill to limit the commercial privileges of vessels belonging to foreign countries which restrict the privileges of American ships was introduced. The same measure was offered in the House. Mr. Beach (N. Y.) introduced in the House a resolution amending the rules so as to subject to a fine of $100 every member who is absent during a call of the House. The House passed a bill to punish the advertisement of lottery tickets in the District of Columbia. With the intention of putting to service the sum of $56,507,005 lying in the Treasury at the close of April, Mr. Breckinridge introduced a joint resolution directing the calling in of $51,000,000 in 3 per cent bonds by the end of August. Mr. Blend introduced a bill providing that any holder of standard gold or silver coin may deposit the same with the treasurer or any Government depositry in sums of not less than $10, and receive therefor notes to be called "coin notes" of the United States.

THE Senate, in discussing the interstate commerce bill, on the 11th inst., tabled an amendment to fine and imprison men who conspire to interfere with the running of trains. The President nominated Clarence E. Greathouse, of California, to be Consul General at Kanagawa. The House of Representatives passed a bill for the appointment of three commissioners, to settle Spanish and Mexican land claims in the State of Colorado and the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona. They are to receive salaries of $5,000 each, and to serve for four years. While the army appropriation bill was under consideration, Mr. Wheeler, of Alabama, made charges against Edwin M. Stanton, Mr. Lincoln's Secretary of War, which precipitated a violent partisan debate, Messrs. Hepburn, of Iowa, and Hiscock, of New York, coming to the defense of the dead War Secretary.

SENATOR MITCHELL, of Oregon, submitted in the Senate, on the 12th inst., a concurrent resolution expressing it to be the sense of Congress that negotiations should be entered into between the United States and Chinese Governments with a view to securing such modifications of the present treaty with China as may result in stopping the coming of Chinese to this country, except in the case of diplomats and their servants, and except also in the case of persons at sea to seek a place of shelter. The Senate, by a vote of 47 to 4, passed the interstate commerce bill, which provides for a commission of five persons, with a principal office at Washington, to inquire into the business and management of all common carriers. The House of Representatives passed the army appropriation bill, after voting down an amendment to increase by $100,000 the item for the Springfield armory. A bill extending the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims over claims for the use of patents and patented inventions against the United States was reported to the House. The House considered the diplomatic appropriation bill without disposing of it.

James II. of England.

James II. of England was the second son of Charles I. and Queen Henrietta Maria. He was created Duke of York in infancy. He accompanied his father during the civil war, and was taken prisoner, but escaped, disguised as a girl, in April, 1648, and went over to Holland. He served with distinction in both the French and Spanish armies, and after the restoration returned to England and was made Lord High Admiral of the English navy. In the ensuing war with the Dutch he commanded the English fleet ably. In 1660 the Duke had married Anne, daughter of Edward Hyde, the Earl of Clarendon. In 1671 this lady died, leaving two daughters, both of whom subsequently sat upon the throne of England. Before her death she disavowed Protestantism, through the influence of her husband, who several years before had become a Catholic. In 1673 the Duke was compelled by the conditions of the "test act" to resign the office of Admiral. This same year he married Mary of Modena, a Catholic princess. So strong was the feeling in Parliament and through the kingdom against him for his change of religion, that he was obliged to go to the continent to reside for a time, and a bill excluding him from succession to the English crown passed the House of Commons, but failed to pass the House of Lords. He returned while this bill was pending and was made Lord High Commissioner of Scotland, but was so unpopular there that he did not remain long. However, in 1685, after his brother's death, he succeeded to the throne without opposition. His reign was brief, however, being filled with contentions with Parliament and the Established Church. He seemed utterly wanting in the tact of his brother, but, like his unfortunate father, rashly contended for the right of personal government which he believed the "divine right" of a king. In the first year of his reign occurred Monmouth's rebellion. This was not generally upheld by the people, and was soon overthrown, all those implicated in it being punished with great severity. The subsequent acts of the King, his claim to the power of dispensing with laws at his will, and dismissing the Parliament whenever it would not carry out his wishes, convinced the people that his permanent rule could not be tolerated, and in 1688 William of Orange, James' son-in-law, was called over "to protect the liberties and religion of the English people." William came, and James was forced to abdicate the throne. James made an effort to regain his crown by undertaking an expedition to Ireland in 1689. The troops and money for this expedition were furnished by King Louis XIV. of France. The ex-King was received kindly in Ireland, but at the battle of the Boyne his army was totally routed. The remaining eleven years of his life were spent at St. Germain, in France, in vain intrigues for recovering possession of his lost kingdom.—Inter Ocean.

POWDERLY'S WISE WORDS.

They Are Found in His Latest Circular to the Knights of Labor.

He Thinks the Order Has Lost Ground in Public Estimation—The Reasons Therefor.

The following secret circular has been received by the Knights of Labor of Chicago, and will be read in the various assemblies during the coming week:

NOBLE ORDER OF THE KNIGHTS OF LABOR OF AMERICA, PHILADELPHIA, Pa., May 3.—To the Order Everywhere, Greeting: The response to the secret circular issued March 13 has been so generous and the indorsement of the sentiments contained in it has been so unanimous that I feel encouraged and strengthened in the work. Nearly 4,000 assemblies have pledged themselves to act on the advice contained in the circular of April 13. I feel that it only requires the coming to the front of the real men of our order to set us right before the world. We have been losing ground, so far as public opinion is concerned, for some time. One of the causes is that we have allowed things to be done under the name of the Knights of Labor for which the organization was in no way responsible. I ask of our members to keep a jealous eye upon the doings of the labor men who never labor, and when they charge anything to our order in your locality set the seal of your condemnation upon it at once by denying it.

If a paper criticises the Knights of Labor or its officers do not boycott it, and if you have any such boycott on remove them. A journal not long since made some uncomplimentary allusions to the General Master Workman of the Knights of Labor, and at the next meeting of the nearest assembly a motion was cast to boycott the paper; not that alone, but every person who advertised in the columns of the paper. I wrote to the assembly asking that they remove the boycott and it was done. We must bear in mind that our General Master Workman is only a man, and is not above criticism. We demand for ourselves the "right of free speech." We cannot consistently deny it to others. We must tolerate fair, open criticism. If a reply is necessary make it in a gentlemanly, dignified manner. If we are criticised or abused by a blackguard sheet treat it as you would the blackguard himself—in silence.

That our aims and objects are good is no reason why our members should be regarded as beings of superior build or material. We are no more the salt of the earth than the millions of unknown toilers who do the work of the world. In our dealings with laborers and capitalists we must deal justly and fairly by them. If we would have equity done to us we in turn must do equity to others. This is the aim of the Knights of Labor, and must not be lost sight of in the future.

Let me direct your attention to a few little abuses: I find that whenever a strike occurs appeals for aid are scattered broadcast among the assemblies. Do not pay one cent for such purposes in the future unless the appeal comes from your own District Assembly or the General Assembly. If boycott notices are sent to you, burn them. I have in my possession over 400 boycott notices which were sent to assemblies with a request that they be acted on. Let me mention some of them: A member is editing a paper. He fears a rival, and proceeds to get into an altercation with him, boycotts him, and then asks of the order to carry it out. A certain paper is influential in one or the other of the political parties. Members of the opposing party conceive the idea of getting rid of the paper, and they invoke the aid of the Knights of Labor, first taking the precaution to have the paper in question say something uncomplimentary of the Knights of Labor. In fact, our order has been used as a tail for a hundred different kites, and in future it must soar aloft, free from all of them. I hate the word boycott. I was boycotted years ago, and I could not get work at my trade for months. It is a bad practice; it has been handed to us by the capitalists. I have no use for it only when everything else fails. Appeals for aid, circulars, petitions, advertisements of every kind are scattered everywhere through the order. I copy a letter which comes to me on the subject: "A large part of our time has been spent in reading boycott notices and appeals for aid, keeping us until 12 o'clock. We were led to believe the Knights of Labor to be an educational institution, but this kind of education is not productive of good. We have no time for instruction. What do you advise us to do?" I advised them to either burn or table these matters, and now ask of the Secretary of each assembly to do the same. If your Journal were not boycotted by our members it could be made the medium of communication between the general officers and the order, but the Journal is not read in one-quarter of the assemblies. Some assemblies send out documents addressed to "Secretary of the Assembly No. ——." In many places the secretaries have been discharged because of this practice. No member has the right to address another in that way, and if it is ever practiced again the offender will be punished.

In future the General Executive Board must not be interfered with in the performance of its duty. If you have confidence in them, sustain them and obey them; if not, ask for their resignations.

We have had some trouble from drinking members and from men who talk about buying guns and dynamite. If the men who possess money enough to buy guns and dynamite would invest it in the purchase of some well-selected work on labor they would put the money to good use. They will never need the gun or dynamite in this country. It is my opinion that the man who does not study the politics of the nation and the wants of our people would make but little use of a rifle. The man who cannot vote intelligently and who will not watch the man he votes for after he is elected cannot be depended upon to use either gun or dynamite. If the head, the brain of man, cannot work out the problem now confronting us, his hand alone will never solve it. If I kill my enemy I silence him, it is true, but I do not convince him. I would make a convert rather than a corpse of my enemy.

Men who own capital are not our enemies. If that theory held good the workman of to-day would be the enemy of his fellow-toiler on the morrow, for after all it is how to acquire capital and how to use it properly that we are endeavoring to learn. No! The man of capital is not necessarily the enemy of the laborer; on the contrary they must be brought closer together. I am well aware that some extremists will say I am advocating a weak plan, and will say that bloodshed and destruction of property alone will solve the problem. If a man speaks such sentiments in an assembly read for him the charge which the Master Workman repeats to the newly initiated who joins our "army of peace." If he repeats his nonsense put him out.

"In the hands of men entirely great the pen is mightier than the sword." To that I add: "In the hands of men entirely month the gun is harmless as his word." To our drinking member I extend the hand of kindness. I hate the uses to which rum has been put, but it is my duty to reach down and lift up the man who has fallen a victim to the use of liquor. If there is such a man within sound of the Secretary's voice when this is read, I ask him to stand erect on the floor of this assembly, raise his hand to heaven, and repent with me these words:

"I am a Knight of Labor. I believe that every man should be free from the curse of slavery, whether the slavery appears in the shape of a monopoly, usury, or intemperance. The tiniest link in the chain of oppression is the one I forge when I drown manhood and reason by drink. No man can rob me of the brain my God has given me unless I am a party to the theft. If I drink to drown grief I bring grief to wife, child, and sorrowing friends. I add not one iota to the sum of human happiness when I invite oblivion over the rim of a glass. If one moment's forgetfulness or inattention to duty while drunk brings defeat to the least of labor's plans a lifetime of attention to duty alone can repair the loss. I promise never again to put myself in such a position."

If every member of the Knights of Labor would only pass a resolution to boycott strong drink so far as he is concerned for five years, and would pledge his word to study the labor question from its different standpoints, we would then have an invincible host arrayed on the side of justice. We have, through some unfortunate misunderstanding, incurred the enmity of several trades-unions. While I can find no excuse for the unmanly attack made upon us by some of these people at a time when we stood face to face with a most perplexing question, neither can I see any good reason why there should be any cause for a quarrel.

HOWLING HURRICANES.

Several Towns in Illinois and Indiana Partially Wrecked by Cyclones—Loss of Life and Property.

A terrible hurricane accompanied by lightning and sheets of rain struck the town of Odell, Ill., eighty-one miles south of Chicago, on the afternoon of Wednesday, the 12th inst., causing loss of life and great destruction of property. The northbound Chicago and Alton train encountered the storm some miles southwest of Odell, but did not experience its full force until that place was reached. As the train pulled into the station a shower of boards struck the engine and tender, a large shed on the right of the track having been demolished and its wreck sent whirling over the prairie. On the left of the station a livery stable with an adjoining shed full of horses, carriages, and farmers' teams was totally wrecked. The large brick store of S. S. Cole was laid in ruins and four children buried beneath it—the daughters of John Miller. As the store went down, broken bricks, fragments of mortar, and pieces of timbers were whirled through the air and dashed against the sides of the cars, breaking the windows and creating a wild degree of terror among the passengers.

As soon as the tempest lulled sufficiently many of the passengers jumped from the train and made a hasty exploration of the ruins. Efforts were made to clear the debris from the Cole building, and the children were rescued. Three were seriously hurt, but will survive, and the others miraculously escaped injury. The searchers then proceeded with their work, assisted by the calmer of the citizens, but for the most part the residents seemed crazed by the calamity and stood about the streets gazing at the wreck of their property and wailing in a distressing manner. Altogether about seven persons sustained serious injuries, of whom those likely to die are: Lottie Zwille, a ten-year-old girl, who was carried over 200 feet in the air and fell on the railroad track, smashing her skull. George and Charles Hoke, liverymen. S. S. Cole, hardware merchant.

The view presented to the eyes of the passengers as they looked about the town was startling. Every portion of the village showed traces of the wide-spread wreck wrought by the storm. It demolished one brick block, wrecked three warehouses, unroofed the hotel, the Masonic Hall, and four store buildings, and tore to pieces the upper story of the Angell block, in which the Odell Bank and the Odd-Fellows' Hall were located. Hardly a storeroom in town escaped injury, and many dwelling-houses were demolished. The loss will exceed $50,000. Houses, barns and sheds were twisted from their foundations and completely destroyed. Trees a foot in diameter were twisted entirely to pieces. The storm did not last more than five minutes. Ten minutes before it appeared the air seemed to get green. Two clouds appeared to advance, one from the southeast, the other from the southwest, and met over the town, forming a monstrous whirlwind, which swept everything in its track.

P. W. Kenyon's lumber yard, a few yards away from the station, was taken up bodily by the wind and scattered for rods around. But the flying boards broke the force of the wind to some extent and protected the train from injury.

At Dwight floods of rain had fallen, preceded by hailstones of remarkable size, some weighing from five to six ounces. The storm moved in an easterly direction, passing into Indiana.

California's New Senator.

Mr. George Hearst, appointed by Gov. Stoneman, of California, to succeed the late Senator Miller, has had an eventful history. He went to California across the plains in 1850, and commenced as a common laborer in the mines. Finally he made some money and formed a partnership with Haggin & Tevis, and the firm has amassed a large fortune in jumping and buying mining claims. They now own one of the largest and most profitable mines in Butte City, Montana, and also mines in Arizona, Colorado, Oregon, Mexico, Idaho, and California. Mr. Hearst is considered the most expert prospector on the Pacific coast, and his judgment in regard to a mine has never yet been at fault. He is a tall, well-formed man about 55 years old. He was a candidate for Governor of California in 1882, but Gen. Stoneman secured the nomination and was elected. At the time of Senator Stanford's election in 1885 Mr. Hearst received the complimentary votes of the Democrats. He is a very wealthy man, and among his real estate owns 40,000 acres of the finest lands in the State, situated in San Luis Obispo. He is the sole owner of the San Francisco Examiner. Senator Hearst made his maiden speech in the Senate a few days ago, when he asked that a petition introduced by him might "be placed on record." This sally was greeted with subdued laughter, for the Senator merely wanted the petition printed in the Record. This incident recalled to old stagers the first speech made in the Senate by Mr. Tabor, who was also a Western member. The yeas and nays were being called when Mr. Tabor said: "Mr. President, I am paired off with the Senator from Hampton, Mr. South Carolina." He was only in the Senate for a month, and that was the only speech Mr. Tabor made until he presented the credentials of his successor.

DEATH'S DREAD SWOOP.

A Hurricane, with Rain and Hail, Results in Devastation at Kansas City.

Several Structures Wrecked, the Total Loss of Life Reaching Twenty—Fearful Scenes.

A cyclone struck Kansas City shortly before noon on Tuesday, the 11th inst., carrying away the upper floors of the courthouse, the Lathrop School, an overall factory on Second street, and a span at the north end of the Missouri River Bridge. Among the score or more persons who lost their lives were Deputy Sheriff Dougherty, Frank Smith, and twelve children of the Lathrop School. None of the prisoners in the jail were injured. The pecuniary losses are estimated at $200,000, a portion of which is covered by storm insurance. From the dispatches to the daily press we glean the following particulars of the disaster:

About 10:30 ominous storm clouds began gathering over the city. They first appeared in the northeast, and, sweeping westward, turned suddenly in their course, and, descending rapidly, broke upon the city in terrific bursts of wind and rain that swept all lighter objects before them. The darkness was almost like night, and people fled to the nearest shelter to await with blanched faces the fury of the tempest. The clouds seemed to graze the roofs of the highest buildings, and poured out their torrents of water in apparently solid masses for a time.

The storm struck the city in full force about 11:20, and raged for half an hour. The streets were running rivers of water, carrying boxes and signs, and other similar freight, blown from the buildings or swept by the flood. A number of buildings were overturned, and hammerons instances drivers abandoned their horses to their fate and sought refuge in stores and houses. Some hail accompanied the storm, but the fall was not great, otherwise the loss to property would have been enormous from water streaming in at broken windows. As it was, windows in quite a large number of buildings were blown in and goods and furniture were water-soaked. All this, however, proved entirely insignificant when the full extent of the disaster wrought by the storm became known.

The Lathrop school building occupied a prominent site at the corner of Eighth and May streets. It consisted of a main building, to which an art wing had been added. The building was surmounted by a tower, which for some time had been considered unsafe. It had been twice condemned, once within a few weeks, but no action had been taken in the matter. The building was crowded with children, many of whom went nearly frantic with grief over the appalling darkness and the stillness which preceded the tempest. The wind swept midway across Broadway from the west, and seemed to concentrate its force in a descent upon the tower, which yielded with a crash, and, carrying down the heavy bell, plunged through the intervening floors to the basement. The main building is a mass of ruins within shattered walls, which will stand. The wing was comparatively uninjured, and the scholars in it were not hurt. In the main building, however, the effect was awful. The falling floors precipitated the terrified children to the basement, where masses of bricks and beams crushed them to the ground and buried them from view.

Persons near, hearing the crash, made their way as best they could against the beating storm to the scene. The gale quickly subsided, and the work of rescuing was undertaken by eager hands. Owing to the prevailing excitement, the first work was not very effective, but the fire department and police soon arrived, and an organized search was commenced. The dead and wounded were taken out as quickly as possible and carried to the natatorium adjoining, which was turned into a hospital. Here the parents and friends of the little ones soon gathered, each searching for his own, and uttering heartrending cries as they recognized in the maimed and bleeding forms those whom they loved.

Among the first taken out were several dead and one or two mangled almost beyond recognition, their clothing torn and their bodies covered with dust and mortar, the deathly pallor of the skin showing in painful contrast against grime and blood stains. Many heroic scenes were enacted during the rescue, and the wounded children seemed often to have greater control of themselves than their elders. One little girl, half buried in the debris, over whom the rescuers were busy, begged them to leave her and help a boy beside her, because, she said, he was only five years old. The scenes in the natatorium as the little ones were brought in and laid upon improvised cots, the dead placed together upon one side, were pitiful beyond expression. A dozen dead were taken out during the day and their bodies sent to the houses of sorrowing families.

At 119 West Third street stood a three-story brick building in the middle of the block, the third floor of which was used as an overall factory, conducted by Haar Bros.; the first and second floors by the Graham Paper Company. In the factory were about twenty-five employes, chiefly girls. When the storm broke out they started for the cellar. The building fell with a crash, being razed entirely to the earth, and most of the affrighted girls were caught in the ruins. Seven have been taken out dead, a number of others are wounded, and some are still missing. A force of laborers is busy there tonight by the flickering lantern lights, upturning confused masses of bricks and timbers.

The County Court House stands at Second and Main streets, on the hill, exposed to winds from the north and west. The building was erected nearly twenty years ago for hotel purposes, but when completed was purchased by the county for $200,000 and converted into a court house. The building has always been considered rather unsafe, and the roof has frequently suffered injury from high winds. The storm struck the northwest corner, blowing in the wall and the greater portion of the wall of the third and fourth stories. The south wall at the east end, was blown into the street, and Deputy Sheriff Dougherty was caught and killed. All others succeeded in getting out of the building alive. The jail is located in the basement of the building, and that portion escaped injury. The prisoners were wildly alarmed, but became quiet when the crash had passed and they found themselves unhurt. Judge Stover had been holding court on the third floor and had adjourned just before the storm descended. A portion of the roof in falling struck the chair the Judge had just vacated.

Across the street, on the northwest corner of Second and Main streets, stood a two-story brick building erected in 1860 by the Santa Fe Stage Company, one of the oldest buildings in the city, from which the stages formerly were started across the plains in the stage-coaching days. The building has of late years been occupied by the United States Engineers. Adjoining that on the west was a three-story brick coffee and spice mill, owned by Smith & Moffatt. This building was demolished, and, falling over upon the adjoining one, wrecked it also completely. Frank Smith, the senior partner of the firm, was taken bleeding from the ruins and died in a short time. Mr. Moffatt was badly hurt, and three employes were taken out badly bruised. The debris is being removed to-night in search for any who may yet be buried beneath.

The second span from the north end of the bridge across the Missouri, opposite the city, was blown into the river, the piers being left apparently uninjured. A great number of telegraph wires were carried down with the broken span. Workmen are busy to-night raising wires from the wreck, and it is hoped that communication in that direction will be restored by to-morrow morning. The bridge is owned by the Hannibal and St. Joseph Company, and is used by that road, the Wabash, the Rock Island, and Kansas City, St. Joseph and Council Bluffs.

BEFORE the introduction of stamped money all sums were reckoned by the pound weight, and not by the number of pieces.

BASE-BALL.

The Race for the Championship of the National League and the American Association—Vast Crowds Attend the Opening Games.

If any there were who doubted that base-ball is the national game of America, or that it had lost its place in the favor of our citizens, such doubt must have been removed on April 29th last, when the opening games of the National League season of 1886 were played, in the presence of thousands of delighted and enthusiastic spectators. New York and Boston, at the polo grounds in the former city, had an attendance of over 12,000, and at the close of the game, which was won by New York, the winning nine were borne from the grounds upon the shoulders of admiring friends. Similar crowds witnessed the opening games in Washington and St. Louis. Rain prevented the first game between Chicago and Kansas City, in the latter place, but on the following day over 6,000 spectators witnessed a thirteen-inning game, which was won by the champions by one run. Not a few prophesied that the admission of Washington and Kansas City into the league would lessen the interest of the general public, as the new members would not be strong enough to compete with the older clubs in the organization. The opening games dispelled this illusion, as in addition to Kansas City tieing the champions for twelve innings, Washington defeated Harry Wright's sharp team, winning two of the three first games. It is now conceded that greater uncertainty exists as to who will fly the championship pennant of the league for 1886 than in any previous season. The opening games of the American Association were more largely attended than in any previous year, and the same element of uncertainty awaits the result as to the championship. The games of the many State and other leagues have also been largely attended; and it goes without saying that base ball has lost none of its interest for the public, and that more people will witness the games of 1886 than in any previous year.

STANDING OF THE LEAGUE CLUBS.

The second week in their race for the league pennant ended with Saturday, May 8, and found Chicago, New York, Detroit, and Philadelphia leading the string, and very well bunched. From present indications the race of last year between Chicago and New York is to be run again this year, each club having entered the season under a strong and determined style of play. Both Detroit and Philadelphia are playing excellent ball, and, barring accident to their men, there seems to be little doubt that both will stand very close to each other and very near the top at the finish. Boston has not played the game up to the present time that was expected of her, and with her strong army of sixteen players, including Radbourn and Buffington—without question two of the greatest twirlers in the league—it is something to be wondered at. The following table will show the first two weeks' work of the clubs:

Clubs—	Won.	Lost.	Postponed.
Chicago	6	2	1
New York	6	2	1
Detroit	5	3	1
Philadelphia	4	3	2
St. Louis	3	5	1
Boston	2	5	2
Washington	3	5	1
Kansas City	1	5	3

In the American Association, at the close of the third week, St. Louis still retains the lead, Brooklyn a good second, with the Metropolitans bringing up the rear. The following will show the standing of the clubs to date:

Clubs—	Games won.	Games lost.
St. Louis	13	5
Pittsburg	7	9
Metropolitan	3	11
Louisville	7	10
Cincinnati	7	10
Brooklyn	9	4
Baltimore	8	7
Athletic	8	6

The guesses as to the standing of the league clubs at the end of the season, received in response to A. G. Spalding & Bro.'s offer of $100 to the person making the correct guess, have shown considerable diversity of opinion as to the result. Out of 820 guesses, 436 place Chicago first, 152 place New York first, 21 place Detroit first, 8 place Philadelphia first, 2 place Boston first, and 1 asserts that St. Louis will fly the pennant for 1886.

One of the singularities of the year is, that not a single member of the numerous Smith family appears on the roll of the clubs of the National League.

GENERAL SPORTING NOTES.

THE Bostons lost three out of their first four games in the last inning.

THE two longest base ball throws on record are: Ed Crane, Boston Unions, 135 yards 1 foot ½ inch, and 134 yards 5 inches.

BASE-BALL players will probably not join the strike for eight hours as the limit of a day's labor. They are perfectly contented with two hours.

THE National League was organized ten years ago, and the championship has been held by three clubs, as follows: Chicago, '76, '80, '81, '82, '85; Boston, '77, '78, '84; Providence, '79, '83.

AN agreement has practically been concluded by which Teemer and Gaudaur will row their contemplated race at Pullman or Lake Calumet about the 1st of June.

THE work of Andrews, of the Philadelphias, has been terrific. He is the only league player who has batted safely in every one of the first seven league games. He made eleven runs and thirteen hits, with a total of seventeen in those contests; and his batting average was .433, with a total of .566.

AN attempt was made last week to introduce ball-playing indoors in Chicago. The plan is quite elaborate and expensive—too much so, we fear, to prove remunerative to the projectors, two young men from Nashville, Tenn. By means of a special wire leading into Central Music Hall and connecting with the League grounds in St. Louis, full particulars were given of the game in progress between the Chicago and St. Louis clubs. Every play was illustrated upon a canvas screen twenty feet square containing a picture of a ball field. The small audience present was pleased at the novelty of the thing, but there is no reason to anticipate that the enterprise can be made to succeed in Chicago.

MICHIGAN AFFAIRS.

—One Flint lady counts $100 profit in silkworm culture on a small scale.

—Over 70 per cent. of the patients in the Traverse City Asylum are foreign born.

—So many Flint citizens have quit drinking of late that three saloons have gone out of business.

—Henry Crow, a carpenter, fell from a scaffold at Monroe and sustained injuries which will probably prove fatal.

—A Lansing lady complains that the card clubs offer all the excitement of gambling, though there is no money staked.

—If a profusion of blossoms upon the apple trees are an indication, there will be a great apple crop in Southern Michigan this year.

—Joseph Lomason, a well-known and highly respected farmer living near Rochester, suicided by taking laudanum. He leaves a widow and five children.

—J. W. Robbins is the latest addition to the Mecosta County bar. He is a colored barber at Mecosta, passed an excellent examination, and will hang out a shingle.

—Joseph Vannier, of Marquette, is President of the Michigan division of the Alliance Nationale des Societies St. Jean Baptiste, a Franco-American and French-Canadian organization that is spreading the country over.

—Mayor Thurber, of Marquettte, has ordered the City Marshal to close all saloons at 11 p. m. and on Sundays, notifying him that he will be held responsible for the strict enforcement of the law. There are thirty-six saloons in the city, and the order makes a stir among the keepers. Most prominent liquor dealers oppose the Mayor's course.

—The culmination of a little romance took place at Adrian in the marriage of Henry B. Downie and Minnie M. Squires, both of Elyria, Ohio. The bride is an heiress, her guardian being a storm uncle who strongly opposed the suit of young Downie. The other morning Minnie, who is a handsome young brunette, eluded her enstodian, and was driven by her lover to a station west of Elyria, from whence they took the Lake Shore train to Adrian. After a brief honeymoon at the Lawrence House, the couple will return to their Buckeye home.

—Fifty victims of the Bohemian oat swindle have formed an association at Flint to contest the payment of their notes. But few will have any sympathy for the simpletons, says the Kalamazoo Telegraph. The swindle was pointed out in their local papers, they went into it with their eyes open, and with full knowledge that every bushel they raised was so much blood money from brother farmers. In other words, knowing it to be a swindle, they deliberately, knowingly, and willingly became a party to it. Who cares for such sufferers.

—South Bend (Ind.) Tribune: The writer saw, a few days ago, in a Sturgis, Mich., paper, a queer local item. It read: "Miss Smith's lame—pigeon-toed." In the next week's issue the editor indignantly spurned the idea of so handsome and graceful a lady as Miss Smith being either lame or pigeon-toed, and explained that he wrote "Miss Smith's tame pigeon is dead." This paper could, of course, be pardoned for its blunder when so careful a paper as the Cincinnati Commercial had to humbly explain that when it spoke of the "servant-girl graduates" of an "institute," it was simply due to the perversity of the types, "sweet girl graduates" being, of course, intended.

—Mrs. S. D. Moore died near Adrian, a few days ago, aged seventy-one years. Her husband, who is an atheist, refused to have a clergyman officiate at the funeral. At the house Mr. Moore, who is an old man, read an extract from the "Footprints of Life," and then gave a sketch of the life of his wife. He then extended an invitation to any one to make remarks from a secular standpoint. The eldest daughter read a poem which she had prepared for the occasion, in which she acknowledged a Heavenly Father, who "folds His loved ones in His arms and quiets them to rest." At the grave the husband tenderly bade his wife farewell, closing by saying: "We are of the earth and must return to the earth again." The daughter, standing by her father, recited another verse, in which she acknowledged God and the spirit land.

—The Flint Democrat tells the following excellent story of a well-known physician. It may not be true, but it reads well: Everybody knows Dr. ——, of this city, but everybody does not know a little experience of his which came to a head recently. The Doctor has been treating a family out in the country for some time, and had acquired quite a bill against them for his services. He had asked for the cash several times, but was unable to get it. Finally the farmer said that he would send some garden-produce for the amount of the bill; and accordingly the Doctor received by freight yesterday eighty-four bushels of horse-radish. The Doctor was nonplused, and is now engaged in skirmishing around among the dealers in the effort to find some one who will take the stuff off his hands. He has succeeded in getting rid of about four bushels, and still clings to the rest.

THE JOURNAL.

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

In a two-column article headed "Now you've got it, now you haven't," the Boyne Statesman of last week starts in apparently to disprove our assertion of the suspicious appearance of fraud in the recent action of the board of supervisors, but instead of disproving anything, it simply re enacts the school-boy's "you're another," by going off on a tangent in regard to the vote of South Arm township and charging frauds which, if proved, would cause the throwing out of the entire vote of the township. Now Mr. Statesman if you really believe these stories about voting dead men and boys, give us your assistance, and have the whole business investigated to the bottom. On the legality of the actions of certain township officers in this county statements supported by affidavit can be produced that would make mighty interesting reading. The Statesman does one good thing however, when it gives the names of those prominent men who "went round winking significant winks at each other." That sentence may be valuable in the future in proving the responsibility for the recent transaction.

NOTES AND NEWS.

President Cleveland is now repaying congress in its own coin, for past hesitancy in confirming his appointments, by putting his veto to many of its recent bills. The admirers of of common sense in both parties, however, approve and support his course "all through." Few presidents have been placed in a more difficult position than is Cleveland, who is the national executive head of a party which has been out of power more than twenty years and who is obliged to endure the opposition of the powerful, but disappointed minority of the republican party. We say (not in a partisan sense, but because the merits of the man demand it) that, few if any men in the country could have "pursued the even tenor of their way" with the firmness and and justice which has characterized Cleveland's administration.—Eaton Rapids Journal.

A striker takes the first step toward outlawry and anarchy when he assumes that he has a right to prevent another man from doing the work which he himself declines to do. He takes another step when he by any sort of sophistry convinces himself that it is his right to take possession of or to interfere with the property of an individual or a corporation. He takes a third step when he ventures to put his own opinion or his own interpretation of what is right, under the law, against the order or the interpretation of those authorized to execute the law. He takes a fourth step and enters upon the border-lands of anarchy when he attempts to punish a workingman not a member of a union, and whose only crime is an effort to support his family by conscientious performance of duty.—Inter Ocean.

Owing to a change of time made by the Marquette, Houghton, & Ontonagon Railroad, connection is broken at Marquette, and passengers over the D. M. & M. R. R. for L'Anse, Baraga, Houghton, Hancock and Calumet arrive at Marquette after the departure of the "Houghton Express" on the latter road, and are thereby compelled to lose one day. The saving in fares and distance by this line as against any other to this region leaves it still the most desirable route. Close connections are still maintained for Negaunee, Ishpeming, Humboldt, Republic, Champion and Michigamme on west bound business, and all east bound passengers are assured of connections at every point.

On each recurring anniversary the Chicago Herald gives its readers a rich treat in newspaper curiosities. Last year they gave a fac simile of the famous wall-paper edition of the Vicksburg Citizen, which Grant's soldiers issued immediately after his capture of the city; and this year is given a fac simile of the Daily Chicago American of April 19. 1839, the first daily newspaper established in Chicago. In addition to its novelties, the Herald is a first-class newspaper, and one we can recommend to every person desiring a clean, reliable newspaper.

If Mr. Powderley's suspicion should spread that frequent and causeless strikes are prompted by a desire of the strikers to get a living without work, and at the expense of their fellow workmen, there would be a speedy end to strikes. The assurance of support in idleness makes striking a great temptation and naturally leads to making an occasion for a strike where none already exists. A well-grounded suspicion of that would make strikes unpopular.—Detroit Free Press.

The New York Tribune, which assumes to be the keeper of all the liberty there is in this country, and which is in a state of perpetual alarm lest some union soldier shall be unfairly treated, has a contemptible attack upon General Black, commissioner of pensions, in nearly every issue. Black draws a pension, is a democrat and an officeholder. If he had been a bounty-jumper and was a republican he would be a patriot in the eyes of the Tribune, whose editor took care not to expose himself to southern bullets.—Chicago Herald.

The soil of freedom is not favorable to the growth of communists and the mischievous loafers should be treated as pests of society, entitled to no consideration whatever. Stern, uncompromising action on the part of the police and the courts would soon rid the country of this intolerable nuisance of socialism, for its adherents are cowards at heart and only become formidable through the idle fears of others.—Saginaw Courier.

The Pall Mall Gazette seems to thoroughly understand the situation on this side of the Atlantic. It says "America is reaping the results of her folly in trying to make American citizens out of the scum of Europe." True, and it is time to commence the work of regeneration. The facility with which the scum of Europe is converted into a voting factor must be curtailed.—Saginaw Courier.

As long as collossal fortunes are piled up in a few years by capital, so long will labor clamor and demand, and eventually have more. The successful business men of the future will be the men who, as capitalists, take labor into their confidence and divide profits fairly.—Chicago Journal.

Alger's Aspirations.

"Majah" Osmun, Gov. Alger's private secretary, has been interviewed. He evidently wishes to speak authoritatively and perhaps he does so. Perhaps Gov. Alger really does not want to be United States senator. And then again, perhaps Gov. Alger does not want the public just yet to know that he would like to be United States senator. Probably, after all, "want" had better be spelled "cant." There is a strong suspicion lurking in the minds of of those who know Gov. Alger that his position is about according to the second conditional statement. Not long after he assumed the duties of governor he told the writer "it's too early to talk about that matter. I've got all I want to do in attending to the duties of my my present position." If the senatorial bee was buzzing in Mr. Alger's bonnet when he secured the gubernatorial nomination, which is deemed an excellent stepping-stone, it is not wonderful that it buzzed quite loudly when Gov. Alger sat in the executive chamber at the capitol. And is it a natural supposition that it so soon should have subsided as the time for for the contest can be reckoned by months? It is only a supposition, but sometimes suppositions are quite as true as they are peculiar.—Kalamazoo Gazette.

Democracy's Record.

When the national democratic party asked for the suffrages of the people, it promised an honest, economical and systematic government.

It has redeemed its pledge.

The party that two years ago through its frenzied orators declared that the election of a man known as a democrat, meant the destruction of the government and the deluded citizens, who, believing them, voted against their interests can read this:

The balance sheet of the treasury department for the first nine months of this fiscal year shows an increase in the revenue of

$16,000,000.

More money has been collected; less money has been spent.

This is the democracy's record.—Kalamazoo Gazette.

Not Satisfied.

In many places where the eight hour plan has been adopted, the workmen are becoming dissatisfied with it and have expressed a desire to return to the old ten hour system. They say they cannot afford to lose the difference in wages.—Lansing Journal.

An Ancient Relic.

Mr. J. L. Alger showed us the other day a curiosity in the shape of an ancient razor, said to have been taken from an Indian grave north of the bay. The blade, much covered by rust, is a marvel of clumsiness. The handle is of tortoise shell and is much less injured by time and the elements than the blade. Upon one side of the handle is carved deeply "Father Marquette 1670." There is no doubt that the razor is of great age, and there is no doubt that the inscription was cut a great while ago, but we do not accept the theory that it was presented to Father Marquette in 1670. Our reason is this: In 1670 Father Marquette was working to build up the mission of St. Ignatius, north of the straits where St. Ignace now stands. Four years thereafter he left upon his famous expedition to the Mississippi and died on the return journey at or near the present site of Ludington. Now at the date of the inscription (1670) there were no other white men than Frenchmen in all this region. It was a hundred years later when the English penetrated to the region round Mackinac, and yet if this razor was presented to him at that time it was certainly presented by an Englishman. No Frenchman nor Indian would have used the title "Father" in place of his own "Pere." It is possible that it may have belonged to Father Marquette, was given by him to some Indian chief or Frenchman in 1670, and afterward came into possession of an English officer or trader, who, learning its history, cut the inscription on it. The massacre of the garrison at Fort Mackinac by the Indians, would account for its having fallen into the possession of an Indian, who, attaching a superstitious value to it, had it buried with him.—Petoskey Record.

An Editor's Sympathy.

In the District of Columbia there are 20,000 more women than men:

Forty thousand peachblow checks,
Forty thousand lovely eyes,
Twenty thousand waiting hearts,
Forty million tender sighs,
Forty thousand dimpled hands,
Forty thousand dainty feet,
Twenty thousand noses fine,
Twenty thousand voices sweet,
Forty thousand graceful arms,
Forty thousand pink-white ears,
Forty thousand ripe, red lips,
Twenty thousand lonesome dears,
Twenty thousand willing souls,
Twenty thousand willing slaves,
Twenty thousand subjects for Twenty thousand maiden graves.

P. S.—It's pretty tough, girls, but Senator Edmunds and Colonel Kate Field are down on polygamy, and we don't see how we can ameliorate the very sad and lonely condition into which these two great reformers have placed you. You have our heartfelt sympathy, but we must draw the line at that.—Washington Critic.

The Great German Doctor.

The remarkable phase in the practice of Dr. Peter W. Schmidt (frequently called Dr. Pete) is, he never asked one to describe their disease, his intuitive perceptions being so strong he can tell any one their trouble without asking a question. His success is phenomenal. His practice enormous. He is sought after by hundreds wherever he goes, because he cures when every physician and remedy has failed. The giving of his great remedies, Golden Seal Bitters, which has made his great success, to the world marks a new era in medicine. Blood, liver, kidney, and stomach disorders yield to this master of disease, and its wonderful cures are regarded as phenomenal, but the germ of faith ever says, "What has been may be again." We say to the sick and discouraged, use Golden Seal Bitters a trial. It is all we ask. They will speak for themselves. Sold by Perry Weed and Dr. G. W. Crouter.

Cure for Piles.

Piles are frequently preceded by a sense of weight in the back, loins and lower part of the abdomen, causing the patient to suppose he has some affection of the kidneys or neighboring organs. At times, symptoms of indigestion are present, flatulency, uneasiness of the stomach, etc. A moisture, like perspiration, producing a very disagreeable itching, after getting warm, is a common attendant. Blind, Bleeding and Itching Piles yield at once to the application of Dr. Bosanko's Pile Remedy, which acts directly upon the parts affected, absorbing the Tumors, allaying the intense itching, and effecting a permanent cure. Price 50 cents. Sold by Geo. W. Crouter. 152

N. B. Godfrey has on exhibition in the shed in the rear of E. M. Dave Bradbeer has made some fine 10x14 views of Charlevoix, looking southwest from the top of the Chicago club house. He also made a fine view of the Champlain as she lay at the dock on the morning after unloading that large consignment of freight for this port. Either picture is an excellent advertisement for the town.

Although the Independent never said a word regarding the Charlevoix county seat fight, realizing that it was none of our business, our personal sympathies were rather with Boyne City, from the fact that we have more personal friends there than at East Jordan. But we fear that in their eagerness the Boyne City people have prejudiced their case. If they had right on their side they could afford to be more than fair to their opponents.—Harbor Springs Independent.

On complaint of District Attorney Stone, Sarah Taylor and James Taylor were brought before U. S. Commissioner Call, on Wednesday, charged with retailing spirituous liquors and tobacco without having paid the special tax. Sarah Taylor was bound over to the U. S. court, her bond was fixed at $200. James Taylor was released with the understanding that he is to leave the town. This case will probably be compromised by defendents paying the special tax, all costs and penalty.—Petoskey Democrat.

The Methodists of East Jordan have begun active operations on a new church, to be ready for occupancy this fall. We congratulate our neighbors on their enterprise, and hope they will experience no drawbacks before its completion.

The mail to East Jordan is now carried on the Gazelle, daily, arriving at Charlevoix at 11 a. m. and closing at 1:30 p. m. The route embraces Ironton, Rock Elm, and South Arm. The old route from Boyne City, via Advance and Ironton has been discontinued between Advance and Charlevoix, but an effort is being made to have the route from Boyne to Undine on the north side of Pine Lake extended to Charlevoix, and the service increased to daily.

D. G. Tillotson, carriage painter, late of Petoskey, has just finished painting ten buggies for Burns & Scroggie, besides brightening up the old hack until it looks as good as new. He has also painted the new 'bus recently built by the Manufacturing Company for Messrs. B. & S., and its bright colors and fine ornaments will be a living advertisement for Mr. Tillotson's work. He has done most of F. J. Smith's work in Petoskey for a number of years, but now expects to make Charlevoix his permanent headquarters.

Sheriff Berdan and Deputies Cooper and Thompson landed at East Jordan, the county seat of Charlevoix county, at nine o'clock Thursday morning for the purpose of removing the county property. They were met by citizens and informed that the property could not be removed to Boyne City. The reason given was the board of supervisors who gave the order was an illegal board, with no power to canvas the vote. The sheriff, with his deputies, undertook to remove some of the furniture, and in 5 minutes there were 200 citizens at the county office, which so crowded the room that the sheriff could not remove an article. Everything was quiet. The citizens of East Jordan are peaceable, but determined that the county property should not be removed on account of the illegal vote and canvass. The citizens of the county are about equally divided in the fight, and the courts will be appealed to.—Special to the Grand Rapids Democrat.

Northern Michigan Wheat.

The Petoskey Democrat reports the following as Mr. Hankey's opinion of milling when using the wheat grown in this country: Our mill has always done a fair business considering the kind of wheat this country offered for milling. No man can form any idea of milling here without experience. People complain of the flour, and blame the mill when the whole trouble lies in the wheat. It is a serious question at the present whether to handle home wheat or let it alone. When we see farmers loading up outside flour and go back on the very business they should support it looks discouraging. This mill has been the market for nearly all the wheat offered for sale in Emmet and Charlevoix counties, of this last crop 15,000 bushels have been marketed here, it has brought more trade to Petoskey from surrounding towns than any other one industry or all others put together, 500 tons were passed over the dock coming in and out of this mill in 1885.

We are pleased to state that this principle will not hold good in regard to the product of the Rifenburg mill. Their "Iron Duke" grade, made of Charlevoix wheat, will hold its own in comparison with the best flour in this market made at any other place. For this reason farmers and others do not call for flour made elsewhere; the can and do patronize home industry without being obliged to accept an inferior article.

Hating no man, scorning no man—
Wronging none by word or deed—
But forbearing, soothing, serving,
Thus I live!—and this my creed.

Harsh condemning, fierce contemning
Is of little human use,
One soft word of kindly peace
Is worth a torrent of abuse;
Calling things bad, calling men bad
Adds but darkness to their night;
If thou wouldst improve thy brother,
Let thy goodness be his light.

I have felt, and know how bitter
Human coldness makes the world—
Every bosom round me frozen,
Not an eye with pity pearl'd;
Still, my heart, with kindness teeming,
Glads when other hearts are glad;
And my eyes a tear-drop findeth
At the sight of others sad.

Ah! be kind—life hath no secret
For our happiness like this—
Kindly hearts are seldom sad ones—
Blessing ever bringeth bliss.
Send a helping hand to others,
Smile, though all the world should frown;
Man is man, we are all brothers,
Black or white, or red or brown.

Man is man, through all gradations,
Little recks it where he stands—
How divided into nations—
Scattered over many lands;
Man is man, by form and feature,
Man by vice and virtue, too—
Man, in all one common nature,
Speaks and binds us brothers true.

REMINISCENCES.

BY CAPTAIN JAMES MONTFORD.

The ladies of the Colonel's family were "discussing" the war one evening.

One proof of the strong effect the war had upon the popular mind is that it is often, even to-day, the subject of conversation in numerous families.

It is not the wonder of nine days, or nine years, but the recollections of a generation.

The Colonel's wife had imbibed a great many of his opinions, and she was almost as good a soldier—to talk—as the worthy Colonel himself.

"No," she said, in response to some suggestion from her niece, "the Colonel does not think the Southern women were worse in war-time than those of the North would have been under similar circumstances."

"Perhaps he really does not think so," said the young lady, "but he always leans that way."

"Well, here he comes. He can argue it out with you himself."

A moment later footsteps approached the door and the Colonel entered.

"We have been criticising your stories, papa," said his daughter, "and cousin thinks you are rather hard on the ladies."

"I do not intend to be. I merely relate my stories because they are dramatic."

"The only way you can make amends is to tell another story, where the ladies are better disposed," cried his niece, smilingly.

The Colonel shook his head as he sat down.

"I scarcely know whether I remember a story of that order or not. I have noticed that adventures with ladies usually happen to the bachelors, and I was married before I went to the front."

"Then you can entertain us with something that occurred to a single man."

"Well," said the Colonel, after a moment of thoughtfulness, "I remember a story that caused some talk at the time."

"About the first thing a soldier becomes impressed with is the idea that he deserves something better to eat than the commissary affords. At moments of leisure his thoughts usually turn upon eating.

"In consequence, they were often making excursions in search of pigs and poultry. Some would roam about day after day and find nothing, while others were more fortunate.

"Charley Wise was said to be very lucky in this respect. He seemed born for the good things of this world. The best green corn and the plumpest chickens—at least, so his comrades declared—fell to his lot.

"Early in 1862, when the Army of the Potomac moved from Washington, nearly everyone was in good spirits. It was the general opinion among the troops that we were to put a period to the Confederacy.

"The first discomfort we sustained was when we went on board the little steamer, and when forced to disgorge the most choice contents of our knapsacks. This forced yielding up of the treasures we had hoarded caused a little discontent, but it soon wore off.

"The next day after boarding the steamer we arrived at Old Punt Comfort, and our tents were pitched amid the ruins of the once beautiful village of Hampton.

"We were not pressed for food at that time, but many, partly excited by the strangeness and beauty of the country, partly by the idea that rests upon the soldier that he deserves something unobtainable, wandered about 'in search of whatever they might devour.'

"Late one afternoon Charley Wise started out alone.

"He was a tall, well-made fellow; strong as a mule, quick witted, and venturesome to a degree. He soon had left the camp far behind, and, wandering around, lost his way just as darkness set in.

"This disturbed Charley very little, and as he came in sight of a brightly illuminated farm house he resolved to enter the premises, and if he could pick up anything he wanted, to do so; if he failed, to inquire his way back to camp.

"As he advanced he saw that the building was large and well appointed. There were an unusual number of lights, and he guessed that some festivities were in progress.

"Entering the orchard, which was upon the left side of the building, he made his way cautiously around toward the back of the house, where he supposed the outbuildings were situated.

"He discovered the stable and its appendages at last, but was forced to take a roundabout course to reach it. Reaching the front corner of the building, he suddenly found that further progress in that direction was cut off.

"Two darkies sat upon the steps of the stable.

"Fearing discovery—gentlemen engaged in business similar to Charley's were occasionally caught, and roughly used—he stood quiet for a moment.

"The negroes were talking together, and, being but a few paces distant, their words were plainly audible to our adventurer.

"'Major am berry brave,' one was saying, 'but I heerd Massar Sim say dat he run great risks in comin' here to-night.'

"'Oh, ho,' thought Charley, 'that accounts for all those lights back there.'

"'I dom think so,' drawled the other black. 'De Major am a fighter, I tell yo; if dem Yankees do cum, dey'll cotch it.'

"Charley moved cautiously back, and was soon out of hearing. Then he began to consider the case.

"It was quite evident to him that an officer of the Confederate army was in the farm-house. Should he (Charley) hurry back to camp, and give warning of the Major's presence in the country? That would be quite a nice commencement for him, he thought; but, then, the officer had stolen home to meet his wife and family. That would be rather mean, too.

"He had at last concluded to allow matters to take their proper course, when he heard the sound of horses' hoofs, and a few moments later several mounted men rode up to the house.

"The negroes left their position in front of the stable, and ran toward the house. Soon after, the sound of angry voices reached Charley's ear, and he came around in front of the barn.

"At the side of the house he saw the horsemen now upon the ground; there was a handsome young gentleman in their midst.

"He was evidently the Major of whom the darkies had spoken; but Charley could not understand who the horsemen were—they wore no uniforms.

"An old, gray-haired gentleman, the Major's father, evidently, several women and servants gathered about. Charley was several rods away, and was unable to hear or understand what was going forward, but at last all the company entered the house.

"Then Charley determined to right the mystery, and stole noiselessly to the house. The windows were open, and, as he determined to make no ill use of the information so acquired, he was not ashamed to listen.

"A great deal of high talk took place. The men were Southerners and neighbors, but were ill-affected in the Confederacy. Their leader, a large man, with a proud, sour-looking countenance, was the Major's enemy, and had seized him as a means of revenge.

"As Charley learned this, one of the captors came to the door to look after the horses, and he was driven back in the direction of the stable.

"He was determined not to leave the place without paying himself for the trouble of the visit, and he no sooner spied a number of fowls which roosted upon a short piece of fence at the side of the stable than he grasped one.

"He did not secure him very firmly, for, with a squawk, he escaped from his hands and flew fluttering along the ground.

"Charley saw him enter the stable, the negroes had left the doors open, and, thinking it would be less trouble to find him in the barn than to take another from the fence, he pursued him inside.

"After a troublesome search the rooster was a prisoner, and Charley was about to quit the premises in haste when a woman entered the stable.

"Charley saw her enter; she was one of the ladies he had seen at the house, and was doubtless the Major's wife.

"She was bareheaded and seemed in haste. Charley tried to escape her observation, but she saw him at once.

"'Who are you?' she demanded, in a tremulous whisper.

"'A friend.'

"'If you are, aid me to saddle the horse,' and she pointed to a magnificent bay that stood in a stall directly behind the adventurer.

"The latter hesitated for a moment. He imagined the horse was for the Major's escape.

"The woman understood what was passing in his mind, and her face became pale as death.

"'I'll help you,' cried Charley at last.

"The woman uttered a cry of joy, and a moment later a saddle was placed upon the bay, and Charley led him softly from the stable.

"Quick as thought the woman sprang into the saddle, and urging the horse around the side of the barn disappeared.

"At that instant there came a confused all from the direction of the house, and, running, Charley saw the captors rushing toward the stable.

"They poured a volley of questions at Charley, and when they found the woman had taken a saddled horse from the stable became furious.

"Our friend would have suffered had it not been for his uniform. All but one hurried off in the direction of the orchard, making a vain attempt to retake the prisoner.

"The man who remained was very communicative, and Charley was soon in possession of the entire story.

"When they had entered the house with the Major that gentleman and his friends appeared without hope.

"But as they were preparing to leave the officer desired to enter another room, to take leave of his wife.

"The leader of the visitors was against this; but his companions outnumbered him in their assents, and the prisoner passed from their sight, accompanied by his wife and mother.

"The leader became impatient as the moments passed; but as the sound of voices still came from the adjoining room, the door of which had been left open, he contained himself for some time.

"But at last he entered the apartment, and found the Major and his wife had both escaped through the window. While the mother had been talking to the empty walls, her son was waiting in the orchard for the steed which bore him away from his foes."

A Curious Case.

There have been all manner of odd health resorts; places where people could eat grapes, drink skim milk, or where they could bathe or walk themselves into health. But the most singular cure in Europe is that of Lindewiese, an obscure village in Austrian Silesia. People troubled with the rheumatism, gout, dyspepsia, and all allied disorders, throng this place, and many declare they are benefited. Six weeks effects the cure, during which time no water is drank and nothing but dry bread eaten. The patients are subjected to frequent packs in ice-cold water, which induces profuse sweating. There are three days in the week when drink is allowed, but it is a fermented mixture native to the country. Every patient, of course, loses weight, often as much as fifteen or twenty pounds, but very many are benefited by the entire change of life, and what they call the "blood-sweat."—Demorest's Monthly.

PICTURESQUE CAVES.

The new discovery is a multiplicity of grotesque and fantastic-looking objects of nature's fashioning. Persons of lively imagination can, out of the scenery, make perfect in their minds almost any archetype, and many different parts of many different animals. The numerous chambers and many narrow passages with different shaped, fashioned, and molded scenery are surprising and astonishing. A man can go through what is discovered, and does go through it; the writer has gone through part of the discovery, but he believes that no one person who does go through it has a mind large enough to take in and hold all that is to be seen in that arcadian formation. If lamps with large, brilliant burning flames to emanate streams of light on the surroundings were placed there, the sights would be dazzling. The snowy white and wax-colored stalactite, and incrustations that cover the sides can not be reproduced in pictures. The wax-colored and vitreous stalactite pendants hanging from the lower extremity reflect flashes of the light, and when the burning candles are held still the visitors behold the appearance of innumerable splendors.

The incrustations on the bottom of some of the chambers include patches of imitation hoarfrost, which is so hard and sharp that it makes prints in the bootsoles; but its glistening in the candle-light is like a body of newly fallen snow when the early sunbeams strike it in the morning air. There are imitation sponges that look soft and velvety, but hard and sharp to the touch of the hand; imitation coral and coral fringes of very beautiful shapes and colors; a body of stalagmite resembling the snow-clad Mount Hood and the ghost chamber that came near scaring the life out of the cave man when he discovered it.

Before entering into the big chamber there is overhead a vertical aperture that seems to run up the distance of thirty feet, and all the way it seems to have the same diameter. A strong current of air spins through, and visitors have to take extra care of their lights or they may lose them. The big chamber is well named. It is a spacious underground room, being 364 feet long, 50 feet wide, its vaulted roof rising to a height of from 50 to 75 feet, and its size imposing to the beholder. Its sides and roof consist of rock, differing from any other cave chamber that the writer has seen; enormous bowlders cover the bottom, and on the shelly sides bunches of gravel are sticking that contain variously colored pebble stones.—Grant's Pass Circular.

Tea Cultivation in Japan.

The tea-plant, like many other plants, can not be transplanted or multiplied by slips or by grafting, but must be raised from the seeds. It requires a temperate climate, too great heat or cold being injurious to it. The best time for sowing is from December to the end of January. The seeds are placed in circles, slightly covered with earth, over which a layer of rice-husks is spread in order to protect them against the hoar-frost. The first shoots appear in the following May or June, the roots developing in proportion to the plant. If the seeds are sown too late, the roots have not time to expand before the rising of the stem, which injures permanently the subsequent growth of the shrub. No manure is required during the first twelvemonth after the appearance of the plant. During the second year animal manure diluted in an equal amount of water is applied. From the third year the stem is surrounded three times yearly with pure animal manure or oil-cake, i. e., the residue of the oil-press. At the end of the third year the shrub is topped, in order to increase the power of forming lateral buds.

The first leaves are gathered in the fourth year. The harvest commences in the beginning of the summer, when only the youngest leaves are picked. Thirty days after the first gathering the second takes place. Some tea-growers have lately made a third picking, in consequence of the rise in the price of tea, but this proceeding ought to be energetically discountenanced, as it has proved most injurious to the plant.

The leaves, immediately after having been gathered, are taken to the factory. The tea-plant abounds in stipules, and is thus unlike other plants of the order of the Ternstroemiaceæ, which are usually ex-stipulate. Here the stipules are separated by means of a bamboo sieve, and all impurities are removed. This done, the leaves are exposed to the action of steam; by placing them on a bamboo hurdle over water heated to 200 degrees F. in a covered pan. Those intended for tea-in-leaf are steamed for fifteen seconds, those intended for powdered tea for half a minute. After this they are uncovered, turned and aired by means of fans.

The leaves, when perfectly dry, are removed from the second floiro into sieves of copper-wire, into which the petioles, which may have remained attached, are separated by gentle rubbing between the palms of the hands. After having been winnowed, the leaves are assorted into three qualities and sifted through bamboo sieves, of which there are six different degrees of fineness. Common tea is sifted but once, the better qualities from six to seven times, and the powdered tea even as often as ten times, which expenditure in time and labor renders this kind of tea extremely dear.

The tea-leaves, after having been prepared for use in the manner above described, are in June exposed to the action of a gentle fire for several hours; then spread out in a flat pan and fanned until they have cooled. Then they are put into glazed earthenware jars, which are methodically moved and shaken until they settle firmly, fresh leaves being added by degrees until they are quite full. These jars are closed by stoppers, likewise of earthenware, which are wrapped in several layers of paper in order to make them air tight. The jars are removed to the upper floor of the factory, and stored in a room which must be well aired, cool, and perfectly dry. In August the tea is again fired and treated in the same manner as in the preceding month, and this process is repeated in the following months of November, February, and March, the tea being tired altogether twelve times during the twelvemonth after the harvest. Tea, for the inland transport, is packed in boxes made of the wood of the Kiri, the Pawlownia imperialis. For export air-tight tin boxes are used, which have a casing of the wood of Sugi, the Cryptomeria japonica. Smaller quantities are kept in well-stopped glass jars, made air-tight with pitch.—English Illustrated Magazine.

The Centipede.

Centipedes can be found without much trouble, particularly if they happen to be in your clothing, but the best place to study the tournure of the insect is at a drug store. Most Texas druggists keep a few centipedes and tarantulas preserved in alcohol as a kind of an attraction. Although resembling the desperado in many other respects, when the centipede is in liquor he is calm and genteel, and it is perfectly safe to make remarks about him. When the desperado is in whisky he is apt to resent familiarities, otherwise there is not much to choose between them, except that the centipede can't shoot off a six shooter and defy the local authorities. This goes to show that like causes do not always produce the same effect.

The centipede is not a very active insect, and he is not much of a vocalist, but the quantity of latent energy and the spontaneous flow of eloquence that he can coax out of the most quiet of men is surprising. When he seizes the cuticle of a victim with his jaws, anchors his two hooks in his flesh, and, humping himself, clinches his numerous sharp-pointed toes, the geology in that part of the county, and also the fourth commandment, is liable to be wrecked by the violence of the behavior of the aforesaid sufferer. It is a fact, however, that very few persons die from the bite of the centipede. It is the centipede that dies.

The centipede has a worse enemy than man. It is a bird with a long tail and a top-knot, whose mission seems to be to decrease the number of centipedes. The bird is called by some the chapparal cock, by others the road runner. The Mexicans call him el capora', or the corporal. Why the Mexicans give this bird a military title I can't tell. Perhaps it is on account of his top-knot, or, more plausible still, because he can run so fast. The corporal in the Mexican army is almost as hard to overtake as a general, and this road runner is remarkable for his speed. He can give points to an absconding bank cashier. He runs like compound interest on a note of hand.

Well, this would-be reformer regards the centipede as an offensive partisan, and removes him so effectually that the centipede finds himself in a distressing minority. Although the centipede is copiously provided with legs, one road runner can run faster than all the centipedes in the State of Texas.

When the road runner, or chapparal cock, overtakes an offensive partisan of a centipede he seizes the obnoxious insect by the head and gives him a shake to straighten out the kinks. By a peculiar motion this reformer passes the centipede through his bill sideways, pretty much as a linen collar is passed through a patent clothes-wringer, and lets him drop on the other side. After that the centipede is destitute of political aspiration. He makes no objection to being swallowed. He is crushed. Then the bird gobbles up the centipede endways, very much after the manner of an Italian lazaroni hiding away a few feet of macaroni.

One Sunday morning a colored clergyman was preaching with great fervor in the Austin Blue Light Tabernacle on the worldliness of mankind. He said, earnestly; "De trubble wid de most ob you niggahs am dat you hab got yer eyes sot on de dings ob dis yarf. Belubbed breddren and sistern, look at de dings what am above, and de Lord will shower down blessing on yer heads."

As he muttered these words he rolled up his eyes until the whites, or rather the yellows, alone were visible; but all at once, "a change came o'er the tablet of his thought," and with the yell of a ten-dollar lawyer pleading a case before a justice of the peace he bounded into the aisle, where, as pale as a piece of aged tripe, his legs vibrating with terror, which also straightened out the kinks of his wool, he pointed upward, and in a tremulous voice, exclaimed: "Jess, jess look at dat ar cussed insec'."

Sure enough, slowly crawling over the ceiling just above the sacred desk, was a green centipede of about the size of an ordinary table knife. He was liable to drop down on the congregation at any moment, instead of the promised benediction. This is about the only time I ever heard of anybody looking up to a centipede.—Alex. Sweet.

BABY MINE.

There is no joy in the world like you,
No music sweet as your "goo ah-goo,"
No skies so clear as your eyes of blue—

And open your valve and howl like sin,
No gong can equal your little din,

My heart is glad when your face I see,
My joy is full when you come to me,
I laugh with you in romping glee,
Baby, O my baby.

And oftentimes my midnight snore
Is broken short by your screaming roar,
And till morning dawns we walk the floor,
Baby, O my baby.

Courtship in Zululand has several advantages over the same sort of agreeable pastime in this country. To Digest Vulcanite

Requires acids more potent than the solvent juices of the human stomach. And yet, in the form of medicine intended to reform the very evil they aggravate, to wit, dyspepsia, solids and fluids, irreconcilable in their constituents that have no chemical affinity one with the other, are introduced into it. Are these so-called remedies more digestible than vulcanite? Positively—no! Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, on the other hand, a simple medicine, harmonious in its composition and readily assimilable, is active, and produces marked as well as speedily appreciable effects, because it is a rational remedy suited to the stomach. It is a tonic in the true sense, because it harmonizes and insures regularity of the operations of digestion. Not the least of the benefits which it confers, is a thorough repair of the damage inflicted on the stomach by ill-chosen remedies. For biliousness, constipation, malarial complaints, rheumatism and kidney troubles, it is alike invaluable.

The Shrewd Maine Man.

"Uncle Stead" is what they called a shrewd old gentleman who used to live in Winthrop, a little way out of the village, up the side of the pond near Readfield. One of his fellow-citizens was a man named Lovejoy. Uncle Stead met Lovejoy in the village one day, and said to him: "Lovejoy, there's a poor woman lives out on the edge of the town that needs some provisions. I'm willing to supply her, but I've sold my horse and have no means of getting the stuff to her. Now, I'll buy her a barrel of flour, and a ham, and some other supplies if you'll carry them out to her with your team."

Lovejoy said, certainly, he'd be very glad to do it. Accordingly, Uncle Stead bought a barrel of flour, a ham, a bucket of sugar, etc., and, telling Lovejoy where the woman lived, sent him off on the errand of charity with the good things in his pung.

Lovejoy easily found the house where the woman lived. He unloaded the goods, puffing like a grampus as he rolled the barrel of flour in, and said to the woman: "Mr. Steadman sent you the provisions. He's a mighty kind-hearted man to send you all these things."

"Well, I don't know why he shouldn't send them to me!" exclaimed the woman in surprised accents. "He's my husband!"—Rockland Courier-Gazette.

Bowen's Budget, Fort Plain, N. Y., for March, 1886, says: In the multiplicity of medicines placed upon the market, it is sometimes difficult to distinguish between the meritorious and the worthless. There are at least two excellent remedies widely used, the efficiency of which is unquestioned. We refer to St. Jacobs Oil and Red Star Cough Cure.

She Played Not by Muscle, but For It.

One of the leading teachers of the violin in Boston—and in America—relates that a young woman came to him for instructions, and after a lesson or two, he very frankly and honestly said to her:

"It is of no use for me to teach you. The simple fact is, you have no musical ear."

"Oh, I know that," she returned, with the utmost sweetness and candor. "But why," he asked, in astonishment easily imagined, "do you come to me if you know you have no ear?"

"Oh, it is because of my health," answered the interesting pupil. "My doctors say there is nothing so good for my dyspepsia as the exercise of the arms I get in violin playing."—Boston Budget.

Solicitor of Patents F. O. McCleary, of Washington, D. C., says the only thing that did him any good, when suffering with a severe cough of several weeks' standing, was Red Star Cough Cure, which is purely vegetable and free from opiates and poison.

No Time to Lose.

If Dr. Koch should discover a remedy for as well as an explanation of pulmonary disorders, he will have no lack of home practice. Nos. 132 and 134 Ackerstrasse, Berlin, is the location of the most crowded tenement on earth. It is only a four-story building, but contains 232 sections, inhabited by nearly 1,100 human beings. Many of the rooms have only transom windows; others face stuffy courtyards or sunless alleys; in short, an establishment with all modern devices for the systematic manufacture of lung diseases.

"A HEN has to feet." "He done it." This is what Superintendent B. B. Russell, of Brockton, Mass., placed upon the blackboard for the pupils to correct. This was the way one boy corrected it: "He didn't done it, God done it."—Boston Journal of Education.

Plants in the Bed-Room.

Babyhood replies thus to a question as to the propriety of keeping plants in the children's sleeping-room:

Plants are not usually injurious in a room during the daytime. When there is sunlight the plants absorb carbonic acid and appropriate its carbon and set free a certain amount of oxygen. This process is not harmful, but rather the reverse, to animal life. The only harm that need be considered is that possibly arising from any considerable quantity of damp earth in the room, but this is probably very slight. But with the coming of darkness this process of absorption of carbonic acid ceases, and a certain amount of the gas is given off; just how much, of course, varies with the quantity and kind of plants in your greenery. The effect is in kind, if not in degree, very much the same as that of having another person sleeping in the room. If you can arrange your plants upon a stand with casters that can be rolled out of the room before sundown and brought back in the morning, the plants will probably be harmless; otherwise they are better away.

The Great German Physician.

The remarkable phase in the practice of Dr. Peter W. Schmidt (frequently called Dr. Pete) is, he never asked one to describe their disease but tells each one their trouble without asking a question. His success is phenomenal. His practice enormous. He is sought after by hundreds wherever he goes, because he cures when every other physician and remedy have failed. He has allowed his great medicines, Golden Seal Bitters and Lung Food for Consumption, to be offered to the suffering, and we assert without fear of successful contradiction that there is no disease they will not cure. Thousands of bottles have been sold. Thousands of broken-down and discouraged invalids saved. Send to Golden Seal Bitters Company, Holland City, Mich., for Facts for the Million! Free.

A Remarkable Tribute.

Sidney Ourchundro, of Pittsburgh, Pa., writes: "I have used DR. WM. HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS many years, with the most gratifying results. The relieving influence of HALL'S BALSAM is wonderful. The pain and rack of the body incidental to a tight cough, soon disappear by the use of a spoonful according to directions. My wife frequently sends for HALL'S BALSAM instead of a physician, and health is speedily restored by its use."

A Warning to Farmers.

Every farmer living at any distance from a physician should at all times be prepared to treat such common but by no means simple complaints as diarrhœa, dysentery, cholera morbus, and cramps. The safest, surest, and quickest remedy for such disorders is PERRY DAVIS' PAIN KILLER, which has never failed to afford relief in cases of the kind mentioned when properly tried. A teaspoonful is a dose for adults, but twenty drops will cure a child of any ordinary trouble of this kind. The medicine can be found in every respectable drug store.

MESSRS. Ely Bros., Gentlemen:—My boy (3 years old) was recently taken with cold which seemed finally to settle in his head. His nose was stopped up for days and nights so that it was difficult for him to breathe and sleep. I called a physician who prescribed, but did him no good. Finally I went to the drug store and got a bottle of your Cream It seemed to work like magic. The boy's nose was clear in two days, and he has been D. K. ever since.—P. J. Hazard, New York City, Jan. 27, 1884.

A GOAT FARM.

A New York Lady's Venture Which Has Proved Profitable.

Three miles from the village of Nyack, near the Hudson river, is an Angora goat farm, which from its novelty attracts much attention. It is looked upon as something in the nature of a farmer's freak, like the raising of bees or silk-worms. Goats browse and goats prosper on this farm on the heights that border Rockland Lake as readily as they do, on the rocks about Shantytown, in New York City. But they are a different breed of goats, more aristocratic than their city relatives as to wool, more epicurean in their tastes, and more blue-blooded as to ancestry. The herd in this somewhat novel farm just now numbers seventy-five, varying in age from the tiny object of 3 months which looks like a cross between a dog, a rabbit, and a lady's powder puff, to the handsome patriarch of the flock, a magnificent specimen of the pure Angora breed, with immense curling horns. This handsome old fellow with his wife were imported by Dr. Agnew, the famous oculist of New York, from Asia Minor, and the importation cost him a heap of money as the price of goats goes. Their present owner is the good woman who now runs this goat farm, and who never tires of discanting upon the good qualities of her pets. They know her voice, and answer to their names when she calls them. Kind and gentle they appear when visitors are about, but the fondness for fighting, as characteristic of goats as it is of a native of Tipperary, crops out when the herd is together and apparently out of sight of mankind.

A strange fact noticed in the breeding of these animals is that the females do not thrive in this locality as well as the males. The hardy female goat of the ordinary species was introduced into this flock for experimental breeding purposes, and with marked success. Repeated crossings with the common goat and her offspring has produced apparently pure Angora goats, the tendency being in all cases for the kids to revert in the texture of their wool toward the male side. As a consequence the third generation has all the appearance of its distinguished ancestry, and in the fourth generation even the best experts can not tell the pure-blooded from the grade Angora. This fact is a matter of considerable interest to breeders of goats, as an Angora buck costs $100 or over, while the common goat can be had almost for the asking. The fecundity of the Angora is not so great as that of the common goat, the Angora ewe giving birth to but one kid yearly.

As a source of profit the goats have turned out well. The wool is from four to six inches in length, silky and of beautiful texture. A full-grown animal will yield four pounds of wool, which will readily sell at $1 per pound. Just now the demand for this wool is not particularly lively, as the lustrous dress fabric into which it was at one time largely converted is out of vogue with fashionable ladies. It is therefore used almost exclusively in the manufacture of plush for upholstery purposes. When the kid is 6 months old its hide, undressed, is worth $3, and will sell readily for that amount to glove manufacturers. Kids on the farm in question meet with sudden death on that account at about that age with considerable regularity. When it is necessary to kill them the good lady has them chloroformed so that she may not hear the death cries of her little pets. The milk of the goat is much sought after by dyspeptics, by persons suffering from pulmonary troubles, and by otherwise delicate persons, and it brings a much greater price than cows' milk. As to their use for food little can be said, because the goat does not flesh up well, but the kid, when killed young, furnishes a fair amount of tender meat which some people like. It will never become a great delicacy in the market, or be in sufficient demand to become a source of income to the goat-raiser. There is nothing in the world so cheap to raise as goats, because they will find ample food in lots up here where other animals would starve to death. Acorns are a favorite article of food with them, and as these abound in the woods the cost for winter fodder is mainly confined to the trouble of gathering the acorns.—N. Y. Times.

An Aged Art Student.

The atrocity of some of the drawings makes it difficult sometimes for M. de Professeur to find anything to say, but I have only once seen a master absolutely silenced by bad work. On Monday morning, on arriving at the studio, we were all much surprised to see a very old woman in the heaviest widow's weeds, in the act of trying to arrange an easel. We concluded that she was making preparations for some grandchild, or, as her age could not have been far short of 90, some great grandchild even; but to our astonishment it soon became evident that she had not been working in the interests of any descendants, for she climbed nimbly enough on her stool, produced a carton and a sheet of common brown paper, and began to draw. She made the quaintest figure possible on the top of her high stool, in her poke bonnet and long cloak, and with her rusty old umbrella hanging on the back of her easel.

Every one was longing to see her work; the general rumor was that in her day she had been "excessivement forte," and was coming to amuse herself in her old age, as a veteran polishes up the old sword which he will never wield again. For the first two days it was impossible to find out what her drawing was like. We could see nothing but the big bonnet nodding backward and forward, and a little knotted claw in a black mitten moving industriously over the sheet of brown paper. any one approached the corner in which she had established herself, a long pallid nose would emerge from the recesses of the bonnet, and a pair of bright eyes would be anxiously fixed upon the intruder, while the little claw would furtively draw a piece of white paper over the study on which it had been so busily engaged. One day, however, the opportunity came to me. The old lady dropped her crayon holder, and I picked it up before she had time to get down for it. I talked to her a few minutes, and at last plucked up heart to remark that "doubtless Madame had already studied a great deal?" "But no, mademoiselle," was the reply; "I only now begin. I wish to copy at the Louvre, and it is always well to learn to draw a little before beginning." At this point my curiosity got the better of my politeness, and, stepping behind her easel I saw her work. She had drawn in the figure with ordinary lead pencil. She had picked out the nostrils and lips with red chalk, and in the center of each eye was a dazzling pip of white. Every law of proportion had been shamelessly violated; it was absolutely bad, and she was waiting for my criticism. I was dumb; no words could come to my rescue; but at length I framed a guileful compliment and was beginning to stammer out in response to her pathetic look of inquiry, when the sudden arrival of the professor sent me back to my own easel, and I was spared the utterance. We all watched him as he came up to the old lady. I knew what he was suffering. Had I not endured it myself a moment before? He gazed at the drawing, than at the bonnet, then at the drawing again. He was a tender hearted young man and reverenced old age, but the situation was too much for him. He glared abstractedly round the room for inspiration, and, finding none, he managed to gasp out a wild: "Continue, madam," and literally turned and ran. The old lady looked rather disappointed, but she applied herself to her drawing, and at the end of the week she departed and did not return. We heard that she thought the professor's counsels not very useful, and so went straight to the Louvre.—Magazine of Art.

Speaking of the Congo region Mr. Rice, a missionary, says: "The resources of the region are great and mainly undeveloped. Perhaps half of this vast territory is virgin forest of great thickness and value. Wherever I have been the great rubber wealth of the country is yet untouched. This will be accessible as soon as the natives find there is a market for it somewhere on the river. Considering that at present the rubber supply of America is inadequate, it is plain that sooner or later this equatorial supply will be tapped and immense fortunes realized. The quantity of ivory which lies unused and is, comparatively speaking, of no value in this region is untold."

Food for Unnursed Infants.

In August, 1885, the Prairie Farmer published the following formula for feeding cow's milk to infants, which is published in the JOURNAL by request, for the benefit of those interested. Cut it out and save it.

"First, good milk from healthy cows is to be used. That from cows in the first two or three months after dropping their calves is preferable. The milk, in all cases, is to stand in a cool place about five hours. For the first month the upper one-eighth of the milk is to be taken, which will secure much the larger percentage of cream. After the first month, the upper third only of the milk is to be used. For the first three months the food is to be given once in two hours. After that the period between feedings may be increased. The last column gives the amount of the mixture of milk and water to be consumed each 24 hours, by the average child:

Age of Child.	Milk.	Water.	Total.

Legal Notice.

Maj. Gassaway, a prominent San Antonio lawyer, succeeded in obtaining the acquittal of a horse thief, who was tried in the district Court in and for the county of Bexar.

"Major," said the acquitted man, "I don't know how to pay you for your kindness. I haven't got any money just now."

"Well now that you are foot-loose again you will soon have some money, or horses which is just as good, but in the meantime you mention my name to other members of the gang and friends, in case they need the services of an attorney in any of the frontier counties," said the lawyer.

Said sum of money to be used for the purchase of a fire engine and hose, and the building of suitable cisterns in the suburbs of said village of Charlevoix. MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the condition of a certain mortgage, made by Mary Blackbird to John A. Bacot, dated October 3d, A. D. 1883, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds, for the county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan, on the 3d day of October, A. D. 1884, in liber 8 of mortgages, on page 522, which said mortgage was on the 22d day of December, 1884, assigned by said John A. Bacot to Frederick W. Mayne, said assignment being on record in the Registers office for Charlevoix county, in liber 9 of mortgages on page 610, and on the 14th day of December 1885, was assigned by said Frederick W. Mayne to Hugh Miller, said assignment being recorded in the Registers office for Charlevoix county, in liber 13 of mortgages, on page 146, on which mortgage there is claimed to be due at the date of this notice the sum of Two hundred dollars, and sixty-five cents, as principal and interest, and no suit or proceedings at law having been instituted to recover the moneys secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof. Now, therefore, by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage and the statute in such case made and provided, notice is hereby given that on Saturday, the 19th day of June A. D. 1886, at one o'clock in the afternoon, I shall sell at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the front door of the town hall in the village of East Jordan, (that being the place where the Circuit Court for Charlevoix County is holden,) the premises described in said mortgage, or so much thereof as may be necessary to pay the amount due on said mortgage, with ten per cent interest, and all legal costs, together with an attorney's fee of fifteen Dollars, covenanted for therein, the premises being described in said mortgage as all that parcel of land, situate in the township of Hayes, in the county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan, and known and described as follows: The south west quarter (¼) of the south west quarter (¼) of section thirty-six (36) township thirty four (34) north of range seven (7) west, containing forty acres according to the United States survey.

Dated Charlevoix, Mich., March 15, 1886.

Assignee of Mortgagee.

Attorney for Assignee of Mortgagee.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Whereas, default has been made in the payment of the money secured by a mortgage, made and dated the 4th day of December, in the year A. D. one thousand eight hundred and eighty-four, by Nancy Hause to the Pine Lake Iron Company, a corporation created and existing under the laws of the state of Illinois, and doing business in the county of Charlevoix, in the state of Michigan, which mortgage was recorded in the office of the register of deeds of the said county of Charlevoix, in Book 9 of mortgages, at page 516, on the 1st day of January, in the year A. D. one thousand eight hundred and eighty-five, and the said mortgage is now owned by the said Pine Lake Iron Company. And whereas, the said Pine Lake Iron Company, as owner thereof, has exercised and doth now exercise the option to it given in and by said mortgage, and has declared and doth hereby declare the whole amount of principal secured by and mentioned in said mortgage, as well as the interest thereon to be now due and unpaid. And whereas, the amount claimed to be due on said mortgage at the date of this notice is the sum of one hundred and fifty-three dollars and ninety cents, ($153.90) principal and interest, and a further sum of fifteen dollars ($15.00) provided by law as an attorney's fee in the foreclosure of said mortgage, which is the whole amount claimed to be due thereon, and no suit or proceeding at law or in chancery having been instituted to recover the debt now remaining secured by the said mortgage or any part thereof, whereby the power of sale contained therein has become operative. Now, therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale contained therein and in pursuance of the statute in such case provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises therein described, at public auction to the highest bidder at the front door of the town hall in the township of South Arm, in the county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan, which is the place of holding the circuit court for said county, on Wednesday, the 4th day of August, A. D. 1886, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, which premises are described in said mortgage as lots twenty-six (26) and twenty-seven (27) in block eleven (11) in the Pine Lake Iron Company's plat of Ironton, situate in the township of Eveline, Charlevoix county, Michigan.

FIRE PROTECTION.

On June 7th there is to be held in this village a special election, to vote on the proposition to bond the village for two thousand five hundred dollars, to run ten years, for the purpose of buying a steam fire engine, hose, etc., and for building reservoirs at a distance from the lake.

From A. J. McLeod, chief of the department, we have received some points in regard to this transaction which the people should know before voting.

C. G. Carleton & Co., of Chicago, have offered to the village of Charlevoix a No. 4 Clapp & Jones steam fire engine, and one thousand feet of hose, guaranteed to be complete and perfect, and in first-class order, warranted for five years, for thirty-two hundred dollars, in payment for which they will take our hand engine, hose, and apparatus at the cost price to us, viz: about seven hundred dollars; and the balance in the bonds of the village, running ten years, at five per cent interest.

When it is considered that we shall probably never have a better chance to dispose of our old apparatus and get out of it what we have paid, and that we have already a good engine house to put a steam engine into to take care of it, and that there will be no bonus necessary to place the bonds on the market, the value of the investment will be apparent.

We do not believe that any man who has ever worked on the brakes more than ten minutes at a time will vote against the measure. Human bone and muscle is weak by the side of a stubborn fire. A well-kept machine is practically tireless. While there may be a little more expense in keeping up the steam engine, no one one can deny that the greater security will more than offset it. A more skilled engineer will perhaps be necessary on the new than on the old, but where there are so many good marine engineers as make their home in Charlevoix, there is no luck of available material for a competent engineer to look after the new machine.

In this connection it has been suggested that we do not want this engine, but do want water works. It is a long step from a hand engine to water works, with its interminable net-work of water pipes in our streets, probably costing ten times as much as we are now paying, before we could even begin to get any protection from fire, and requiring a constant out-lay in extension of water pipes, until the extreme limits were reached on every side. When we get fully ready for water works, we may be able to to trade a steam engine to as much advantage toward water works as we now trade our hand engine for a steamer.

This is not to be an experiment. The company have agreed in writing to deliver the engine in Charlevoix with a competent man to start it, and put it to as severe tests as our citizens deem necessary, before closing the contracts; and if not satisfactory, to take it away without a dollar of expense to the town; the only condition being that if it is sufficient for our needs, then we are to take it and deliver to their agent here the old apparatus and the bonds of the village without any further negotiation.

This is the situation as we understand it. If anyone has any further or different suggestions, our columns are open, and the people should know the whole truth of the matter before they vote, so that they can vote intelligently, and then if they decide to depend on their own mus- for an indefinite time and lose some valuable property in consequence, they will have only themselves to thank for it.

A Runaway and Narrow Escape.

On Saturday last a large powerful team, belonging to Oscar Krussel, was left in front of the blacksmith shop at the west end of Mitchell St., attached to a wagon, became frightened and dashed away at a fearful rate toward the bridge, and there overtook a double team and buggy containing Mrs. Bacot and daughter, of Pine Lake. A collision was the result. The daughter was thrown from the buggy and the mother jumped out; both were badly frightened but neither injured. The team ran into the railing of the bridge and was caught by Mr. VanDusen, who happened to be close by. The horses were uninjured, but the wagon and buggy were both broken. The ladies had a narrow escape. Krussell will probably fasten his team hereafter.—Petoskey Democrat.

The Women's Foreign Missionary Convention.

On Friday, June 21st, at 2 o'clock, p. m., the third annual meeting of the Women's Foreign Missionary Society of the Grand Traverse district, convened at the M. E. church in this place. There were present from abroad 24 delegates and 15 visitors.

The meeting was characterized by a spirit of earnest devotion, unity, promptness, and consecration. All unite in declaring it the most profitable session ever held. The program embraced recitations, readings, and essays, and was fully carried out.

The subjects rendered were not only of a high literary character, but exhibited intense earnestness and deep devotion to the work.

Mrs. J. T. Iddings, in behalf of the auxiliary of this place, welcomed the delegates and visitors to a warm place in our hearts and homes, while they should remain among us; expressing the hope that we should receive inspiration and help in our work by their presence. This was appropriately responded to by Mrs. M. J. Johnson, of Boyne.

Mrs. E. A. Hoag, conference secretary, was present, adding greatly to the interest of the occasion. Those who heard her interesting address on Sunday evening will not soon forget the truths of her earnest words.

The pulpit Sunday morning was filled by one of the venerable pioneers of this region. Rev. S. Steele, who preached from the words of St. Paul, as recorded in Hebrews 10-22. They were so clearly stated and forcibly illustrated as to leave a lasting impression upon the hearts of his listeners.

The following persons were formally presented to the society for membership: Rev. S. Steele, of Northport, Rev. G. W. Howe, and Miss Meech (formerly conference secretary in Kansas) of Norwood, and Rev. Mr. Clark, Rev. J. T. Iddings, Mrs. C. Y. Cook and Mr. J. S. Dixon, of Charlevoix.

The last and closing session on Monday morning was difficult to close because of the interest of all present, which was expressed by one, in those words of divine writ,—we have received the best wine at the last of the feast.

Among the resolutions passed was one expressive of the appreciation to all who had assisted in entertainment or in any way added to the interest of the meeting, and their pleasure, not forgetting the pleasant ride upon these beautiful waters on Saturday evening. COMMITTEE.

A Distinguished Visitor.

Manistique Sunday Sun.

Last Wednesday evening, on the arrival of the Van Raalte, there stepped off the boat onto the dock Lieut. Gov. Buttars. Mr. B. is a live business man of our neighboring town of Charlevoix, being interested in the North Star flouring mills at that place, and came here in the interest of that business, having for his object the introduction of the excellent flour made by that mill into this market. This mill, which is as fine as any in the state, and has all the latest improvements there is in the flouring business, was only completed last fall. On account of his quiet unassuming manners, but few of our citizens were aware that there was in their midst one of the state's foremost public men. Mr. B. sold several large sample orders of his flour here—one for 50 barrels—and paved the way for an extensive custom from this place, we think.

Accompanying Gov. Buttars was Mr. S. M. See, who is the manager and one of the largest stockholders in a sash and door factory at Charlevoix. The real object that brought these gentlemen here was to endeavor to have the route of the propeller, A. C. Van Raalte, extended to Charlevoix. Everything seemed to be favorable for the carrying out of the gentlemen's project, as it is only about an hour's run for the boat from Petoskey to Charlevoix. If the route be lengthened, Mr. See will purchase all of the lumber needed for his sash and door factory of the companies here, and his extensive establishment, which employs a large number of men, will open up a new market for much of our lumber. During his brief stay here, Mr. See did purchase considerable lumber for his factory, which will be shipped at once to Charlevoix.

This scheme is a grand one, and we see no reason why the necessary arrangements for its successful carrying out can not be made. There are several hardwood mills at Charlevoix but the scarcity of pine over there necessitates making a move of some kind to secure the commodity of which we have plenty and to spare.

Wedding Bells.

The occasion of the wedding of Dr. F. E. Foster and Miss Kate Pickerd at the residence of Mr. A. E. Pickerd, on State street, last Wednesday evening, May 12th, was a very pleasant affair. A few intimate friends, and the immediate relatives of the parties, witnessed the ceremony, which was performed by Rev. E. G. Bryant in a brief and appropriate service. After congratulations had been tendered, a collation was served, during and after which, social intercourse was indulged in until a late hour. During the evening the band serenaded the bridal couple, and discoursed some of their best music.

It is said that this is the first wedding that has yet taken place on either of the two business streets of East Jordan. State street thus claims the honor of first furnishing a marriage. The following is a list of the presents:

Rube Glenn, silver cream jug; Mr. and Mrs. Will Porter, silver cake basket; Mr. and Mrs. G. Stanley, towels and silver sugar scoop Miss Allie Glenn, majolica tea set; Mr. Fred Boosinger, damask table cloth and dozen napkins; Mr. and Mrs. A. E. Pickerd, fruit dish and plates; Mr. Chas. Dunham, hanging lamp Miss Violet Ward, pair vases; Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Barton, silver cake basket, napkins and towels; Mrs. B. B. Ellis, large table lamp; Miss Jennie Pickerd, toilet mats; Mrs. S. Death of Henry Ingalls.

Mr. Henry Ingalls died at his home in Banks last Friday, of consumption, aged 41 years, after having suffered failing health a long time. During the war he served his country in Co. K, 23d Michigan Infantry, and at the time of his death was a respected member of Baxter Post G. A. R. of this place. He was also one of the pioneers of this region, having lived in Banks nearly twenty years. The funeral services were held at the family residence last Monday, under the auspices of Baxter Post G. A. R. which turned out in a body to pay their last tribute to their late comrade. The sermon was delivered by Rev. J. T. Iddings, and music was furnished by the Congregational choir, assisted by Mrs. F. J. Meech. On the casket was a handsome silver plate, inscribed with his name, age, company and regiment. The funeral was attended by a large concourse of neighbors and friends, who will cherish his memory as an honorable and worthy citizen.

Circuit Court.

On Tuesday morning Judge Ramsdell and the several attorneys and jurymen interested, assembled at Boyne City, that place having been named in the notices issued by the clerk and sheriff as the place for holding court. In view of the existing complications, Judge Ramsdell consented to try only those cases in which stipulations were made in writing, signed by the attorneys for the litigants, waiving all question of jurisdiction, and the legality of the present session. Only two cases were tried, all the others being carried over for lack of unanimous consent of the attorneys.

In answer to the objections raised against holding court at Boyne City, Judge Ramsdell stated that he did not consider that the legal place for holding court; and that he could just as well hold court "at Charlevoix, Norwood, or in the northest corner of of the county under a hemlock tree, so far as jurisdiction was concerned."

Stay of Proceedings in County Seat Contest.

On Tuesday morning a writ of certiorari from the supreme court was served upon County Clerk Thatcher, as clerk of the board of supervisors, staying any further proceedings in the removal of the county seat until the proceedings of the board of canvassers shall be reviewed by the court, and their legality passed upon

This resolution was adopted: "Resolved, That if our Government refuses to send immediately armed vessels to protect our vessels, we deem it expedient to arm and equip our vessels for their protection." A fishing schooner left Portland for the fishing grounds, fully armed.

The identification of the garments may lead to new arrests.

Judge Rogers, of Chicago, in charging the Grand Jury authorized to take charge of the cases of the murderous anarchists, told them that no public speaker had a right to advise murder or arson, and that one could be held responsible for the result of incendiary language. Said he:

> * * * I refer to these constitutional rights because some men who are so inconsistent as to say that there should be no law and no such rights as that, yet claim the protection of that right in its broadest sense—and, indeed, interpret to suit their own mind—that a man may get up in a public speech and advise murder, arson, the destruction of property, and the injury of people and their lives. That is a wild license that the Constitution of this country has never recognized, any more than it has been recognized in the worst despotisms of old monarchical Europe, and I hope and you hope never will recognize. A man must be held responsible for his acts, and he must as well be held responsible for his speech.

POLITICAL.

The session of Congress is so far advanced now that some question has been raised as to the calling up of the tariff bill at this session, reports a Washington dispatch. "It has been suspected by some people that Colonel Morrison intended to let his bill rest until next winter, when the Congressional elections would have passed, and when he could have the whole session for the discussion of the bill, but all the speculation about the postponement of the matter is idle. The bill will be called up when the other business of the House will admit of it without its interfering too much with appropriation bills. A tariff bill takes precedence of everything. THE INDUSTRIAL OUTLOOK.

Telegrams to Bradstreet's indicate that the industrial agitation in favor of fewer hours' work daily has largely disappeared elsewhere than in Chicago. At New York it has been a practical failure, while at Chicago the attitude of manufacturers in several leading lines in locking out some 47,000 employes who demanded a shorter working day promises to arrest the progress of the movement. Supplementary reports show that within about two weeks there have been strikes at leading industrial centers to secure fewer daily hours of labor aggregating 200,000 employes, that 150,000 have secured concessions without striking, and that not over 42,000 of the 200,000 strikers have secured their ends. This indicates that over 190,000 employes are working fewer hours per day than one month ago, a small proportion of the total number claiming to be interested. CONGRESSIONAL.

The Work of the Senate and House of Representatives.

A PETITION from citizens of Iowa, praying for the abolition of the American House of Lords, was presented in the Senate on the 14th inst. A bill was passed to authorize the Kansas City and Gulf Road to lay its tracks through Indian Territory. Bills were also passed for public buildings at Lafayette, Indiana, Fort Dodge, Iowa, and St. Paul, besides largely extending the limit of previous appropriations for other points. Henry F. Severns, of Kalamazoo, Michigan, was nominated by the President as successor to the late S. L. Withey as United States Judge for the Western District of Michigan. D. C. Fulton was nominated United States Marshal for the Western District of Wisconsin. The business of the House was confined to debate on the pension bill, which merged itself into a tariff talk before adjournment was reached.

AFTER a spirited debate, the House of Representatives, on the 15th inst., passed a bill to establish a sub-treasury at Louisville. Mr. Morrison caused to be read a letter from the Treasurer of the United States, expressing the opinion that the functions of the sub-treasuries at St. Louis, Baltimore, Cincinnati, New Orleans, and Chicago might be performed by national banks with greater economy and much less risk than under the present system. The Senate was not in session.

SENATOR FRYE'S bill authorizing retaliation for the recent action of the Dominion of Canada in excluding United States vessels from certain privileges in Canadian ports passed the Senate on the 17th inst. The Senate confirmed the nomination of Mrs. Thompson, Postmistress at Louisville, Ky., after debating over it for an hour. Senator Blackburn made a long speech against confirmation, but secured only five negative votes besides his own. The House passed the urgent deficiency appropriation bill, and by a vote of 293 to 8 the Senate bill providing for the study of the nature of alcoholic drinks and narcotics, and of their effects upon the human system, by the pupils in the public schools of the Territories and of the District of Columbia, and in the Military and Naval Academies and Indian and colored schools in the Territories of the United States. Mr. Bouteille introduced in the House a bill appropriating $50,000 for the erection in Washington of a bronze monument to the late Edwin M. Stanton.

THE pension bill was laid before the Senate and discussed on the 18th inst. Senator Coke addressed the Senate in support of the labor arbitration bill. Mr. Logan gave notice that he would offer a substitute for the House arbitration bill. The Senate confirmed the nomination of Gen. Rosecrans as Register of the Treasury. In the House Mr. Blount (Ga.), from the Committee on Post-offices and Post Roads, reported back the postoffice appropriation bill, with Senate amendments, and it having been referred to the committee of the whole, the House went into committee for the purpose of considering the amendments. Mr. Blount confined his remarks to that clause which is known as the "subsidy amendment," and made an argument in opposition to it.

THE pension bill, which makes the minimum allowance four dollars per month, and grants a pension to every honorably discharged soldier "who is or shall become disabled from any cause not the result of his own fault" passed the Senate on the 19th of May by a vote of 31 to 14. Mr. Logan presented in the Senate a substitute for the labor-arbitration bill which recently passed the House. It provides for the appointment by the President of a commission of arbitration, to consist of five members, one from the Democratic organization, one from the Republican organization, one who is not recognized as a member of either of the two parties, one thoroughly acquainted with railroad management, but who is in no way financially interested in any railroad or transportation company, and one who is identified with and thoroughly understands the conditions of laboring people. The President sent the following nominations to the Senate: Register of the land office at Olympia, W. T., John Y. Ostrander, Postmasters—William Furlong, at Freeport, Pa.; Daniel McCarthy, at Braddock, Pa.; James P. Moran, Jr., at Waukegan, Ill.; James H. Looney, at Hancock, Mich.; William M. Green, at West Bay City, Mich.; Silas C. Bennett, at Georgetown, Col.; Anton Klaus, at Juneau, W. T. In the House, a bill was reported from the committee on the electoral count, proposing a constitutional amendment creating and defining the office of second vice president. It provides that in case of the removal by death or otherwise of both the President and Vice President the office of President shall devolve upon the Second Vice President, who shall be voted for in distinct ballots by the Electoral College. In case of the death or removal of the Vice President from office, or when he exercises the office of President, the Second Vice President shall be the President of the Senate, and shall so act, but he shall have no vote unless the Senate is equally divided.

Our Ex-Presidents.

The Drawer referred some time ago to the young man who is one day to be President of the United States, and the desirability of his fitting himself for this position. But on reflection the subject assumes a graver aspect. What the young man ought to be thinking of is his ability to become an ex-President. Anybody can be President who gets votes enough: the ability to get the votes is quite distinct from the qualifications to fill the office. And when a man is in, thanks to the excellence of our machinery, he cannot do much injury in four years, except to himself and his party. Moderate ability will carry him through respectably. But it requires a great man to be a successful ex-President. The office of President is a very exalted one. And when the man lays it down and retires and stands alone, and people compare him with the position he has just left, he must have very large proportions to stand the comparison. This aspect of the case has not been enough considered. Men are very anxious to get the office, and their friends push them for it, without thinking of the figure the successful man may make when his term is over. The fact is, that in the contrast he may appear much more insignificant than if he had remained in private life. There has been a great deal of talk lately about giving the ex-Presidents a pension in order to place them in a position of dignity, and enable them to maintain something of the state the people have been accustomed to see them in. It has been often remarked that a king out of business becomes an object of compassion, even if he has invested money in foreign funds. Nothing but the possession of great qualities can save him from contempt. It is so with an ex-President. The practical suggestion to be made, therefore, is that the young man to whom we have alluded should fit himself to be an ex-President. If he cannot attain the character and the qualities needed for that, he may be sure that the office of President will be but a hollow satisfaction.—Charles Dudley Warner, in Harper's Magazine.

MAXWELL'S YARN.

He Gave Preller Chloroform in Medical Treatment—The Fatal Result.

[St. Louis dispatch.]

St. Louis newspapers print a statement made by H. M. Brooks, alias Maxwell, now on trial for the murder of C. Arthur Preller, which will constitute his only defense, and which will be urged by his attorneys in the trial. In a word, he will confess to killing Preller by accident, while acting as his physician, and that, being excited and frightened, he concealed, instead of making known the fact of death. He declares he has always wanted to tell the facts, and only refrained by advice of his attorneys. The following is Brooks' statement:

"Mr. Preller was suffering from an acute malady, for which I had previously prescribed, mixing the medicine myself from the bottles in the medicine chest I carried with me; but his ailment had reached a stage when it was necessary for me to perform an operation." Brooks then tells of the purchase of chloroform, which was spilled in the sink on Sunday afternoon while he was washing the instruments preparatory to the operations; of his going to Fernow's drug-store and buying more, denying incidentally the statements that he there showed evidences of hurry and excitement, and continues:

"About 5 p. m. we began the operation. I administered the chloroform in the usual way, holding a saturated cloth to the nose. Mr. Preller passed through the first stage all right. It took several minutes, I don't know exactly how long. Then he entered the second stage, and here the terrible result came. I discovered, too late, that he was dying. Imagine my horror when this fact dawned upon me. I was wild with fright, but had presence of mind enough to cut the shirt and undershirt from the body, and, getting a wet towel, I beat him around the neck and shoulders for a half hour or more. I did not give up until I was ready to drop from exhaustion, and my efforts were not relaxed until he had been dead some time. All the clothes he had on at the time were his shirt and undershirt; he had stripped for the operation. What did I do when I saw my friend was dead? What could I do? I didn't know what to do except drink, and I drank freely. I drank everything I could get—wine, whisky, everything. What were my thoughts? I had not any. All I remember, that I drew on a pair of drawers—the first thing that fell into my hands—and put the body into my trunk, from which I had removed everything. I put it in the trunk an hour after Preller's death. What was done besides this I have no recollection of. Liquor and consternation had possession of me, and I knew only that my feelings were those of the utmost horror. I remained in my room that night—the same room in which the remains were—and it would be a lie for me to say I slept, for I did not, and I was glad when morning came. What I did after leaving my room you know, for it has all been printed."

He says he supposed the post-mortem, when the body was found, would disclose the nature of the operation and the cause of death. According to his own story the cutting off of Preller's mustache, the inscription about "traitor" found in the trunk, and all the other queer incidentals connected with the tragedy are to be attributed to his liquor and fear-crazed condition after the fatality.

LAID LOW BY LEADEN BULLETS.

Martinsville, Va., the Scene of a Bloody and Fatal Combat Between Angry Citizens.

[Martinsville (Va.) telegram.]

No greater tragedy has occured in Virginia in a decade than that which fills this town with gloom and excitement. In a fight on a crowded street many shots were fired, and as a result Jacob Terry, a young farmer, is dead, and the life-blood of his two brothers, J. K. Terry and Benjamin Terry, is fast ebbing away. Colonel P. D. Spencer, a prominent business man and manufacturer; Tarlton Brown, proprietor of Brown's tobacco warehouse; B. L. Jones, a saloon-keeper; R. L. Gregory, a hotel-clerk, and Sandy Martin, a negro, are all dangerously wounded. All the parties are prominent in the business life of this place and well known in Southern Virginia.

The affair was due to the posting of an anonymous circular seriously reflecting on W. K. Terry, a young business man, and his father, the late William Terry, a prominent citizen. Yesterday morning Terry telegraphed for his two brothers, J. K. and Benjamin, living at Aiken Station, twenty miles away. They arrived at 1 p. m., and after a brief consultation went to the printing office and demanded the author of the card. The printer told them it was Col. P. D. Spencer, a member of the town board, and one of the leading business men.

Last evening, soon after the tobacco factory had closed for the day and the streets were filled with operatives returning from their work, the Terry brothers started in the direction of Spencer's factory. When about half way they were met by Spencer, with his brother and several friends. W. K. Terry addressed a few words to Spencer; who told him not to shoot. Just then some one fired a pistol and precipitated the fight. Forty shots were fired. W. K. Terry was shot from the rear, the ball entering near his spine and lodging in his right breast. Jacob Terry was shot through the abdomen and fell dead. Benjamin Terry was shot through the neck and in the body. Spencer was shot in the hip, and his business partner, Tarlton Brown, received two balls in the groin. Gregory and Martin were hit by stray balls.

The Terrys are well known, and occupy a high social position. None of them is married. All the business houses in Martinsville are closed to-day.

GEN. SHERIDAN says the malaria he caught when he accompanied President Arthur to the Yellowstone, three years ago, still hangs on and returns to give him a shake every seventh and twenty-first day as regular as clock-work.

SMALL CHILDREN ROASTED.

[Akron (Ohio) special.]

For three years past the widow of Thomas Mooney has lived in a little frame cottage on the hillside one mile north of this city. A forty-acre plot of land gave Mrs. Mooney and her seven fatherless children a meager livelihood. Last evening the widow retired in an up-stairs room with her five children, the eldest twelve years of age and the youngest a babe in arms. In another room slept her grown-up children, Lizzie and Patrick, while in the attic was her brother-in-law, Lawrence Mooney, an old man of 60 years.

About midnight Mrs. Mooney awoke and discovered her small bed-chamber filled with smoke. She rose hastily, seized her babe in her arms, and cried to the frightened children who were now awake: "Follow me; follow your mother." She made an effort to escape by the stairway, but the flames and smoke rushing up from below stifled her, and she returned and jumped from the window with the babe still clinging to her breast. In the meanwhile the fire, which had originated from a defective flue in the kitchen, enveloped the little building in flames. The two grown children and the aged man escaped with difficulty. When they reached the open air the heartrending cries of the four little ones in the room above were heard, and the old man rushed into the burning dwelling to save them. The flames drove him back, but not until he was frightfully burned.

The house was rapidly consumed, and the cries of the four children became fainter and fainter, and, at last, as the fire broke from every window, their cries ceased, and all was still.

This morning all that remains of the four children consists of a tub full of bones and masses of burned flesh.

Lawrence Mooney, the old man who so heroically endeavored to save the children, lies at the point of death. His flesh hangs in shreds upon his body, while the blood is oozing from his finger-tips; his eyesight is gone, and his gray beard is singed to a bright yellow. His sufferings are terrible. He cannot possibly recover.

The scene about the ruins of the hillside cottage this morning beggars all description. The mother, whose four little ones were burned to a crisp, stands about the charred embers of the dwelling with a stolid look in her face. She has grown aged in a night. There is not a tear in her eye. Her grief goes beyond the perceptible emotions. She will neither converse nor receive the sympathy of her neighbors, and it is feared her reason has been destroyed forever.

DAVID DAVIS.

Ex-Justice of the Supreme Court and Ex-United States Senator.

The venerable Judge David Davis has recently been suffering from malignant carbuncle, so that death was at one time expected. We are glad to learn, however, that he is recovering, with a prospect of complete restoration to health.

David Davis was born in Cecil County, on the eastern shore of Maryland, on March 9, 1815. His family was of Welsh extraction, and had first settled in that region early in the last century. He was an only child. He received his educational training at Kenyon College, Ohio, where he graduated in 1832. From college he went directly to the Harvard Law School, and as soon as he finished the course there removed to the West and settled in Bloomington, Ill., where he was admitted to the bar in 1835, and commenced at once the practice of his profession. He was soon brought into public life, and as early as 1844 was elected a Representative in the State Legislature. In 1847 he was a delegate to the Constitutional Convention, and a year later was elected a Judge of one of the Circuit Courts of Illinois. This office he held by repeated elections until he finally resigned it in 1862, when he was appointed by President Lincoln a Judge of the Supreme Court of the United States. He remained on the Supreme Bench until March 5, 1877, when he resigned to take his seat in the United States Senate, to which office he had been elected by the Democrats and Independents in the Illinois Legislature. During his service as United States Senator he maintained strict independence and allied himself with the organization of neither party in that legislative body. He was elected presiding officer of the Senate soon after Vice President Arthur assumed the duties of a higher office following the death of President Garfield, and continued to hold this position up to the expiration of his term of office in 1883, when he was succeeded by Senator Cullom. Soon after his retirement from the Senate Judge Davis married, and he has since been living very quietly at his home in Bloomington, Ill.

"THERE is a perfect rage," says the London Queen, "for wearing flowers in the hair. Flower nigrettes are the fashion for the moment, and all other forms of ornament are at a proportionate discount. A tuft of osprey is introduced among the natural blooms, and owners of single diamonds have an opportunity of displaying them as dew-drops sparkling on freshly gathered roses or lilies. On the corsage, too, large sprays of flowers and foliage are arranged, and long, rich trails ornament the skirt.

RAIN'S RAVAGES.

A Flood in Shawnee Creek Causes a Terrible Disaster at Xenia, Ohio.

A Total Loss of Life Estimated at Nearly Thirty—Much Destruction of Property.

A cloud-burst at Xenia, Ohio, on the night of Wednesday, the 13th inst., speedily filled all streams in the vicinity, and the water, laden with logs, rushing into a railway culvert, quickly formed a dam of huge dimensions, which was burst by the pressure of the water. The flood, when released, swept through the town, carrying off everything in its path. In some instances whole families were drowned. The number drowned or missing is placed at twenty-seven, while the loss to property will reach $100,000. A Xenia dispatch gives the following details of the terrible affair: It seemed as if a waterspout had burst over the place, the streets and alleys running full like rivers, and with a powerful current, carrying everything before it. The point of danger that threatened to engulf the city and afterward did prove to be the source of wholesale drowning of the people and destruction of property was Archer Creek, a small stream that runs through the town and into a culvert under the Pan Handle Railway depot. This stream became so greatly swollen on account of the heavy rain that the culvert was taxed to its utmost to give the water vent, and driftwood began coming down the swollen stream and was caught at the culvert until a great dam was formed. A number of citizens, perceiving the danger that threatened them, went out in the storm and worked earnestly to dislodge the timber and drift, but the force of the current was such that they became jammed in so tightly that it was impossible to dislodge them. The water backed up and soon overflowed its barriers and formed a mighty reservoir. In a short time the embankment gave way under the pressure, and the huge volume of water that stretched out like a sea broke over with a sullen roar and ran like a mill-race through the streets of the city, tearing down trees and washing away houses in its mad flight of destruction. The cries of the people in the flooded district were awful to hear. Many acts of heroism in saving the drowning are reported. Bonfires were lighted and the people worked all night. Twenty bodies were recovered and there are still a number missing. Whole families perished in the flooded districts. There was great damage to property all round in the country, and the extent of damage cannot now be even approximated.

The people residing in quarters not covered by the flood made up rescuing parties and by the hundreds ran to the scene of desolation and death. The storm in the meantime raged with unparalleled fury, and persons out on missions of mercy endeavoring to save the unfortunate were almost carried off their feet by the wild sweep of the rain and wind.

The work of finding the bodies was prosecuted all night. The Mayor's office was turned into a morgue, and twenty-two bodies were conveyed there. The scenes were heartrending.

The loss of houses is placed at sixty-eight, and it is believed the death-list will reach thirty. Appeals for aid have been sent out by the authorities, and donations are asked for in behalf of the stricken people. The great majority of those thrown out of their homes were poor people, and aid is earnestly asked in their behalf.

STORM-DAMAGE ELSEWHERE.

The storm which did such fearful work at Xenia was far-reaching, extending throughout Northern and Central Illinois, Central Indiana, and Central Ohio. The winds blew a hurricane and the rain fell in torrents, flooding streams, and washing away bridges, culverts, and farm fences. At Dayton, Ohio, the rainfall measured four and a half inches in three hours. It is roughly estimated that the damage to property in Ohio alone will reach $500,000. Many of the railroads were seriously crippled by washouts. Indiana suffered severely from this phenomenal meteorological disturbance. At Kempton many houses were partially wrecked, one man killed, and several wounded. At Wilkinson the storm blew down all the buildings in town except three. Samuel White was killed, and his wife was fatally injured. A boy named Shaffer was also killed, and about twenty persons seriously hurt, several of whom will die. At Lafayette the Court House and the Roman Catholic and German Methodist Churches were badly damaged, two large carpenter shops burned to the ground by the lightning, and numbers of smaller buildings demolished. At Attica the buildings of the Attica Milling Company, the Revere House, the Hess and Harvey Carriage Factory, the depot, and nearly a hundred dwellings and smaller business houses were destroyed. Over 700 people are homeless, four were killed outright and two more fatally injured, while a large number are seriously hurt. The aggregate losses at Attica will be in the neighborhood of $200,000. Seventy buildings were hit hard, being half demolished or entirely annihilated. One of the many losses at Attica will be of valuable shade trees, the district swept over being almost entirely devastated in this respect. At Williamsport several houses were wrecked, two persons killed, and a number badly injured. At Logansport property was damaged to the amount of $10,000. In the vicinity of Richmond houses and barns were wrecked, whole woods ruined, some stock killed, and one barn destroyed by lightning. Reports from Tipton, Taylor's, Monon, and intermediate points show great loss of property, live stock, and crops. Many persons are reported injured from all points, and it seems miraculous that the loss of life was so small. The Wabash River inundated the crops along its valley and ruined them. In Illinois the storm was not so violent, though much damage was inflicted in certain sections. Near East Lynn, Rossville, and Potomac a number of houses were demolished and five persons killed. The country was deluged by the tremendous rainfall. The damage by the storm in Jo Daviess County will exceed $20,000. Buildings were unroofed, glass broken, and fences leveled. Several houses were wrecked in the vicinity of Jacksonville, and two or three people seriously injured.

He has shed his skin from the roots of his hair to the bottom of his feet, and his hands are yet tender. His hair has begun to fall out, and his finger nails have become loosened and are giving place to the growth of new ones.

—Nathan Tubbs, a resident of Novi, attempted to shoot his sister at Northville. He then returned home, told his neighbors what he had done, and said he meant to commit suicide. They tried to dissuade him, but he persisted, gave a neighbor $1,000, and when a deputy sheriff came to arrest him for his Northville crime he was locked up in the barn. As the deputy approached the barn a shot was heard and Tubbs was found dead inside, having blown the top of his head off with a shotgun.

—Tim Pangburn, at Michigan Center, was exercising a colt, having a rope about forty feet long attached to the bridle. One of Tim's legs is lame from the effects of rheumatism, and he is not as active as he used to be. In some manner the rope became wound about his sound leg and he was thrown to the ground, which startled the colt and it ran, dragging Tim for several rods, till it was caught by one of his neighbors. Dr. Turner was called and found no bones broken, but he was bruised from head to foot and strained in several places, and will probably be laid up for some time.

—Over fifty Polish families of Detroit are making preparations to join Father Kolasinski in Minden, Dak. Kolasinski has charge of a parish there, and his representations of the cheap land, good soil, and general advantages for poor men have induced many of his adherents to follow him. It is believed that a large number of other Polish families will emigrate to Dakota in the near future. Father Joseph Dombrowski, the priest appointed to fill the vacancy in St. Albertus' Church occasioned by the removal, has left. It is expected that Dombrowski's visit to Rome will result in a final settlement of the church troubles in Detroit. He will be absent about three months.

—An embryo Justice of the Peace in Missaukee County delivered the following charge to the jury in the trial of his first case: "Gentlemen of the jury, charging a jury is a new business to me, as this is my first case. You have heard all the evidence as well as myself, and you have also heard what the counsel for the plaintiff has told you. If you believe it, your verdict will be for the plaintiff; but if, on the other hand, you believe what the counsel for the defendant has told you, your verdict will be for the defendant. But if you are like me, and don't believe what either of them have said, then I'll be —— if I know what you will do. Constable, take charge of the jury."

—If you ask almost any saloon-keeper what bock beer is he will tell you without hesitation that he does not know, but that there is no extra charge for drinking it. Other saloon-men affirm, however, that all there is of it is that more malt and hops are used, and that one glass of bock will cause the deadly effect that two glasses of ordinary beer would—this being a clear saving of five cents every drink. Others again claim that the warm spring weather makes the beer become bock; and still others that the difference rests entirely with the colored lithographs in the windows representing a goat going it. Finally, it is claimed that bock beer is brewed to celebrate the invention of beer, some time about the year 1. A man is permitted to drink the beer and believe anything he chooses about it as long as he plunks a nickel on the counter.—Detroit Free Press.

Girls and Wool-Hat Boys.

The face of my audience looks different from that of the meeting of mothers. But you are only young old ladies after all. This bright hair will soon begin to silver, and girlhood will come only in memory. I have selected this practical verse. This is a practical old world: "But watch thou in all things, endure affliction, and do the work of an evangelist."

"We forget the words of father and mother during life, but their last words are dear to us. These are the words of St. Paul to Timothy, and through him to us. We are enjoined to watch. The sentinel watches and saves the army from its enemy. Keep a watchful spirit. Without it we will be rushed upon by sinful enemies and destroyed. First, watch your company. An angel from heaven could not keep some company that girls do in Chicago and not be corrupt. Pure, noble girls stand alone on this earth for beauty and glory. Boys go in bad company, but the hope of this land is in its pure girls. Oh, be vigilant, guard your parlor. Beware with whom and how you go to entertainments. The best way to go is not to go at all."

Mr. Jones then indulged in a long description and denunciation of the perfumed young man. He also described a chase of young ladies after a spiderlegged dude.

"Tell me what your associations are, young lady, and I will give you a glimpse of your history. Is he an exquisite dancer? Does he wear perfect pants? Is his hair parted elegantly in the middle? Does he clerk in a big establishment at $60 a month and spend $30 a month for board, $30 a month for carriage hire and $20 a month for theaters? Does he convince you that he has not got a stingy bone in his body? Do you think he is 'just nice?' Where does he get his money? A merchant once asked an employe who was getting $50 a month and spending $175 per month this question. He said he got it from his stepmother. He is not worth your hand, girls, if he is running on that schedule. Old age and married life will bring penury and want.

"I am in love with these wool-hat and jean-pants boys. He starts at $30 a month, sticks to business and his wool hat till he gets a thousand a year, then gets to be junior partner, then senior partner, and finally owns the whole block where he does business. You stylish girls do not like him. Well, he likes you just about as well, for when he wanted a wife he went back to his country home and married plain Mary Bower, and for a few years it was love in a cottage, and now he has a residence on Michigan avenue. Girls, tie to these wool-hat boys; they will take care of you.

"A beautiful girl of this city arranged to attend a wine supper last week. When the time came she sent word, 'I can't go; my heart has been touched at the meetings.' Now she has brought three of her associates here with her. What do you want of wine suppers, oh, mothers? No matter what the devil may owe you, if he sends you about three drunken sons-in-law he will have paid all the debt, and you will receipt in full.

"Then, girls, watch these tempers. If a girl is ugly to her mother she will make it warm in her own home, if she ever has one."—Sam Jones' Sermon to Girls.

Swiss Acquisitiveness.

Everywhere throughout Switzerland the traveler finds people who wish to sell him something, or who continually volunteer to do something for which they wish him to pay. As he drives along the country roads, little girls throw bunches of wild flowers into his carriage and then run by its side expecting some money in return. By the roads de, in the most lonely places, he will find women and girls sitting behind little tables on which they are making lace, which, with a collection of tiny Swiss chalets, and articles of carved wood, they are very eager to sell. When the road passes near a precipitous mountain side, he will find a man with a long Alpine horn, who awakens the echoes and expects some pennies. At another place a fenced pathway leads into a little wood and a notice informs him that he may enter and get a view of the Black Falls for four cents.

When I was at Grindelwald, a little village among the Higher Alps, I went part way up a mountain, to visit a glacier. In the one which I visited, a long tunnel had been cut, and this led to a fairly large room hewn in the very heart of the glacier, and called the Ice Grotto. There were lamps placed about, by which this frigid passage was dimly lighted. The walls and roof of the tunnel were transparent for a considerable distance, and I could look into the very substance of the clear blue ice around me. I followed my guide to the end of the tunnel, and into the grotto, which was lighted by a single lamp. The moment I set foot into this wonderful chamber, with walls, roof, and floor of purest ice, I heard a queer tinkling and thumping in one corner, and looking there, I saw two old women, each playing on a doleful little zither. They looked like two horrible old witches of the ice. Of course I knew that they were playing for my benefit; and I wondered if they always sat there in that enormous refrigerator, waiting for the visitors who might enter and give them a few centimes in return for their mournful strumming. But when I went out, I found that the old women soon followed, and I suppose they go into the glacier and ens once themselves in their freezing retreat, whenever they see a tourist coming up the mountain side.—*Frank R. THE JOURNAL.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

Does It Pay?

Let us admit that a high protective tariff creates certain manufactures and that without such a tariff there would be none. What are the compensations and what are the losses?

The visible results of this kind of industry are tremendous aggregations of capital and immense communities of workingmen, women, and children, mostly drawn from the overcrowded centers of Europe. Of late years the tendency has been to more and more luxury on the part of employers and deeper and deeper degradation on the part of employes. According to the census of 1880 three-fourths of the people employed in our manufacturing industries are of foreign birth. In scores of places where factories abound the life of the people is not American. They speak no English They are unacquainted with our government, our politics, our history, or our literature. Thousands of them have been assisted to come here by employers anxious to secure labor at its cheapest rate. They have lowered the standard of living, and by their fierce competition they have driven from the very pursuits which they now follow the American born or reared workers who cannot meet them on equal terms.

The American mechanic was at his best when the tariff was for revenue. Assuming that it has been the protective tariff which has built up these great shops, brought these hosts of aliens here and established an industrial system which has proved a moral and political cancer, it may well be asked, in view of the unpleasant disclosurers now made almost daily, if we have not a little too much tariff, too much "American labor" of a certain kind and too many smoke-stack monuments to government pampered industry. Production that is natural and healthful does not degrade its labors. If there are certain things which Europe, with its beggared populations, can produce and sell to us cheaper than we can make them ourselves why not let them do it?—Chicago Herald.

Is the Boycott Legal?

MILWAUKEE, May 21.—A suit preparing which will make its appearance in the courts within a few days promises to be of much importance to business men and the laboring classes, inasmuch as it will decide the question of liability of individual members of labor unions for damages sustained by a firm against whom the union may have conducted a boycott. The suit referred to is to be brought by H. Segnitz & Co., proprietors of a large cigar factory, against members of the executive board of the Knights of Labor of this district. About two months ago the Knights of Labor began a boycott against Segnitz & Co., and since that time have at intervals issued and distributed circulars in which the cigar manufacturers were accused of having violated an agreement with the Knights of Labor, discharged Knights and filled their places with men not members of the order and other things objectionable to the labor organization. Segnitz & Co., have letters from cigar dealers in which the latter refuse to handle the Segnitz cigars, as the boycott against the firm will prevent a sale of goods. Mr. Segnitz and his attorney are satisfied that an action for damages can be sustained under rulings of the supreme court.

Still They Come.

A gentleman just arrived at Boston indulges in some lugubrious reflections over the fact that on the steamer which gave him passage were more than twelve hundred immigrants, of whom he made special study during the voyage. Not one-third had friends or aquaintances in the country to meet them; not one fourth could speak or read the English language; not one-tenth had money sufficient to support them three months without immediate employment. On inquiry he learned that they were all destined for the west and northwest; that they all expected employment at much higher wages than in their native countries, and that, with very few exceptions, they had been induced to emigrate through the representations and at the solicitation of the steamship and railway agents abroad.

In justice to these people themselves, as well as those already here, is it not time to tell the truth about American labor? Its competition is sharper than that abroad. Its demands are more onerous. Its rewards are daily becoming less, owing to this enormous influx from abroad. If the United States is to continue much longer to be an asylum for the oppressed of all nations, speculators in and promoters of assisted immigration must give pause until the present plethora is reduced. Just now, with 2,000,000 to 3,000,000 of unemployed, we are suffering from an embarras de richesse in this direction.—Chicago News.

Judge Withey's Successor.

The people of Western Michigan seem well pleased over the appointment of Henry F. Severens, of Kalamazoo, as United States Circuit Judge of the Western Judicial Circuit. He is the law partner of Julius C. Burrows.

Judge Henry F. Severens was born at Rockingham, Vt., May 11, 1835. After a preparatory education he entered Middlebury College in 1853, graduating in 1857. He then accepted the position of principal of Sextin's River Seminary for two years, afterward entering upon the study of law with the Hon. H. E. Stoughton, of Bellows Falls, Vt. In 1859 Judge Severns was admitted to the bar, and in 1860 emigrated to Michigan, locating at Three Rivers, where he immediately entered upon the practice of his profession. One year later he was chosen prosecuting attorney of St. Joseph county, which position he held for two years. In 1865 he removed to and formed a law partnership with Charles E. Stuart and J. M. Edwards, of Kalamazoo. In 1867 he withdrew from the firm and formed a copartnership with Julius C. Burrows, which continued until Mr. Burrows was elected to congress in 1872. The partnership was then dissolved, only to be renewed again a few years later, and has since been continued. In 1876 Judge Severens was the democratic liberal candidate for congress against the late Hon. Chas Upson, and in 1877 was the democratic candidate for judge of the supreme court.

MISSING LINKS.

Mrs. Langtry's accent is said by the Pall Mall Gazette to be "a mixture of East London and American."

The prospects for a greatly increased yield of bullion from Colorado in 1886 are said to be very promising.

The roller skate manufacturers are now turning their attention to making imitation tortoise-shell buttons.

Those men who avoid healthful exercise in the open air are now said to have a disease called cosmophobia.

In the mountains to the eastward of Santa Ana, Cal., and extending for more than thirty miles in the different canons, are numerous bee ranches, producing in a good season hundreds of tons of excellent honey.

Georgians point with pride to David Sargent of Hall county. He is a vigorous native of 95 years, and walked twenty-two miles the other day, and said he could just as well as not have walked ten miles farther.

Senator Ingalls is an ardent lover of nature. It is not unusual for him to start off on a tramp across the Maryland and Virginia hills alone, and it is his boast that he frequently walks twenty miles on a bright clear day.

Birmingham, England, still makes flint-lock muskets for use in the interior of Africa, where percussion caps or any form of fixed ammunition would often be impossible to obtain, while powder can always be made, and flints picked up in the desert.

Lawrence, Kas., claims to have a coal vein eighteen inches thick, with a sandstone roof, at a depth of 100 feet, while David Inster, living seven miles northeast of Peabody, while boring a well on his farm, struck a vein of coal at a depth of fifty feet.

In Webster county, Georgia, lives Isaac Wilkinson, who has a daughter, aged twenty-three, strangely deformed. Her head and body are well developed, but her arms and legs are short, like a turtle's floppers. She is twenty-six inches in height when standing.

The invention of the type-writer dates as far back as 1714, when one Henry Mill obtained in England a patent for a device that "writes in printed characters, one at a time and one after another," but it was not until 1867 that it was improved so as to work satisfactorily.

There is a man in Colorado who is said to have fallen heir to a fortune of $500,000. He is the only surviving relative of a man named Smith, who recently died in England. He is just trembling in his boots lest some member of the Smith family should conclude to test his right to it.

Mrs. Crawford, the divorcee in the Dilke case, is a very pretty woman, as is her sister, the widow of the late Ashton Dilke, Sir Charles' brother. Sir Charles' first wife was also a remarkably beautiful woman, an Irish lady, a Miss Sheil. He has an only son by her, now 12 years old.

There is a vast difference in the amounts asked for and the amounts offered before the Canadian Board of Niagara Falls Arbitrators. Mr. Bush, for instance, thinks he ought to have $1,000,000, and the commissioners offer $27,500. There is a good deal of margin there for a compromise.

In his lecture before the Boston Scientific Society the other evening Dr. Kneeland gave the latest prices for wives among the Santhal people. If the woman is young and pretty the husband must pay to her relative from $3 to $5. Divorced women are quoted at about $1.50 and widows at 75 cents each.

Martin Frey, of Marietta, Ga., tried a new way of catching rats. He took a keg and filled it about half full of water and placed cotton seed on top of the water, which floated on the surface. He then sprinkled meal on top of the cotton seed and placed the keg in his barn. Next morning he emptied his keg of 190 drowned rats.

Secret service detectives have found a counterfeiter's press which can be put into a market basket, and yet will crush the hardest silver to a ragged film. Its operation is so easy and silent that the hand of a child can strike off coins from planchettes under its dies, and no sound of its movement will be heard two yards away.

There are probably more theaters painted white in Philadelphia than in any other city in the world; the idea was started by Haverly, who thought that white was a lucky color. It is also said that actors prefer to play in a theater painted white. If things go on in this way Philadelphia will soon be known as the white city.

A particular friend in Yokohama wrote to his correspondent in Plymouth: "Please to omit the word 'Esquire' at the end of my name, and direct thy letters to Jenkins Johnson without any tail. By the return of mail came a reply directed in precise accordance with the request of the particular friend, to 'Jenkins Johnson without any tail.'"

John Stetson, the New York manager, is somewhat cross-eyed. On one occasion he advertised a certain play with "a remarkably strong cast." Laura Don, the actress, witnessed the performance and was asked what she thought of it. "Well," she replied mischievously, "I think 'the remarkably strong cast' is all in the manager's eye."

New invention begets new words. The telegraph has a numerous family already, but a correspondent now suggests that an addition be made to it. Writing from the Junior Athenæum Club, W. H. C. says: "A new word is wanted more suggestive of brevity than the phrase 'telegraphic address' now being inscribed on our cards and notepaper. How would 'telenym' do?"

The etymology of many Americanisms is impossible to discover. "Boss" is taken from the Dutch "bass," or master, and is quite legitimate. "Boom," some clever person says, is derived from the nautical phrase "to boom out," as applied to a vessel tearing before the wind; and the origin of "blizzard" is enveloped in obscurity, and "bull-doze" has vanquished all the etymologists in turn.

New York Town Topics says that, according to a letter from London, at a recent social event there Canon Farrar, who was one of the guests, was asked how he found America as a country to travel in. "Excellent," he replied. "I can scarcely conceive how it could be improved in any way. The better classes there are really so civil and attentive that one could almost do without a valet."

An inquisitive American in England asked a member of the Prince of Wales' household what the Prince read. "Nothing," was the answer. The American was incredulous, but the Englishman went on to say that the Prince never opened a book or a newspaper. Competent secretaries read everything that the Prince should know, and the result is related to him in condensed form.

The complexions of the German race have been studied of late by Professor Virchow, who reports that 32 per cent of the German youths are blondes—that is, have light hair, blue eyes and fair skin; 14 per cent are brunettes, while 54 per cent show some mixture of these types. The proportion of blondes is largest in the North, especially in Oldenburg, rarest in Bavaria and Alsace. Of German Jews one in ten is a true blonde.

Housekeeping in Japan has few trials, according to a lady writing from that country. She says: "I do not visit my kitchen once a month, never give an order outside of a spoken wish, yet the domestic machinery moves with an ease and perfection unattainable at home by almost any effort on the part of the mistress. The manners of the servants are amusing, not to say startling. Every night at bedtime our five retainers appear, prostrate themselves in succession to the earth, and retire. This is to wish me good night and to renew their testimony of profound respect and pleasure over the privilege of serving me."

☞ Demorest's Magazine for June is filled with an unusual array of interesting articles. Jennie June contributed "The American Drama and its Typical Stars," W. Jennings Demorest, "The Signs of the Times," and Katharine Armstrong, "Art Work in Metal." Other good articles are "Emanuel Geibel," "Rose Hartwick Thorpe," and "China Painting at Home." "That Other Person" is continued and the shorter stories are of interest. The departments, including that devoted to the cause of prohibition, are quite full. The frontispiece is a steel engraving, "The Love Story."

It is said that the president's vetoes "are beginning to cause some apprehension in the house." That's what they are meant for. He is looking out for extravagance and unnecessary expenses. Let the house save him that trouble!—Free Press.

On Monday John Myers resigned his position as foundryman for the Pine Lake Iron Co., a position which he has he held for five years. We are informed that during his connection with the company "he has made a better grade of iron than any other man on the job, if he is a German." He went to Elk Rapids for a visit on Thursday.

One of the best evidences of a skilled workman (or woman) in any industry is the amount of work they have to do at fair prices. Mrs. A. L. McLean, dressmaker, so completely fills the bill in her line that she and her assistant, Miss Aldrich, are compelled to work hard early and late to keep up with orders. She manages to turn out a large amount of work on time, and guarantees satisfaction.

Last Thursday afternoon, A. J. McLeod's ponies took a notion to play while being unhitched from the carriage, and ran out to the street and started around the block. As they turned the corner at McCabe's, Anna and Bertie McLeod saw them, and rushed into the street to stop them. They succeeded in checking them enough to grab the lines, and held on until they finally stopped. One of them gave Anna a lively whirl but she refused to let go.

The Great German Doctor.

The remarkable phase in the practice of Dr. Peter W. Schmidt (frequently called Dr. Pete) is, he never asked one to describe their disease, his intuitive perceptions being so strong he can tell any one their trouble without asking a question. His success is phenomenal. His practice enormous. He is sought after by hundreds wherever he goes, because he cures when every physician and remedy has failed. The giving of his great medicine, Golden Seal Bitters, which has made his great success, to the world marks a new era in medicine. Blood, liver, kidney, and stomach disorders yield to this master of disease, and its wonderful cures are regarded as phenomenal, but the germ of faith ever says, "What has been may be again." We say to the sick and discouraged give Golden Seal Bitters a trial. It is all we ask. They will speak for themselves. Sold by Perry Weed and Dr. G W. Crouter.

Cure for Piles.

Piles are frequently preceded by a sense of weight in the back, loins and lower part of the abdomen, causing the patient to suppose he has some affection of the kidneys or neighboring organs. At times, symptoms of indigestion are present, flatulency, uneasiness of the stomach, etc. A moisture, like perspiration, producing a very disagreeable itching, after getting warm, is a common attendant. Blind, Bleeding and Itching Piles yield at once to the application of Dr. Bosanko's Pile Remedy, which acts directly upon the parts affected, absorbing the Tumors, allaying the intense itching, and effecting a permanent cure. Price 50 cents. Sold by Geo. W. Crouter. 152

BUTTER AND EGGS WANTED

I WONDER.

BY CHARLES R. DARRETT.

I wonder at the ocean,
As I stand upon the shore,
Such vast expanse of water,
And its grandeur I adore.

I wonder at such thoughtless youth
Who have for time no care;
But live gayly as the birds,
With no future to prepare.

I wonder at all-fleeting time;
For the years seem but a day,
As they furrow up our brows
And turn our hairs to gray.

I wonder at sweet music,
Defined a heavenly art,
That steals away our sorrow,
And refines the human heart.

I wonder that the flowers
With such beauty, should decay,
To mark the flight of seasons,
As they gently pass away.

I wonder at the evil
That's committed every day;
The evil deeds are being done,
And the lives that go astray.

I wonder, too, at drinking men
Who forever blight their lives,
Neglect their homes and children,
And the pledges to their wives.

I wonder at the marvelous strength
Of a nation just begun,
The battles and the triumphs,
As a nation, this has won.

I wonder, too, when man will change,
And adopt the better plan:
Not to live for himself alone—
When man will live for man!

A NIGHT OF FEAR.

BY CAPT. J. MONTFORD.

While listening to the murmuring leaves he stood,
More than a mile immersed within the wood.
* * * * * * *
A sudden horror seized his giddy head,
And his ears tingled, and his color fled.
Nature was in alarm; some danger nigh
Seemed threatening, though unseen to mortal eye.

—Dryden: "Theodore and Honoria."

"I never hear that sound," remarked the Colonel, as the wind tore and rattled against the side of the house, "but I am thrown back to a night, long ago, which I passed under very different circumstances."

We scented a story, and discovering by our attention that such was the case, the Colonel continued as follows:

"Half an hour before nightfall, upon a gloomy day early in March, I sprang into the saddle in front of the General's tent.

"I had orders in my pocket for the forces which lay several miles away toward the east; and I had been warned that a guerrilla band was skulking in the neighborhood; and knew that I must employ great caution to escape them.

"They would make short work with a straggler, and if I fell into their hands there would be but one way out, and that not such as I would choose.

"To reach my destination I must pass through a wood of considerable extent. I entered the bridle-path just as the last gleam of daylight vanished. The sky was overcast, and there was that strange shiver in the air which precludes a storm.

"I reached my destination without meeting with any adventure; and half an hour later set out upon my return.

"The impending storm was now at its height. Little or no rain fell; but the wind blew with redoubled strength as though determined to tear up the trees which disputed its way.

"I shivered as I rode along through the woods, and wished myself at the end of my journey. It was terribly dark, and I dared not urge my horse forward for fear of a fall.

"I soon suspected, from the motion of the horse, that we had strayed from the bridle-path, and this added to my anxiety.

"Occasionally the loud crash of falling timber would send the blood rushing through my veins, and the next instant my heart would almost cease to beat as a swelling, mysterious moan, which seemed to come as low as from the fiends, swept through the laboring air.

"To confess a truth, I was becoming frightened. My imagination was extremely active, and metamorphosed the half-distinguished forms and sounds into something uncomfortably fearful.

"My steed seemed to partake of my trepidation, for a frequent snort expressed his discontent.

"Suddenly a horrible yell fell upon my ear, followed by the report of a rifle.

"Instinctively I drew the horse back upon his haunches and listened. The storm fiends seemed laid for an instant, and all was quiet.

"'That was a man's voice,' I said, smoothing the neck of my startled steed; 'some one is in trouble.'

"At that instant, having recovered from my first fright, and the discomfiture which followed, I urged my horse onward.

"But he sprang back as the crash of fire-arms, supplemented by a series of the most fiendish yells, sounded from in front.

"I recognized the sound well enough this time. It could have issued from no throats but the guerrillas'; a class of men whom both Federals and Confederates had ample cause to fear.

"They could not be far away, and I instantly slipped from the saddle, and, securing the horse to a tree, began to creep toward the place where I knew some dark tragedy was transpiring.

"I soon came within sight of a number of torches, and knew that the actors were there.

"Stealing along through the trees, I came upon the edge of a little glade and its occupants.

"There were just thirteen men—I was curious enough to count them—gathered around a young, boyish-looking man, who held a smoking revolver in his hand, with which he menaced his foes.

"They were fierce-looking rascals, of the genuine guerrilla breed, attired in clothing of all sorts and colors—blue, gray, and civic.

"They are cowardly from principle; but I much wondered to see so many held at bay by one man, until I spied a tall man lying upon the ground.

"I knew at once that he had been the leader of the gang, and had met his fate at the hands of the youth.

"The first report I had heard, and the yell which followed, had announced his doom.

"It took but a very short time to make these observations, and the prospect was becoming darker for the young man every moment.

"He stood with his back against a tree, a bold, intrepid look upon his face; his eyes followed every movement of his foes, and his supple finger prepared to send a soul into eternity at the first onset.

"The young man's hearing quelled the rascals who confronted him; they were determined to avenge their leader, but no one seemed desirous of venturing his own life.

"But this inactivity could not last always, and the bold youth must succumb unless I could relieve him.

"I determined to make the attempt, although it seemed fruitless, and began immediately to form a plan.

"I was hastened by a sudden movement on the part of one of the outlaws.

"He had been maneuvering for some time to escape the youth's glance for an instant, and seemed satisfied at last that he had succeeded.

"I saw him draw a pistol from his belt, and instinctively a cry of warning rose to my lips.

"But it was unnecessary.

"There was a flash from the young man's pistol, and the ruffian fell, shot through the brain.

"Now was my opportunity, and, yelling at the top of my voice, I broke from my position, and rushed into the glade.

"'Come on, boys!' I cried, as though a legion of warriors were at my heels, and shooting down the first marauder who obstructed my path, I reached the youth's side.

"My onset surprised the rascals, and dropping their torches they scattered in every direction to escape the soldiers they expected were upon them.

"'This way,' I whispered, seizing the boy by the arm.

"He was quick-witted enough to take advantage of the diversion I had made in his favor, and an instant later we were rushing through the wood toward the spot where I had left my horse.

"The guerrillas almost instantly recovered from their alarm, and, finding that we were but two, they picked up their scattered torches and followed, shouting furiously.

"They had lost two of their party besides their leader. If we now fell into their hands the most horrible death they could devise would be the result.

"Suddenly my foot caught in a root and I fell at full length upon the ground. Oh, the horror of that instant! I shall never forget it. But my companion turned and jerked me to my feet; and on we went, with the bushwhackers yelling at our heels.

"It has seemed strange to me since that they did not fire upon us—we were but a very short distance in advance—but in the hurry of the chase they probably forgot that they were pistols.

"Instinct led me in the right direction, and as I saw the form of my horse beneath the tree it infused new power into my muscles.

"Reaching his side, I tore the bridle from its fastenings and sprang into the saddle. My fellow-fugitive was behind me in an instant, and I spurred the steed forward with a reckless disregard of a downfall.

"Away we went, brushing against the limbs, and expecting every breath to be torn from the saddle. Our foes did not give over the pursuit, but followed with the persistency of bloodhounds.

"I can not tell you how long the chase continued; but we at last came to an open space where had once been a clearing.

"It was some relief to catch sight of the sky over our heads; for the storm had now spent its force, and I heard a glad cry rise to my companion's lips as we flew out into the open space.

"But our triumph was soon changed to despair. We could not ride at a very rapid pace through the woods, and the pursuers had been close behind.

"As we rapidly covered the level ground, which was broad enough to allow the steed to display his swiftness of foot, the foes realized that we should escape them.

"Suddenly there came the crack of pistols, and the balls whizzed about our heads.

"My companion gave vent to a heart-rending scream that I shall remember to my dying hour, and, after clutching me convulsively in his arms for an instant, he released his grasp and fell to the ground.

"I did not stop. I knew that he was dead, and it would bring no good to him if I lay stretched at his side.

"As I entered the wood at the opposite side of the clearing I looked back and saw the guerrillas growling like wolves around their victim.

"They did not pursue me further," said the Colonel, after a moment's pause, "and I reached the camp in safety. But I never could discover the brave youth's name or the regiment to which he belonged."

THE BATTLE OF MONOCACY.

BY W. L. GARDNER.

The morning of July 9, A. D. 1864, broke clear, bright, and sultry over the hills and valleys of "Maryland, My Maryland." A slight shower had fallen during the night, only sufficient, however, to "lay" the dust, which at this time seemed to be plentiful everywhere, and freshen the heated summer air for a few hours, as by ten o'clock a. m. the heat was as intense and the dust as easily disturbed as it had been on the preceding day.

A somber quiet brooded over the tranquil scene, soon to be broken by the roar of artillery, the crash of small arms, and all the "harsh clamors of war."

It is not my purpose to give a detailed account of this memorable engagement. Its details are familiar, even to the most casual student of our country's history. Sufficient to say here that on this occasion the Federal forces, comprising about 6,000 men of all arms, withstood for five mortal hours the steady advance and determined onset of more than three times their number, consisting for the most part of the veterans of "Stonewall" Jackson's old corps, now under command of Jubal A. Early. They were provided with a numerous and well-served park of artillery, while the Federals had but two batteries of light field-pieces. These were handled, however, with great rapidity and effect during the action, and were taken off the field in safety when the retreat was ordered. The Union forces were commanded by Major General Lew Wallace.

With these facts, and other prominent features of the affair, my sketch may very properly be said to have nothing to do. It is only those incidents of the battle that came under my own observation that I wish to relate.

The brigade of which my regiment (One Hundred and Tenth Ohio) formed a part had arrived at Monocacy Junction, by rail, a little after nightfall on the evening of the eighth, disembarked at once, and went into bivouac, in full expectation of the battle which was destined to take place on the morrow. The writer was suffering from an attack of chronic diarrhea at the time, and, as a consequence, gained but a very indifferent night's rest. The night passed in quiet, and at daybreak the camp was astir, breakfast prepared and eaten, after which preparations were made for issuing rations, of which we were sorely in need. It was now about eight o'clock in the forenoon. A train of freight cars, loaded with provisions, stood upon a side track, at a little distance, and thither I, with others of my company, repaired, along with our commissary sergeant, and were soon returning laden with hard-tack, coffee, sugar, soup-beans and "saw-belly," in quantities sufficient, according to army regulations, for five days' rations to each man. Scarcely had we reached camp, however, when orders came to "fall in." But what, was the query, are we to do about our rations? Must we go into battle hungry, with plenty all around us? There was only a few moments' suspense in regard to the matter, when we were ordered to carry our provisions with us, for distribution at the first opportunity. From this we understood that we were not to move to any great distance. Indeed, our destination became known to almost everyone in a few minutes. The cause of this sudden removal, was also at once apparent. The enemy, who, it seems, had moved out very early, had been reported as approaching in force, and it became necessary to act with promptness and celerity, in order to meet the coming storm. So away we went, "toting" our provisions with us, across the railroad and the river (Monocacy), which at the point where we crossed was quite shallow, up the steep bluff on the southern shore, and into a large rolling field, from which the last shock of wheat had been removed by its owner scarcely an hour before.

Line of battle was speedily formed along the northern slope of this field, the line facing to the south. Our right rested on the river, and the line, extending eastward round the crest of the ridge, was joined on the left by the Ninth New York Heavy Artillery.

The company to which the writer belonged formed the extreme left of the line. This arrangement completed, the men were allowed to stack arms, and the distribution of rations began. As yet not a shot had been fired, and, in fact, no signs of an enemy were visible in our immediate front. Soon all this was changed, however. It was now ten o'clock and the heat was becoming oppressive. Our commissary called out, "Third round of sugar for Company K," when suddenly the loud roar of artillery off to the left announced the opening of the fray. Almost at the same moment the rebel skirmish line appeared, at the distance of perhaps a couple of miles. It is needless to remark that all further thought or care with regard to issuing rations was at once laid aside. Each man grasped his weapons and sprang to his place in the line. The writer stood in the front rank, near the center of his company, with many gallant comrades round him, whose names were never again heard at roll-call. The Union skirmishers promptly advanced, and soon the rattle of musketry and the wild cheers of the combatants blended with the heavy boom of cannon. The noise and fury of the conflict on our left increased with every passing moment, but the scene was hidden from our view by intervening hills. In our front and to our right the prospect was quite extended. Indeed, I have always felt that I had cause to congratulate myself upon the favorable position I occupied during the battle; that is, so far as a chance for observation was concerned. Not that the position was at all a safe one, for safety was nowhere. After standing in line of battle for some time, we fell back just a little from the crest of the ridge, and were ordered to "lie down." Full well we knew what this portended, and obeyed the command with alacrity. Very soon our anticipations were realized, for the enemy had brought up a battery to the line of their skirmishers, and suddenly opened a rapid fire of shot and shell upon our position. It was now eleven o'clock, and the uproar on all sides had become terrific. Every available piece of artillery on the Union side was brought into play, and the fire of the skirmish lines, re-enforced by both sides, continued with ever-increasing fury. The air seemed filled with the fragments of bursting shells, and the "wheep" and "ping" of musket balls was almost continuous. Dense clouds of dust and smoke were soon rising in all directions, at some points entirely shutting out the view. The writer, raising himself upon his elbow, watched the scene with that intensity of interest which only those can realize who have undergone a like experience. I was particularly interested in the splendid action of a couple of small field pieces, posted near the summit of a hill, a short distance north of the railroad and to our right. The fire from these guns was rapid and accurate during the whole period of the battle. Among the many excellent shots made on that day by those pieces I have space to note but one, the effect of which was greeted with a hearty cheer by the hundreds of Union soldiers who witnessed it. A group of rebel officers, riding briskly up from the direction of Frederick City, came to a halt, we presume not unwillingly, within the welcome shadow cast by the leafy branches of a small spreading tree in an open field, and, as it happened, within point-blank range; and the hope was at once expressed by many that those gunners had noticed their approach, and would speedily extend to them the compliments of the season. Nor were we doomed to disappointment. The very thing wished for, and doubtless expected by some, quickly came to pass. The group of officers in "faded gray" had little more than time sufficient to clear the dust and moisture from their eyelids, preparatory to taking a look to their front, when a shell from one of those guns on the hillside hurtled through the air, and descending, exploded, as nearly as I could judge, directly in the midst of the tree-top above them. Leaves and branches flew into the air, while more than one saddle was emptied, and the survivors of the party lost no time in getting away from a locality so unhealthy.

All this while our part of the line was lying exposed to the fire of a full battery in front, while the roar of battle on our left gradually drew nearer, until it became evident that our flank was completely turned and that a retreat would be unavoidable. A few minutes after two o'clock p. m. the welcome call of "Attention" was heard, and the line was up and ready in an instant. No situation is more trying to a soldier's mettle than to be forced to lie inactive for hours under the enemy's fire, with no chance to return it. I will not attempt a description of the charge which followed. Enough to say that it served its purpose, in that it gave a temporary check to the onward rush of overwhelming numbers, and afforded our broken left wing a chance to save themselves from utter rout and capture.

While advancing in this charge I was struck on the head, just over my left ear, by a spent ball, with immediate result of seeing such a galaxy of stars as I never beheld in the sky, succeeded by a most distressing headache. Compelled, however, to yield to the pressure of three times our number, we fell back and formed in line once more, not far in the rear of our first position. From this point I had a good view to the right, left, and rear, and it seemed to me as if the whole army, with the exception of our one small regiment, was in full retreat, and that we must inevitably be captured en masse, and I felt a sense of great relief when presently we were ordered to fall back beyond the river. The retreat now became general. The enemy threw numerous shells after us to accelerate our movements, and one of these bursting some distance to our right and rear, a small fragment thereof inflicted upon me a second and more serious wound, from the effect of which I have never recovered. I was helped off the field by a comrade, and managed in the course of the evening to reach Ellicott's Mills, six miles from the battle-field, where, "weak and wounded, sick and sore," I crawled aboard a car filled with others of our wounded and was carried to West Buildings Hospital, Baltimore. Here, by kind and judicious care and treatment, I was soon put up on my feet again. Several months were destined to elapse, however, ere I should be able to rejoin my regiment, which in the meantime was constantly marching and fighting. The battles of Winchester, Fisher's Hill, and Cedar Creek had been fought, and in the last mentioned the noble comrade who helped me from the field, and thus saved me from falling into the hands of the rebels at Monocacy—a fate I dreaded worse than death—laid down his life, a willing sacrifice upon the altar of his country. Truly

A brave boy was he,
Gone at his country's call;
And yet, and yet, we cannot forget
That many brave boys must fall.

Shell Mounds in Florida.

These shell mounds are found in various parts of the State. The shells which they contain have, through the action of time, become wholly deprived of organic matter, and to a certain degree calcined, so that they form a kind of conglomerate, which is used extensively for building. It is called coquina. These shell heaps have aroused much interest on the part of geologists. It was at first supposed that they were made by lake deposits, but investigations show that they were of human construction. There are about forty of these mounds in different parts of the State, varying in size from circular heaps fifteen to twenty feet in diameter and a few inches high to ridges several hundred feet in length, and varying in height from a few inches to fifteen feet and over, and all are more or less overgrown with forests of trees. Among the more important groups of these mounds are those of King Phillip's Town, near the outlet of Lake Harney, which are 450 feet long, from 100 to 150 feet broad, and with an average height of 8 feet; the Black Hammock Mounds on the St. Johns, which form a line, though several times broken, 1,200 feet in length, are 150 to 100 feet broad, and vary in height from 10 feet to 3 or 4 inches; Old Enterprise Mounds, on Lake Monroe, 160 feet long on the water line, in places 15 feet high; and Horse Landing Mounds, on the St. Johns River, 300 feet long by 100 feet in their widest part, and about 8 feet high. In all of these mounds pieces of pottery are found imbedded in the shell conglomerate, also articles made of shell and bone, rude stone implements and many bones of animals, as of deer, terrapin, rabbits, alligators, and others, and bones of birds and fishes. This shows conclusively that the mounds were made by man, and it is supposed that they mark the camps or villages of early tribes, of whom no traces now remain save these collections of kitchen debris. These deposits contain the shells of a few species only, and the inland mounds contain only those of fresh-water mollusks. Along the coast there are similar deposits, though smaller, of oyster shells. The age of these mounds is a much-vexed question. They were found overgrown with herbage and forest, just as they are now, when the first white man set foot on Florida sail. The Indians then inhabiting the country knew nothing of their origin, but had traditions that they were built by tribes that inhabited the land long before the red man came. The fact that the shells have lost all traces of organic matter shows them to be of great age, and so does the fact that the deposit of earth above them is sufficient to give place to the roots of the largest trees. An examination of an old oak which was blown down on one of the mounds showed that it was at least 500 years old, and as a century or two was needed to produce sufficient deposit of earth upon the shell heaps to permit the growth of the tree, it is probable that the existence of the builders of these mounds could not have been later than the beginning of the Christian era.—Inter Ocean.

A POST-NUPTIAL TRANSFORMATION.

There was a man of knowledge deep, commanding sweep, who knew a heap, a man who studied day and night, and hardly spared the time to sleep.

This man so staid he knew a maid, demure, afraid, and half dismayed, shy as the nymph of ancient myths sequestered in some sylvan shade.

This maid so rare, with golden hair and modest air, so debonair, she charmed this man of learned lore, and caught him in her witching snare.

This man of thought and learned lore, his hair he tore, and o'er and o'er he loudly swore that he would cherish her for aye, and he would love her evermore.

Now they are wed, in his library nooks among his books his knees he crooks, and sees his wife so seldom now that he's forgotten how she looks.

The wife to whom the man before so loudly swore he would adore forevermore lives with her mother, and declares her husband is a regular bore.

And yet people will go on eating them raw.

Salary.

The word salary comes from the Latin salarium, literally salt money, from sal, salt, which was a part of the pay of Roman soldiers. The ancient Romans allowed the soldiery so much salt per diem. When this was commuted to a money payment, it was still called by the same name.

WHEN the heart is pure there is hardly anything that can mislead the misunderstanding in matters of immediate personal concernment.

What a Change!

A few short weeks ago that young girl was the personification of health, vigor, and beauty. The blush upon her cheeks rivaled that of the rose; her step was light and buoyant, her every movement was a revelation of perfect physical health. Yet now she is pallid and haggard, and her superabundant vitality has given place to a strange dullness and lassitude. What has caused this change? Functional irregularities, which can be cured by Dr. Pierce's "Favorite Prescription," a remedy to which thousands of women to-day owe their lives. All druggists.

It is a pity that such facts as the one following cannot be written, printed, or otherwise preserved, upon some sort of indestructible paper. "My wife suffered seven years and was bedridden, too," said W. E. Huestis, of Emporia, Kansas; "a number of physicians failed to help her. Dr. Pierce's 'Golden Medical Discovery' cured her." The Knights of Labor and Women.

The Knights of Labor has become one of the largest aggregations of laboring men that ever existed. It has many features which are really superior and praiseworthy. One is that it does not exclude from its organization people of any race or of any color, and women, too, fortunately, can be admitted.

This we deem a grand movement in the right direction, because the labor of women has been too often ground to the dust. Think of it! At the present day women are compelled to make shirts at forty cents per dozen. Hood's famous "Song of the Shirt" is a sad reality in the Anierica of to-day.

With fingers weary and worn,
With eyelids heavy and red,
A woman sat in unwomanly rags,
Plying her needle and thread.
Stitch! stitch! stitch!
In poverty, hunger, and dirt,
She sang the "Song of the Shirt!"

Work! work! work!
While the cock is crowing aloof!
And work—work—work
Till the stars shine through the roof,
It's oh! to be a slave
Along with the barbarous Turk,
Where woman has never a soul to save,
If this is Christian work!

Any honest reform to better the condition of female labor will be welcomed by every humanitarian. Herotofore the labor unions have overlooked the necessity of making a great effort for women. The Knights of Labor admit doctors, preachers, editors, and merchants to membership, and the only individuals whom they exclude as the natural enemies of labor are bankers, lawyers, professional gamblers, and liquor-sellers. One Socialistic orator declares that the Knights of Labor ought not to admit merchants, because he deems them aristocrats; but many of these "aristocrats" work as hard as any day laborer, and therefore very properly are included among the laboring men of the country.

One of the most honorable principles of the Knights of Labor, and for which it will be commended by all broad-gauge Americans, is that the order permits the Knights to work in the same shops or factories with union or non-union men. It makes no distinciton in this regard, and, most fortunately, is removed from the narrow and proscriptive spirit of too many labor organizations, which declare that a union man cannot work alongside of a non-union man.

This broad and liberal basis upon which the Knights of Labor organization rests is one cause of its extended popularity; for no organization can ever be general which proscribes a brother workman, not because he is a poor artisan or a bad man, but simply because he does not belong to a specified association.—Milwaukee Wisconsin.

Important.

When you visit or leave New York City, save baggage, expressage, and $3 carriage hire, and stop at the Grand Union Hotel, opposite Grand Central Depot.

G3 rooms, fitted up at a cost of one million dollars, $1 and upwards per day. European plan. Elevator. Restaurant supplied with the best. Horse cars, stages, and elevated railroad to all depots. Families can live better for less money at the Grand Union Hotel than at any other first-class hotel in the city.

A Modern Fable.

A beautiful young lady, who always aided her mother in the performance of the household duties, and who was of a kind and amiable disposition, was one day surprised by the visit of a fairy, who said to her:

"I have watched you a long time, and have been much pleased with your cheerfulness, your kindness and amiability, and I have come to inform you that you will have one wish granted, no matter what it is."

The young lady pondered for a few moments and then said:

"I would wish to live to a good old age."

"Have then your wish," said the fairy; "become a ballet dancer or a chorus singer," and she vanished.

Moral: Virtue is its own reward.—Boston Chronicle.

Where the Damages Should Come In.

A recent decision of the Supreme Court allows a wife to sue for damages the person, male or female, who has alienated her husband's affections and brought about the absence of his "conjugal society." This is well enough, but the conjugal society of such a husband as that must be so much less than valuable that perhaps the woman gets her damages in advance of the suit.

According to the testimony of physicians and coroners, in all parts of the Union, deaths have resulted from the use of cough syrups, containing morphia, opium, and other poisons. In this connection, Dr. Sam'l Cox, of Washington, after careful analyses, endorses Red Star Cough Cure as being purely vegetable, and absolutely free from opiates, poisons, and narcotics. Price, 25 cents.

The Fireman's Story.

"Where have you been?" asked the foreman of a Western volunteer fire department of a member who arrived soon after the fire had been extinguished.

"Been (hic) workin'."

"Been working? What kind of work have you been doing?"

"Been (hic) to the drug (hic) store t'get some chemicals (hic) for the engine."—New York Graphic.

Though the principles on which an arch was constructed was not entirely unknown to the Greeks, yet their universal use of the columnar style of architecture and general deficiency of roads, aqueducts, and bridges, rendered its use unnecessary to them, but the Romans employed it extensively in all their great works.

Make Haste to Defend Yourself

If you live in a locality where malaria is prevalent, with a preventive that experience indicates as the most reliable of medical safeguards—Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. Entirely free from the objections—and they are valid ones—which attach to the mineral alkaloid quinine, it is far more effective, and its effects are not evanescent, but lasting, unlike those of the drug. There are portions of our land—and none more beautiful and more fertile—which at no season of the year are entirely exempt from the malarial scourge. In such regions Hostetter's Stomach Bitters has undergone a continuous test for the past thirty years, with results which have established its reputation beyond all cavil as a special defense against every form of malarial disease. For biliousness, also, it is an acknowledged specific, and it is a potent remedy for constipation, dyspepsia, rheumatism and an impoverished condition of the blood.

Welsh Names.

Welsh names are proverbially of a crack-jaw tendency, but perhaps the palm may be given to the following, which casually occurred in a conversation between a Welsh maiden and an English visitor at a village at the foot of Snowdon. The visitor inquired: "What is the name of your little cottage, my dear?" Welsh girl: "Llefylliftymwy, sir." E. V.: "Oh, and are your parents living?" W. G.: "Yes, sir; but my father works at Chwarel Caebraichycafn." E. V.: "Very well. Any brothers?" W. G.: "Yes, three, sir. One at Rhosllanerchrugog, one at Llanenddwynewmllanddwywye, one lives between Penmaenmawr and Llanfairfechan." E. V.: "It's growing worse, I see. How many sisters?" W. G.: "Only two, sir; one is with my aunt at Llanfairmathafareithnf." E. V.: "My word, what a name! And the other?" W. G.: "Oh, she is in service, sir, at Llanfairpwllgwyngyll gogerychwrndrobwllgertrobwllylandysiliogogogoch."

A QUESTION ABOUT

Brown's Iron Bitters

ANSWERED.

The question has probably been asked thousands of times, "How can Brown's Iron Bitters cure everything?" Well, it doesn't. But it does cure any disease for which a reputable physician would prescribe IRON. Physicians recognize Iron as the best restorative agent known to the profession, and inquiry of any leading chemical firm will substantiate the assertion that there are more preparations of iron than of any other substance used in medicine. This shows conclusively that iron is acknowledged to be the most important factor in successful medical practice. It is, however, a remarkable fact, that prior to the discovery of BROWN'S IRON BITTERS no perfectly satisfactory iron combination had ever been found.

BROWN'S IRON BITTERS does not injure the teeth, cause headache, or produce constipation—all other iron medicines do. BROWN'S IRON BITTERS cures Indigestion, Biliousness, Weakness, Dyspepsia, Malaria, Chills and Fevers, Tired Feeling, General Debility, Pain in the Side, Back or Limbs, Headache and Neuralgia—for all these ailments Iron is prescribed daily.

BROWN'S IRON BITTERS, however, does not cure in a minute. Like all other thorough medicines, it acts slowly. When taken by men the first symptom of benefit is renewed energy. The muscles then become firmer, the digestion improves, the bowels are active. In women the effect is usually more rapid and marked. The eyes begin at once to brighten; the skin clears up; healthy color comes to the cheeks; nervousness disappears; functional derangements become regular, and if a nursing mother, abundant sustenance is supplied for the child. Remember Brown's Iron Bitters is the ONLY iron medicine that is not injurious. Physicians and Druggists recommend it.

"She is Beautiful,"

"But—her breath—oh horrors!" That sickening odor comes from Catarrh, caused by a Scrofulous taint in the blood, for which the best remedy is Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

"My daughter suffered for years with an obstinate and offensive Catarrh. Her voice was affected; her throat filled with purulent matter; she complained of headache, with pains over the eyes, and in the nose, and was fearful that her lungs were involved in the disease. Physicians prescribed for her, but yet she grew worse, until finally she lost all sense of smell and taste. She had no appetite, became bilious, sallow, weak, emaciated, and discouraged. Having heard Ayer's Sarsaparilla highly recommended for Catarrh, I purchased a dozen bottles, determined that this medicine should have a thorough trial. My daughter commenced taking it, and, before she had finished ten bottles, was entirely cured. She is now in perfect health."—S. Schreiner, Sag Harbor, N. Y.

Josiah Allen's Wife on the License Question.

"'How can we help workin', sister Minkley? How can we hold our hands up, and rest on our feather beds? If a deadly serpent had broken loose from some circus, and was a wreathin' and twistin' his way through Jonesville, swallerin' down a man or woman every few days, would men stand with their hands in their pockets, or a leanin' up ag'inst barn-doors a-whittlin', arguin' feebly from year to year, whether it was best to try to catch the serpent and cut its head off, or whether it was best, after all, to let him go free? After they had seen some of their best friends swallered down by it, wouldn't they make an effort to capture it? Wouldn't they chase it into any hole they could get it into? Wouldn't they turn the first key on it they could get hold of? And if it broke loose from that, wouldn't they try another key, and another, till they got one that would hold him?

"'Do you suppose they would rent out that serpent at so much a year to crunch and swaller folks accordin' to law? And would it be any easier for for the folks that was crunched and swallered, and for the survivin' friends of the same, if they was killed by act of congress? What would such a law be thought of, Sister Minkley? And that is nothin' to the laws as they be. For what is one middlin'-sized serpent in a circus, that couldn't eat more'n one man a week with any relish, to this intemperance, that swallers down a hundred thousand every year, and is as big as the Great Midgard serpent I have heard Thomas J. read about, whose folds encompassed the earth.'

"Sister Minkley sithed so loud that it sounded some like a groan, and I kep' on in a dreadful eloquent way:

"'We have got to take these things to-home, Sister Minkley, in order to realize 'em. Yours and mine are as far apart as the poles when we are talkin' about such things. As a general rule we can bear other folkses trials and sufferin's with resignation. When it is your brother and husband that is goin' the downward road, we can endure it with considerable calmness; but when it is a part of my own heart, my Willie or my Charley that is goin' down to ruin, we feel as if men and angels must help rescue him. It was this that sent forth the wonderful Woman's Crusade, that made tender, timid women into heroes willin' to oppose their weakness to banded strength. It was this that made victory possible to them. What was the crusade to the Holy Land that I have heard Thomas J. read about to this? That was to protect the sepulchre where the body of our Lord once laid, but this was to defend the living Christ, the God in man.'"—Copyright.—By per. of "Samantha," Josiah Allen's Wife.

Work to be Done.

To those who are disquieted in their religious beliefs, who are conscious of religious aspirations, and who somehow can not assent to the creeds of the churches, there is one sure course to pursue: Let them enter upon some great humanitarian work. We may be mistaken as to our religious creeds, but we can not go wrong in trying to benefit our fellow men. Hence we should all be interested in some work of benevolence. To such the temperance movement ought to be particularly attractive. It is the great practical reform of the age and the country we live in. Every one knows of the horrors of the liquor traffic, and there is abundance of testimony to prove that those communities which have put a stop to liquor selling are vastly better off than where the traffic is unrestricted, and liquor drinking is under legal sanction. All forms of vice or crime flourish in every community where liquor dealing is permitted. The evidences multiply that the temperance tide is rising and, in every part of the country. Indeed, the encouraging reports come from so many different directions that we have not space to tell the whole story. Local option is now the battle-cry in about every state in the Union, as well as in the dominion of Canada. These skirmishes in the localities are first in order. Then will come state action, and finally the nation must take the matter in hand and reduce to a minimum the evils in the traffic in strong drink.—Demorest's Monthly.

Temperance Items.

The old Moravian town of Salem, N. C. has not permitted any liquor to enter the place for one hundred years. It is the banner temperance town of the country.

At Griffin, Ga., recently a man who had been mayor of the city and one of its most prosperous and popular citizens, died a pauper in its poor-house. Drink did it.

An Irish candidate for parliament in a speech at Dublin said that $150,000,000 had been spent in Ireland for drink in the last three years, in districts where laborers were starving, and where, it was said, the tenants could not pay their rents.

A legend says that the devil gave a hermit the choice of three great vices, one of which was drunkenness. The hermit chose this as being the least sinful. He became drunk and then committed the other two. And it still remains a fact that a man is capable of any crime, however revolting, when under the influence of liquor. Whiskey is the devil's Samson and Delilah.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

Able legal opinion in Rhode Island leans to the view that liquor licenses will be invalid there upon the result of the vote on the prohibition amendment being declared in the general assembly. The constitution says that "if then approved by three-fifths of the electors of that state present and voting thereon in town and ward meetings, it shall become a part of the constitution of the state." Under the existing law all licenses expire with June.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the condition of a certain mortgage, made by Mary Blackburd to John A. Bacot, dated October 3d, A. MORTGAGE SALE.

Whereas, default has been made in the payment of the money secured by a mortgage, made and dated the 4th day of December, in the year A. D. one thousand eight hundred and eighty-four, by Nancy Hanse to the Pine Lake Iron Company, a corporation created and existing under the laws of the state of Illinois, and doing business in the county of Charlevoix, in the state of Michigan, which mortgage was recorded in the office of the register of deeds of the said county of Charlevoix, in Book 9 of mortgages, at page 516, on the 1st day of January, in the year A. D. one thousand eight hundred and eighty-five, and the said mortgage is now owned by the said Pine Lake Iron Company. And whereas, the said Pine Lake Iron Company, as owner thereof, has exercised and doth now exercise the option to it given in and by said mortgage, and has declared and doth hereby declare the whole amount of principal secured by and mentioned in said mortgage, as well as the interest thereon to be now due and unpaid. And whereas, the amount claimed to be due on said mortgage at the date of this notice is the sum of one hundred and fifty-three dollars and ninety cents, ($153.90) principal and interest, and a further sum of fifteen dollars ($15.00) provided by law as an attorney's fee in the foreclosure of said mortgage, which is the whole amount claimed to be due thereon, and no suit or proceeding at law or in chancery having been instituted to recover the debt now remaining secured by the said mortgage or any part thereof, whereby the power of sale contained therein has become operative. Now, therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale contained therein and in pursuance of the statute in such case provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises therein described, at public auction to the highest bidder at the front door of the town hall in the township of South Arm, in the county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan, which is the place of holding the circuit court for said county, on Wednesday, the 4th day of August, A. FIRE PROTECTION.

Since the JOURNAL was issued last week, the question has been asked whether, in voting the bonds asked for, the council were compelled to accept the proposition now in their hands. We understand that they are not. This proposition gives them something definite to work upon, but the committee had in mind, when the resolution was drawn, the desirability of being at liberty to accept any other or better proposition, if any were made before the time for placing the bonds. We have reason to believe that other propositions will be made; and the committee may have a chance to do very much better than we mentioned last week.

Memorial Day.

On Monday Charlevoix entertained the largest crowd of visitors ever within her limits, except possibly on the day of the regatta last year.

Memorial day is a greater day here than the Fourth of July, because Baxter post G. A. R. contains some most enterprising men who are anxious to make for their society a place int he annals of the village. And to do this there is no better way than to make each recurring anniversary one ever to be remembered.

Stevens post of East Jordan, Ironton post of Ironton, and Walter Clifford post of Boyne City, were here in a body, and members of posts at Eastport and Elk Rapids were present and took a place in the procession.

The day was all that could be desired, and people from around the county came in all manner of conveyances, and took part in the exercises and procession.

The Elk Rapids band also came and helped to enliven the line of march.

The Charlevoix band led the procession, followed by 200 school children, the various G. A. R. posts, Elk Rapids band, and citizens in carriages and on foot.

At the cemetery the program was followed substantially as heretofore published in this paper.

The floral tributes were profuse and very handsome.

The address of Prof. Enos was well received, and the musical program has received numerous words of praise.

Baxter post furnished dinners at the various hotels for visiting members, who are thus again assured of a hearty reception whenever they visit our ambitious city.

As Others See Us.

From an article in the last Petoskey Record, headed "An Idle Half Day in Charlevoix," we take the following concerning our boat-builder, Joe Beauvais:

On our return to the boat livery of Mr. Jos. Beauvais we took a few moments to look through the establishment of the most accomplished boat builder in these northern waters. Mr. Beauvais, who constructs pleasure boats, not only for the resorters and people of Charlevoix, but for Chicago, Milwaukee and other points, is certainly a master of his business. In his sheds are new boats ranging in price from $40 to $175—the price being according to the amount of ornamentation and fancy work put on them. All of his boats are remarkable for their lightness, one man being able to lift and carry a four seat family boat with ease, but are nevertheless built with an eye to strength and are perfectly staunch, safe boats. One boat just finished for a Chicago gentlemen at $75 contains 17 different kinds of wood, the little deck in bow and stern affording beautiful specimens of inlaid and joiners work. Not only does the excellence of his work commend Mr. Beauvais to his patrons, but his politeness and readiness to accommodate makes him a favorite with all who come in contact with him."

A Remarkable Clock.

One of the most remarkable of clocks has just been constructed in London for a banking establishment. It is on the twenty-four hour principle, and is notable as possessing probably the simplest method which has yet been resorted to for indicating the time according to the new enumeration. The clock in question has only one hand, the long minute hand, and the figures around are placed as heretofore. Instead, however, of indicating the hours, they indicate the minutes only, which are marked from five to sixty. The hours are shown on a sunk dial revolving under the upper dial, a space being left in the upper dial in which the next hour figure comes forward instantaneously upon the minute hand completing its circuit of sixty minutes; that is, in a word, the solitary hand marks the minutes, and the sunk space shows the hour.

Knew All About It.

"I've handled 'osses all my life," said the bragging passenger from Burlington, "and I knows all about 'em. There can't nobody tell me nothin' about a hoss. I knows 'em from the tips o' their noses to the last hairs in their tails. Why, down in our section when they want an expert on a hoss they send a boy right up to my house. Gacss I've been called in fifty times as an expert witness in lawsuits 'bout hoss trades. But I'll tell you what makes me mad, and that is to meet one o'these - book-learned fellers who think they can tell all about a hoss from what they read. Only last week I met one o' that kind, and the way I mixed him up talkin' about the anatermy and diseases of the hoss made him wish he had never set his eyes on me."

"By the way," said an old man in the next seat, who had a pair of roguish eyes behind a pair of huge spectacles, "I'm a little interested in the horse business, purely from a scientific standpoint. I never handled horses—I'm a professor of anatomy in a college down east, but there's one point I've always wanted settled. You are just the man I've been looking for, and if you would be so kind—"

"Certainly, sir; certainly. I kin tell you anything about a hoss. Will be glad to settle the point you're mixed up on, sir."

"Thanks. Please tell me how a horse walks. What is the motion of his fore legs in relation to the motion of his hind legs. That is what has puzzled me."

"That's easy enough," replied the expert in a tone of confidence. "The hoss picks up his right fore leg and his left hind leg simultaneously, and after they have been set down he picks up the left fore leg and the right hind leg at the same instant."

"Bet you $10 he doesn't."

"Wh-what's that?" queried the expert, as if the breath had been knocked out of him by this sudden proposition; "what's that? Do you mean to say I don't know what I'm talking 'bout? Do you question my knowledge?"

"Money talks."

The expert was in for it and had to face the music. The money was put up in the hands of the conductor, and at the next station all hands adjourned to the platform, where a pair of 'bus horses were started on a walk to settle the novel wager.

"Well, I swow," exclaimed the discomfited expert, as he saw the conductor hand the stakes to the old man with the spectacles; "who'd a thought that a walkin' hoss picks up one foot at a time? I never did like these infernal book-larnin' chaps, anyhow; durn the durn luck!"—Chicago Herald Train Talk.

Rev. L. M. Heilman in the course of a recent lecture at Chicago on the subject "The Pennsylvania Germans" gave an historic and humorous account of the quaint habits and customs of this people a century ago. The Pennsylvania Germans, said the lecturer, are an American race. So far from being German foreigners they have in many instances a parent of other than German stock. They have absorbed and assimilated neighboring people of other nations, Irish, English and French. They are a race reared on Pennsylvania soil who have stood aloof from German immigrants so much that many of them do not understand the pure German language. Their tongue is Saxon, as the English is in its main structure, and has assimilated to itself many purely English words and abbreviated most of its German words so as to conform with the language of busy America. This German race, so-called, whose ancestors came over with William Penn, has espoused the cause of American freedom and the spirit of America's institutions; its tongue, customs, and characteristics are felt all over the nation; its people are well represented on the scroll of honor, inscribed with the great names of the nation's history; and in every honorable rank of life the race has made its mark and wielded a large influence.

The lecturer went on to describe in detail the old-time life and habits of the people; their daily pursuits in town and country; their practical piety, their fasts and festivals, their reverence of women, their amusements, jollifications, and ideas of humor; their quaint language, their superstitions, their legal and educational systems, their frugality and untiring industry, their legends and superstitions, their conservatism and exclusiveness, their home life in all its varied aspects, the decline of their language, and the gradual obliteration of the distinctive character of the race.

"I do not mean to heroize this class of our citizens," said Mr. Heilman in conclusion, "but they have been misunderstood. Their example should be of service to their sons. Steadfastness, earnestness, the value of physical and mental culture, truthfulness, and good habits should be now, as then, instilled into the home and family. The sarcastic stories of 'sauerkraut and speck' are unworthy of a place by the side of the illustrious examples of fidelity which they have given to the nation. Even their ways, so odd to others, are the piles that contain their worth. Those who disown their own blood are ignorant of the royal blood that forsook noble titles for the sake of right and principle. They placed themselves in a society and under the walls of a language that hid them from notice. Some children who have spoken English when their parents left earth's cares have a right to forget the old tongue, but not to forsake the old virtues. It is not meant that our nation should be composed of separate, distinct elements, but rather of one people; we should judge our fellow-men aright, and remember the sturdy character that helped to make the civil and moral tower whose bulwarks of protection we enjoy to-day. The character of this race will always illumine our history's page; and those who follow their hardy, self-reliant example will be worthy characters in society, state and church."

Why Do They Marry?

The great majority of English medical women undoubtedly marry either before or soon after they complete their curriculum; in fact, one almost fancies that men either perversely seek as wives the very type of women whose intellectual tastes they pretend to detest, or prudently apply matrimony as a solvent of sexual competition. Be that as it may, the result is usually the same to a clever girl when she asks leave to quit her home and study medicine. Her family not wishing to lose her pleasant companionship, plausibly object on the ground that as she will most likely marry soon the cost of her medical education will be so much money wasted.

But why should a medical woman always be expected to retire from practice after she marries? I can even conceive of cases where, through the misfortune or ill-health of her husband, it might be her duty to throw herself into the profession with increased ardor and energy. Actresses and musicians do not deem it necessary to retire from professional life because they marry, and surely the work of a medical women is not more incompatible with domesticity than theirs. It will, in truth, always rest with the woman physician, whether married or single, to adjust her work to her family claims, and if she toils after marriage it must be remembered that her professional income will enable her to supply a large staff of servants for household duty. Her case will then be analogous to that of many artistic, literary, and political ladies, who devote a great deal of their time to other than purely domestic interests; indeed, those who have some experience of both classes will, I think, acknowledge that the married woman physician, as a rule, pays much more attention to her family than your lady of quality who opens a political salon, so that, like the Bergengarias and Zenobias of Disraelitish romance, she may push on her favorites in public life. —Fortnightly Review.

Of course a great many strikes are attributed to us with which we should not be credited, but on the other hand many are charged to us we are responsible for." In closing he said: "I will go nowhere, I will see no one, I will attend to no other business until this convention is over. I propose to stay here and finish this business if it takes all summer, and I want you to be prepared to stay with me." Mr. Powderly's remarks were greatly applauded.

The Senate insisted upon its amendment to the postoffice appropriation bill for the benefit of the Pacific Mail Company, and appointed a committee of conference. The President sent the following nominations to the Senate. Hughes East, of Indiana, to be Register of the Land Office at Yankton, Dakota. First Lieut. Dan C. Kingman, to be Captain Corps of Engineers. Second Lieut. H. E. Waterman, to be First Lieutenant Tenth Corps of Engineers. Charles F. Maron, of Virginia, to be Assistant Surgeon in the army with the rank of First Lieutenant.

THE Senate bill extending for two years the time within which the St. Louis and San Francisco Railroad Company may complete its road through the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indian reservations passed the House May 22. Mr. Reagan, of Texas, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back the Cullom interstate commerce bill with a substitute therefor, and it was referred to the committee of the whole.

SENATOR PLATT'S resolution regarding open executive sessions was before the Senate on May 24, and was supported by Senator Gibson, who said secret inquisitions were repulsive to honorable men. The President vetoed four private bills, granting pensions to Dudley B. Branch, Louis Melcher, Edward Ayers, and James C. Chandler. The President gave his reasons at length in respect to each case. The President nominated Henry Gilman of Michigan to be Consul of the United States at Jerusalem, vice N. J. Arbeely of Tennessee, withdrawn. The House of Representatives refused to agree to the Frye amendment to the Dingley shipping bill, which authorized the President to close American ports to Canadian vessels as long as American vessels are refused commercial and fishing rights in Canadian ports or waters. The House considered in committee of the whole the bill which contemplates imposing a tax on imitation butter, and placing the manufacture thereof under the control of the internal-revenue officials. Mr. Bennett (N. C.) introduced a bill to divide the surplus money in the Treasury June 1, 1886, among the several States and Territories for educational purposes. Mr. Bland of Missouri introduced in the House a bill to revive the income tax, the proceeds to be applied to the payment of pensions.

THE resolutions of the Ohio Legislature asking an investigation into the alleged Payne bribery case were presented to the Senate May 25. After the passage of a bill to increase the pensions of soldiers or sailors who lost an arm or leg in the service, Mr. Ingalls took occasion to pronounce Commissioner Black an impostor, who had secured from Congress the highest pension rate as an intellectual and physical wreck. Mr. Voorhees replied that at the present time the services of a physician were required to dress Gen. Black's wounds. Mr. Harrison reported favorably a bill to authorize the appointment of an additional Adjutant-General of the army, with the rank of Major of the cavalry. The Senate passed the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad land forfeiture bill, as reported from the Committee on Public Lands. The bill forfeits all lands except the right of way adjacent and coterminous with the uncompleted portion of the road. The President sent the following nominations to the Senate: Collector of Customs for the district of Sandusky, Ohio, John Finch. Receivers of Public Moneys—Amos J. Harris, at Kirwin, Kan.; Alexander H. Baker, at Grand Island, Neb.; Ezra W. Miller, at Huron, D. T. Miles J. Finlin, upon whom a bitter fight has been made, was confirmed as Postmaster at Streator, Ill. A lively debate took place in the House of Representatives on the oleomargarine bill, in which Frank Lawler appeared as the defender of Chicago against the sarcasm of an Iowa member. An Arkansas representative warned the House not to choke the Democratic party to death with butter. The Ways and Means Committee adversely reported the bill to carry into effect the Mexican treaty. Mr. Springer, from the Committee on Territories, presented to the House the adverse report of that committee on the Senate bill to provide for the admission of the State of Dakota into the Union, and for the organization of the Territory of Lincoln. Two minority reports were also presented.

MR. VAN WYCK, chairman of the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi, made a favorable report upon the bill to make Lake Borgne the outlet, to improve the low-water navigation of the river from New Orleans, La., to Cairo, Ill., and to protect and reclaim the valley lands of the Mississippi and tributaries from overflow. Mr. Edmunds reported favorably from the Committee on Foreign Relations the bill directing the Attorney General to bring suit in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia against Benjamin Weil, or his legal representatives or assigns, to determine whether the award made by the United States and Mexican mixed commission in respect to his claim was obtained by fraud and to recover any part of the money already paid to claimants. The House of Representatives spent the day debating the oleomargarine bill.

Grafted Varieties of Fruit Trees.

This opportunity to grow different kinds of fruit on one tree imparts a new and delightful interest to the orchard. The proprietor can always be on the lookout for something new and fine, and the few moments required in grafting or budding makes it his. The operation is so simple and easy that he can learn to perform it himself, and there are always plenty of adepts in the rural vicinage to give him his initial lesson. While he will keep the standard kinds for his main supply, he can gratify his taste and eye with some pretty innovations. I know of an apple tree which bears over a hundred varieties. A branch, for instance, is producing Yellow Bell-flowers. At a certain point in its growth where it has the diameter of a man's thumb, it may be grafted with the Roxbury Russet, and eventually the terminal bough of this growth with the Early Harvest. Thus may be presented the interesting spectacle of one limb of a tree yielding four distinct kinds of apples.—E. P. Roe, in Harper's Magazine.

THE adaptations with which plants are provided for making the most of the water that come to them in the form of rain or dew are thus classified by Lundstrom, who has made them a subject of special investigation: Depressions in the form of leaf-cups or of grooves is the epidermis; hair formations, in tufts or borders; hydroscopic membranes, as spots or stripes on the epidermis; and anatomical adaptations, such as water-absorbing textures and swelling glands. None of these features are found in the submerged parts of plants.

BASE-BALL.

Detroit Leading the Race for the League Championship, with Chicago a Good Second.

In the American Association, St. Louis Still in the Lead—Miscellaneous Base-Ball Notes.

The close of the fourth week of the league season found the Detroit nine still in the lead, with Chicago a close second, New York third, St. Louis fourth, Philadelphia fifth, Boston sixth, Kansas City seventh, and Washington eighth. Detroit has been playing great ball, not only at the bat, but their fielding has been almost perfect. Chicago has three postponed games to play, and Detroit one, which, if both clubs win them all, would leave them a tie for the pennant, while New York and Philadelphia are not out of the race by long odds.

In the American Association St. Louis maintains her old place in the lead, with Pittsburgh a good second, the Athletics, Brooklyn, and Cincinnati tied for third on games won, Baltimore one game behind them, Louisville one game behind Baltimore, and the Metropolitans bringing up the rear. The attendance has kept up in numbers, and bids fair to outnumber any previous season. The following schedules show the standing of the clubs at the close of the fourth week of the season:

THE NATIONAL LEAGUE.

GHASTLY BASE-BALL.

As a rule, says the New York Herald, the young doctors attached to the city hospitals are ambitious and devoted to the study of their profession. They are also human, and when they have an hour to spare they like to spend it in healthy exercise. In their college days most of them were admirers of the national game, and when luck and talent have given them a hospital practice they seek further practice in the popular sport. Nearly all our city hospitals have more or less ground attached where the staff can play "fungo" or "catchings."

Governeur Hospital cannot lay claim to any play-ground at all. Its situation precludes the possibility of the enjoyment of such a luxury. The absence of the practice grounds does not, however, dampen the ardor of the house staff for the game. A visitor to that institution lately came to this conclusion: It was 5 p. m., and the hard and patience-trying work of the house and dispensary were over for the day. The doctors adjourned to their room in the top floor, away from the wards. A game of base-ball began. There were only three doctors; therefore there were only pitcher, striker, and catcher. But they played a game all the same.

Oh, ye of the National League, what a game was there! The bat was a femur or thigh bone of some adult and defunct member of the human race, and the pitcher said the ball was made from an epithelioma taken from the ginglymus joint or hinge of his mother-in-law's jaw, tightly rolled up in a surgical bandage. Each took the bat in turn and "strikes," "balls," and "fouls" were called as in a regular game.

When he who was related to the ball by marriage took the bat a satanic smile stole over his face, and from the way he pounded that ball one would think he bore no goodwill toward the original owner. In this manner almost noiselessly this novel game of base-ball went on till a shrill whistle like that of a boatswain reverberated through the halls, followed by a voice, "Ambulance!"

That settled the game. Quick as a flash the striker picked up his cap, slid down the elevator cable, and away rolled the ambulance on a "hurry call."

BASE-HITS.

THE Chicagos have not lost a game this season in which McCormick pitched.

THOMAS YORK, an old League player, has been appointed an official umpire in the American Association.

THE Chicagos have the largest number of "stolen bases" to their credit of any League club to date.

THE Detroits are, undoubtedly, just at present playing the best ball in the league. They are making a greater number of hits, and fewer errors, than any other club.

THE Detroits have not lost a game or postponed a game on the home grounds this season, playing twelve consecutive games. A most remarkable feat in base-ball annals.

THE New York Club from all accounts is in a pretty badly broken-up condition. Ewing, their crack catcher, is suffering from a sprained tendon in the left thigh, and other members of the nine are laid up.

COMISKEY, of the St. Louis Maroons, was recently fined $225 for "sassing" the umpire. Missouri always was a great State for garden "sass," and now seems to be producing a very high-priced article of base-ball "sass."

A RETIRED baseballist, of some literary skill, was asked to write an epitaph for a man who had just died, after marrying his third wife. The ex-batter produced the following terse but expressive sentiment: "Out on third."

NIC YOUNG gives it as his opinion that the Washingtons are a better team and will have a much higher place in the race than most people now give them credit for. Nic is a pretty good judge, and his good opinion ought to inspire the new club to greater exertions for a good record.

AN unusual event occurred in one of the Chicago-Philadelphia games at Chicago, when Daily, pitching for the Phillies, had three Chicagos on the bases, two of them from called balls, and deliberately gave the third one his base, allowing a base-runner to walk home from third.

A HELLISH PLOT.

Evidence of Their Guilt Secured, and Wholesale Convictions Are Expected to Be Had.

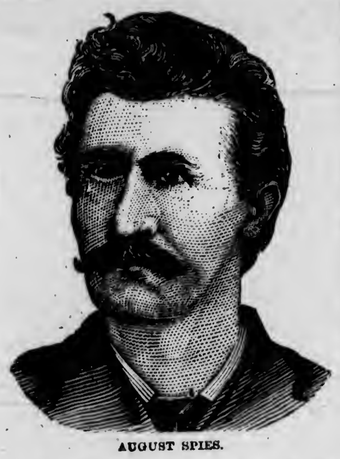
The indictments against the anarchists were laid before the Grand Jury on Wednesday and approved by an almost unanimous vote. The five German members of the jury did not hesitate to vote for the indictments. On the contrary, they were especially urgent in their desire to go on record against the destructionists, and to support all the charges which the State's Attorney thought wise to lodge against the prisoners. The indictments were read by Mr. Grinnell and voted upon separately. There were twenty-three in all.

A. R. Parsons was not included in the indictments. It has been hinted for some time that the police know where Parsons is, and expect to use him.



AUGUST SPIES.

August Spies was indicted for murder, conspiracy, and inciting to riot. These three charges were also voted against Samuel Fielden, Rudolph Schnauble, Adolph Fischer, and Louis Lingg. Schnauble is the only one in this lot who is not in custody. Michael Schwab is under indictment for murder and conspiracy, while Anton Hirschberger, John Apel, and George Engel are indicted for conspiracy and riot.

There are two informers. Who they are is not known, but they both belonged to the "Armed Party" of the anarchists, and both became approvers on the advice of their female relatives to save their own necks. The State's Attorney is confident that he can connect the actors in the Haymarket tragedy. If he does not convict Spies, Fielden, Schwab, Schnauble, Lingg, and Fischer of murder and hang them, he will send them, he says, to the penitentiary for a term for conspiracy, the punishment for which is three years.

So far as can be learned from the testimony of Captain Schaack and others before the jury, the story of the conspiracy savors of dime-novel literature, and makes one of the most thrilling chapters in the history of Chicago. It originated in the diseased brains of the rabid members of the anarchist groups, and it was they who carried it out to such a successful end, from their point of view. In working up the story Captain Schaack has a rightful claim to his reputation as an officer of recognized ability, and while he was compelled to go over ground that had been trodden on to some extent by others, he has unraveled the mystery, and though he has not found the bomb-throwers, he has wound the coils around Spies and his followers so that they can not possibly escape. To begin with, in their desire to overthrow the present government institutions and place themselves in control, the anarchists of Chicago resolved to exist in two forms—armed and for agitation. Both branches were composed largely of the same members, the only difference being that the armed anarchists were the extremists who favored bloodshed on the slightest provocation. These armed outlaws met in secret places, away from the meeting-place of the agitators so-called, and while they drilled with Winchesters, revolvers, and other deadly weapons, their followers were busily engaged in manufacturing dynamite and making bombs. Among these armed anarchists were the men William Lechtner and Gustaf Lehman, who have "squealed," and are now under arrest. Their story is that Lingg, Seligen (who told where the former was hiding), and George Engle, of Milwaukee avenue, have for a long time been engaged in making bombs. These bombs were removed by Lingg and his colaborers to the meeting-places of the armed wing of the anarchists, and were disposed of temporarily as was deemed prudent. It was generally understood that an attack was to be made on the police at the earliest opportunity when any of the anarchist meetings was interfered with. When Spies had indulged in his inflammatory remarks, causing the McCormick riots, he went to the Arbeiter Zeitung office and wrote the "Revenge!" circular which was set up by Fischer and Hirschberger, and printed by a well-known firm. These circulars were distributed, by command of Spies, by the then mysterious man on horseback, who is now known to the police, and who is wanted.

About the same time he indited the circular Spies expressed a desire to have the armed anarchists meet on that (Monday) night at the usual place—in a basement on West Lake street. Accordingly this meeting was held and either Lechtner or Lehman, the "informer," was the doorkeeper on that occasion. The intention of Spies to hold a mass meeting on the next night—the fatal May 4—in the Haymarket, was made known, together with the announcement that the time for action had arrived. Lingg, Fischer, Engel, and the others there expressed their belief that the police would attempt to break up the meeting, and it was resolved that, to prevent this, bombs should be used. A signal was agreed on as to when the bombs should be thrown into the ranks of the policemen, and in order to further carry out their diabolical designs details were made of squads of anarchists who would almost simultaneously attack some of the north, northwest, and southwest police stations. All the anarchists detailed were to be armed with the bombs, a number of which were in the basement at the time, having been brought there, it is supposed, by Lingg and Engel.

It was decided not only to use bombs in the northwestern section of the city, but in the southwestern, in the lumber region, and in outlying districts of the North Division as well. Men were detailed to work against the police stations at a given signal. It was also understood at this meeting that the gathering to protest against the action of the police at the McCormick works should not be held in the Haymarket Square proper, but on Desplaines street, near the Crane works, where there was less light, and where the gas-lamps could be easily tampered with. At the meeting three bomb-distributing points were determined on. One was on the North Side, off Clybourn avenue, one on the Southwest Side in the vicinity of the lumber region, and one on Milwaukee avenue. That there might be no scarcity of explosives Lingg and some of his confederates brought some to the place of meeting, and told the members of the armed party present that they could help themselves.

Some availed themselves of the opportunity. To prove these details the doorkeeper of the meeting will be placed on the stand when the trial comes off, and also one informer. The evidence on this point is complete as far as Lingg and Fischer are concerned. An effort was made to obtain from Capt. Schaack such information as he possessed with reference to the officers of the anarchist party. He refused to divulge this, but said he had evidence to prove that August Spies was the life and soul of the party here. The evidence against this person is strong. It will be proved—and the testimony before the jury was to the effect—that the "revenge" circular was in August Spies' handwriting. It will also be proved that a cipher signal for meeting for action, the meaning of which was explained at the Lake street basement meeting, and which was printed in the editorial page of the Arbeiter Zeitung the 4th of May is also in Spies' handwriting. This password or signal meant in English "We are peaceable." When that was uttered at the Desplaines street meeting the "work" was to commence. There is some doubt as to who gave the signal, but it was given, and Spies understood its significance. So did Fischer and Hirschberger, who assisted Fischer to "set up" the signal, and Fielden, who made the speech preceding the bomb-throwing. It has been also in evidence before the Grand Jury that Engel assisted Lingg in the manufacture of the bombs, that he knew what they were intended for, and that he even manufactured independently of Lingg, a crucible having been found at his house. The evidence against Parsons and Schnaible, not yet indicted, but certain to be, is also quite full.

When the police were attacked in the Haymarket the fact was to be made known as quickly as possible to squads of anarchists at the various rendezvous, and by their assaulting the police stations in the vicinity it was hoped to prevent the entire reserve force of officers from concentrating. Having arranged these matters satisfactorily, the conspirators were informed that the Arbeiter Zeitung would publish a certain paragraph, the words of which, when uttered by Spies or some other leader, would be a signal for the assault on the officers in the Haymarket. The paragraph, it is said, was published in the Arbeiter Zeitung, and the Haymarket meeting was held in strict accordance with the prearranged plans, Spies, Fielden, Schwab, Fischer, Lingg, Engel, Lechtner, Lehman, Hirschberger, Parsons, Schnauble, and the other leading anarchists being present. To further carry out their infamous designs the lights in the vicinity were turned out, and when Capt. Ward ordered the mob to disperse the signal was given, and the bomb was thrown with the effect already known.

All this information has been gleaned, and the names of several persons not yet arrested are now in possession of the officers, who are untiring in their efforts to discover the bomb-thrower. The confessions of Lechtner and Lehman are convincing, and although Capt. Schaack is unwilling to make any further disclosures at present, his subordinates say there will be more startling revelations made when the cases come to trial.

For a long time past it has been a rule of the anarchist groups that each member should contribute weekly thirty cents toward the purchase of rifles and revolvers. These, it appears, they bought in lots and at wholesale rates, and whenever the weekly assessments or contributions of a member amounted to a little more than the cost of a rifle or a revolver, he became the owner of one of the repeaters. A portion of the regular dues of members, and the proceeds of parties and picnics, were devoted to the purchase of additional arms, the manufacture of explosives, and the strengthening and advancement of the organization.

Next week the Arbeiter Zeitung will be printed at No. 274 West Twelfth street, where the new press is at present. The owner of the building is E. H. Ellers, and he signed the lease for a year.

It is believed that the Grand Jury will indict about twenty more persons.

One of the grand jurors asked Capt. Schaack how he accounted for the comparative failure of the anarchist plot. He said the fellows were nearly all arrant cowards. Some of the persons detailed to give the signals failed to act. Others detailed for work did not call for their bombs at the depot. He said that the only thing that keeps most of them now from turning informers is the fear that they may be murdered and the hesitancy of the police authorities to accept their testimony. Their cowardice alone prevented the massacre of the police force and the probable pillage of the city.

The socialists and anarchists are making strenuous efforts to raise a large sum of money for the defense of the indicted men, and it is reported that they are succeeding. About $1,000 has been already subscribed, and at least $5,000 is expected by the committee. One of the men interested in the work states that there will be plenty of money. The best possible legal talent will be secured. Mrs. A. R. Parsons has written to Gen. B. F. Butler, to enlist his sympathies for the imprisoned men. He has not been heard from. A few days ago a member of the defense committee asked Gen. I. N. Stiles to undertake the defense. Gen. Stiles declined.

Upon the refusal of Gen. Stiles to accept a retainer the committee set to work to secure Col. Robert G. Ingersoll, and one of the committee says he has the utmost confidence that Ingersoll will accept.

THE PUBLIC PRINTER.

Will Have a Little Longer Lease of Office Life.

[Washington special.]

When a delegation of Congressmen called upon the President a few weeks ago to urge the appointment of one of their constituents for the position of Government Printer they were informed that no change would be made in that office until after the adjournment of Congress, inasmuch as it would be manifestly absurd to remove the head of a great workshop like the printing office during the busiest season of the year for the sole purpose of creating a vacancy. The President is reported as saying that if Congress shall remain in session until August the time will be too limited between that period and reassembling for Mr. Rounds' successor to properly familiarize himself with his new duties. The construction which Mr. Rounds' friends put upon this statement is that that gentleman will be asked to retain his present position until next March.

NINE YEARS AND TEN MONTHS.

That Is the Length of Time Alderman Jaehne Will Spend in the Penitentiary.

[New York special.]

Ex-Alderman Henry W. Jaehne, convicted of bribery in connection with the Broadway franchise steal, has been sentenced by Judge Barrett to serve nine years and ten months in State Prison.

Jaehne was pale and his eyes had a weary look when he stood up to receive his sentence. In reply to the clerk he said that he was 36 years old, and a jeweler by trade. He made no reply when asked if he had anything to say why sentence should not be pronounced. In passing sentence Judge Barrett said that it was humiliating that a man who was selected to public office in this city should have so heinously betrayed his trust as the prisoner had.

"I could not be unmoved at the spectacle of your weeping wife and broken-hearted mother," continued the court; "but the saddest thing of all about your case is the doubt which pervaded many good and honest minds of your conviction. There was not a doubt of your guilt. It was universally conceded when the evidence was in that the case against you was clear, convincing, and overwhelming. There was no doubt of your guilt, but there was a doubt concerning the chances of convicting you.

"The first doubt seems to have arisen from lack of faith in the efficiency of our jury system, the zeal of our public prosecutor, and the efficiency of our police. These doubts will be dispelled by your conviction. It teaches an important lesson. The majority of people in public life have have not their price. Let me again say at this point that your offense was not technical bribery, but a stupendous bribery for the furtherance of a stupendous transaction.

"Have the people of this city ceased to remember the fate of Tweed, of Genet, of Connolly, of Fish, and of Ward? The people are not all honey-combed with corruption. According to the testimony in your case the two only honest men in the board were sneered at by you as dudes. Our worthy Sheriff—Grant—refused the proffered bribe, and it is entirely immaterial, as was suggested, whether they expected the reward—Grant to run for Mayor and O'Connor for Governor."

Jaehne's counsel made application to Judge Daniels for a stay of proceedings and it was denied. Jaehne has been taken to Sing Sing.

SHOCKING ACCIDENT.

The Wife of Minister Pendleton Killed, and His Daughter Seriously Injured.

[New York telegram.]

Mrs. Alice Key Pendleton, wife of the Hon. George H. Pendleton of Ohio, United States Minister to Germany, was instantly killed in Central Park, and her daughter, Jennie Frances Pendleton, aged 22 years, seriously injured. The ladies were riding in an open victoria behind a high-spirited horse. While on the main drive the horse became unmanageable and ran away, pulling the driver over the dashboard. Mrs. Pendleton jumped from the carriage and struck on her head, while Miss Pendleton followed and was knocked unconscious.

A park policeman ran up an instant later to find Mrs. Pendleton dead and Miss Pendleton apparently dying. On being removed to the hospital the young lady revived and may possibly recover. The body of Mrs. Pendleton was taken to the menagerie building, and was identified several hours later by Frank K. Pendleton, her son, a well-known lawyer of this city, who had begun a search for his mother and sister, having become alarmed at their prolonged absence.

Mrs. Pendleton and daughter arrived here from Boston two months ago to nurse the wife of Frank Pendleton. At the inquest the Coroner's jury exonerated the driver.

Mrs. Pendleton was 61 years of age, and was married to Minister Pendleton in 1846. She was Miss Alice Key, a daughter of Francis Scott Key, the author of "The Star-Spangled Banner," and a sister of Philip Barton Key, who was killed by Gen. Sickles.

A TEXAS DUEL.

Mr. Carroll Got His Work In on the Padgetts, and Was Willing to Die.

[Canton (Texas) dispatch.]

At the close of some litigation here between the Padgetts and Carrolls, two families residing near Grand Saline, Van Zant County, between whom there has been a feud of long standing, J. M. Carroll got into an altercation with W. J. Padgett and his sons Robert and James. Only bitter and violent words passed, until the Padgetts moved off to their horses. Carroll took his breech-loading shotgun and stepped out in front of the Padgetts, cursing them and saying that they did not have the nerve to use their guns. Bob Padgett instantly raised his gun, took deliberate aim, and fired.

Then commenced an impromptu duel between the two men. Padgett's first shot, which contained twelve buckshot, took effect in Carroll's right lung and the upper part of his stomach. Carroll's return shot took effect in Padgett's right and left lung and left arm. Carroll's second shot shattered Padgett's arm from the elbow downward. Padgett, with his left arm horribly mangled and bleeding by his side, raised his gun with his right and poured the contents of his second barrel into Carroll's neck and shoulders when the latter had turned to reload his piece. The Padgetts then rode off.

Carroll, who was felled to the ground by the buckshot received in his neck, raised himself and fired both barrels at his retreating enemies, killing one of their horses. Carroll then fell again, and, saying: "Well, boys, I got my work in on them all right, and I am willing to die," gave a gasp and was dead. Bob Padgett was carried home by his father and brother, and cannot live. It is thought that several others will fall victims to this deadly feud before it is settled.

THE PRESIDENT'S MARRIAGE.

Who Introduced Cheap Labor?

One of the London journals has the grace to say that Europe, having adopted a system of exporting paupers to the United States is primarily answerable for the trouble anarchists are now giving this country. It adds that America is now reaping the results of her folly in trying to make American citizens of the scum Europe.

For twenty-five years the alleged aim of politicians who have foisted on America the misnamed protective system have claimed to justify their act in the necessity they conceived or pretended to exist of saving American workingmen from competition with the panper labor of Europe, during all the while many of the manufacturers in whose interest the legislators were really acting were selfishly and systematically bringing the pauper labor of Europe to the very doorway of the American laborer. What settlements now surround the great iron mills of the country? The settlements made at the instigation of mill-owners by cheap labor drawn from the plains of Poland and of Bohemia. The American laborer whom the protected industries were to protect no longer exists in the factories, forges and furnaces of this country. Furniture manufacturers of America have maintained in Bohemia shipping agents of human freight, and have settled the bills, to be recouped from the earnings of mechanics thus brought over. The mines and the coke fields of Pennsylvania swarm now with semi-savage Hungarians brought thither, the coal and iron barons declare, in order to dignify, ennoble and enrich American labor! And all the while American labor has been driven into other channels.

These manufacturers, deliberately false to the specious plea by which they secure the enactment of prohibitory tariffs and selfishly eager to cut down and cheapen the labor market which they professed to maintain, are responsible in large measure for the destruction of the American workman as he was known before the days of a war tariff and the substitution of the latest and least desirable immigration from Europe. They sowed the wind. We cannot blame Europe for the alacrity with which it welcomed the agent of the American manufacturer, ridding it of the poorest of its population, but the American laborer and the American citizen not a beneficiary of the hypocritical tariff law have a strong indictment to present against the mill men and manufacturers of America who, in pursuance of blindly selfish policy, have brought the present tumult upon the land.—Chicago Herald.

Consequently he ordered a number of nihilists to be hanged some time before the date fixed in their sentences. "I want to see all such jobs cleared up before I leave," said the conscientious general.

There is no such word as diamond known in the trade for the article in nature. The word used for diamonds in the rough is bort. It is a Dutch word. The rough diamond looks like a piece of alum with a little glazing about it. It is harder on the outside than within, and seems to have a core like a knot in a piece of very fine wood, which is softer than the out circles of the wood. Sometimes it is impossible to cut a diamond of great promise because there is a hard place within it. The art of cutting the diamond is one of long practice, and requires the exercise of economy and taste as well as mechanism.

The immense quantity of peanuts grown in Africa, South America, and in our own southern States afford not only a pleasant article of food, but a very large source of oil production. The seed contains from 45 to 50 per cent of a nearly colorless, bland, fixed oil, not unlike olive oil, and used for similar purposes; it is a non-drying oil, which changes little by exposure to the air, and remains fluid even at several degrees colder than thirty-two degrees, Fah. A very great quantity of soap is manufactured from this kind of oil; indeed, some of the finest toilet soaps imported from France are of this material.

General Adam Badeau, speaking of English servants, says: Another perquisite is the cast-off clothes. The valets and the ladies' maids are entitled to these, and are outraged if you make any contrary disposition of them. I once gave a child about my house some old handkerchiefs, at which my valet protested; and I heard the little one retort: "You get the shirts." They often look smarter than those they serve, wearing their wardrobes sometimes on finer figures. I have heard of ladies who sold their satins to their maids, though never of a gentleman who bargained in old clothes with his man. When lovely women really stoops to anything unworthy, she can descend to a point that leaves our sex far behind.

Says the Washington correspondent of the Philadelphia Press: "Bob Ingersoll called upon Secretary Lamar at the Interior department, and in the course of half an hour's conversation said scores of witty things, which Lamar, lying back upon the sofa in his private office, enjoyed immensely. Ingersoll finally made some remark in ridicule of orthodox Christianity. There was a momentary pause when he finished, and the Secretary jumped to his feet, throwing his long hair, with an impatient gesture, back from his forehead. 'Ingersoll,' he exclaimed, 'I hope to live to see the day when you will come to this capital city and preach to the world Christ and Him crucified! With your magnificent abilities and splendid oratory you could work a revival such as the world has never seen. I hope, Bob, to see the day when this will come to pass, and you could not engage in any grander or more noble work.'"

One of the most novel applicants for office, says a Washington letter to the Boston Traveller, is Mrs. Thompson, who is the post-mistress of Louisville, Ky., and who is here seeking reappointment. Mrs. Thompson is quite a character in her way. She is the daughter of Alexander Campbell, who was the founder of the sect of Campbellites of which Garfield was a member. She was first appointed by President Hayes. Mrs. Thompson had her eye on the Louisville post-office long before Hayes was declared to be elected. At first she thought that Tilden would be successful; so she got up a monster petition and addressed it to "President Tilden." A little while afterward the electoral commission declared in favor of Hayes. Mrs. Thompson, without a moment's hesitancy, struck out the word "Tilden" at the head of the petition and inserted the word "Hayes." When the petition reached the white house Hayes' attention was drawn to it. He laughed heartily when told of what Mrs. Thompson had done, and, after saying that "it was just like a woman," he declared that he would appoint her, and he did.

"One of the old standbys of Washington society is Gen. Van Vliet," says the Washington correspondent of the Cleveland Leader. "You will find him at every grand reception, at nearly every big dinner, and you may have heard the story of how Gen. Sherman, who is nearly as great a dinner-goer as Gen. Van Vliet, on forgetting the place at which he was invited to dinner one night, saw Van Vliet passing his house in full dress, and followed him, being sure that he would lead him to the right place, and was not disappointed. Well, during Arthur's administration the general was a leading figure as he is now. He was a strong republican, and every one is now surprised to see him so close in with the democrats. Still every one likes Van Vliet, and an army officer should have no politics. But to my story. The day after Cleveland was inaugurated Gen. Van Vliet appeared at the white house, and began to instruct, in the presence of others, Col. Lamont as to how he and the president should carry on the administration, especially in the social way. After he had gone on at some length, one of the bystanders, who was a statesman of some prominence, spoke up: 'And pray, how long have you been a democrat, Gen. Van Vliet?' 'Since yesterday noon, sir,' was the reply."

President Cleveland is the first president of the United States who ever made the rights and welfare of workingmen and women the special subject of a message to congress, and yet the republican press is howling to know what a democratic administration has done for labor. The fact is Cleveland and the democrats, since March 4th, 1885, have done more for the people than the republicans did during their entire lease of power of 25 years.—Cheboygan Democrat.

Sunday afternoon the boys' band went out for a sail and took their instruments along. When about the middle of Round lake they commenced to play, some parties on the bridge asked if it was not the East Jordan band, saying the Charlevoix boys couldn't play as good as that. But they did play "as good as that," all the same. There was not an East Jordan man in the party.

The East Jordan Enterprise has the following concerning the Bridge Street house, recently re-opened by R. A. Campbell: "During our stay in Charlevoix last Saturday, we took dinner at the Bridge Street house, which has lately been opened by Mr. R. A. Campbell, a former resident of Traverse City. The house has been thoroughly renovated, making its interior a model of neatness. The tables are spread with the best the market affords, and at no place in town can the inner man be better gratified than at the Bridge Street house tables. We bespeak for Mr. Campbell a large and lucrative business, and can heartily recommend this house to our people."

Maxwell's Uncle Tom's Cabin is advertised for an engagement at Bartholomew's opera house next Wednesday evening, June 9th. The Toledo Telegram has the following concerning the company: "Uncle Tom's Cabin as presented by Maxwell's initial company, has in it so much that is new, novel and charming that the people do not tire of it. The scenic effects are fine, the jubilee singers are good, the two Marks bring out all there is belonging to that peculiar character, and Uncle Tom is the personification of religious devotion, self sacrifice and tender love; the performing dog is a wonder, and in fact, the entire performance is a series of surprises which cannot fail to please."

At the February term of circuit court, Moore, and Graham, the two young men who were to have been tried for complicity in the murder of an Indian last summer, were released on bail to appear here at the next term of court. Accordingly last Tuesday, they put in an appearance, accompanied by their attorney, and proceeded to the court house for trial. After waiting all day for the judge and prosecuting attorney to put in an appearance, their attorney adjourned court, thus freeing them and releasing their bondsmen. It is authoritatively stated here that the bright (?) genius who officiates in the capacity of county prosecutor, really expected in the simplicity of his soul, that the prisoners would show up at Boyne City. In this he was slightly mistaken. They were cited to appear here, and they did so.—Enterprise.

Obituary.

Mrs. Lottie Webster Long, wife of Morell Long, died at her residence in Hayes township on Saturday, May 22, 1886, aged eighteen years and four months, after a very brief and painful illness, leaving an infant son to grow up without a mother's ever-watchful care. Mrs. Long was well known to all the pioneers of Hayes township, as well as to most of the older residents of Charlevoix, and the number of her warm friends was limited only by her acquaintance. The funeral services were held Sunday afternoon, May 23d, and were attended by a large number of people from Charlevoix and other adjoining townships.

An obscure paper, known as the Sun, having attacked the financial integrity and official honor of Col. Sanford, postmaster at Lansing, the Sentinel of that city brands the Sun as a malicious slanderer, and asserts that the character of Col. Sanford is that of an honest, public spirited, generous gentleman, with a purse open to every call of charity and a heart animated by sympathy for every good cause and for every person suffering from poverty and misfortune. Col. Sanford has an extended acquaintance throughout the state, and is everywhere regarded as an honorable gentleman.—Cheboygan Democrat.

☞With Babyhood for June comes a supplement with pattern outlines for the "Gertrude Baby Suit," the invention of a Chicago homœopathic physician, who says he was "the only old lady present at a certain birth," and was so impressed with the absurdity of the old style of "first toilet" that this simple suit was evolved; one pin answers for the usual dozen or more, and the saving of trouble and worry to the mother in dressing the baby is said to be in keeping with the increased comfort secured to the child. 15 cents a number, $1.50 a year; 5 Beekman St., New York.

The Great German Doctor.

The remarkable phase in the practice of Dr. Peter W. Schmidt (frequently called Dr. Peter) is, he never asked one to describe their disease, his intuitive perceptions being so strong he can tell any one their trouble without asking a question. His success is phenomenal. His practice enormous. He is sought after by hundreds wherever he goes, because he cures where every physician and remedy has failed. The giving of his great medicine, Golden Seal Bitters, which has made his great success, to the world marks a new era in medicine. Blood, liver, kidney, and stomach disorders yield to this master of disease, and its wonderful cures are regarded as phenomenal, but the germ of faith ever says, "What has been may be again." We say to the sick and discouraged give Golden Seal Bitters a trial. It is all we ask. They will speak for themselves. Sold by Perry Weed and Dr. C. W. Crouter.

BUTTER AND EGGS WANTED

CONFIDENCE.

BY W. A. DUNN.

Flowers may bloom and look sweet,
Hope may die in despair,
Hearts may melt at a maiden's feet;
Not mine, for you are enshrined there.

Birds may sing and seem glad,
Happiness may shed its tear,
Lives may be made gloomy and sad;
Not mine, as long as you are near.

The sun may shine warm and clear,
Devotion may lose its charm,
Love may be whispered to a selfish ear;
Not mine, for constancy fears no harm.

Stars may twinkle in glee,
The best of friends may part,
Sympathy may take wings and flee;
Not mine, I've a lily's heart.

Let the years come and go,
Let tears and smiles have their fill,
Let the rivers cease to flow;
But, love, you must be with me still.

Hearts have often been broken,
Lovers have parted mad;
Not me, for constancy is the only word spoken,
Fidelity the only thought I've had.

THE DOUBLE ESCAPE.

BY CAPTAIN JAMES MOUNTFORD.

One evening the services of spies was the subject of conversation; and, between a pause in the argument, the Colonel remarked:

"I think the majority of the so-called spies who suffered were perfectly innocent of any such intention. I had a narrow escape myself."

"We are listening for the story, uncle," cried his niece; "you must be very cautious in your speech, or you will be forced into the relation of a story."

The Colonel smiled.

"An old man is seldom unwilling to relate his adventures," he said, "and I am not of the number of those who are."

"Major B—— and I had been schoolfellows; later in life we were friends. At the commencement of hostilities we joined opposite factions. He was a Tennessean; I had imbibed the politics of 'old' Massachusetts, and our difference of opinion was very natural.

"Nevertheless, our friendship did not change, and when my duty brought me within twenty miles of his plantation, he invited me to pay him a visit.

"The change from the hard fare of the camp to the company and table of my friend was a pleasure I was not likely to refuse.

"The Union troops were at that time victorious, and although the command to which Major B—— was attached had their quarters quite near, I anticipated no danger.

"Attiring myself in plain clothes, I started upon my visit, reaching the Major's residence at noon.

"I was made very welcome, and passed a pleasant day. But I could not fail to see that my friend was preoccupied and very grave, which was unusual with him, his merry disposition being well known.

"After nightfall, when we were seated in the Major's private room, engaged with cigars and talk, I hinted that he seemed uncommonly serious.

"'I am serious, Frank,' he said, with a grave smile, 'and I believe I should tell you why.'

"I thought he should, and as I requested his confidence, he said that all his fear was for me.

"'Indeed!' cried I, 'I am very comfortable just at present. How joyful all my comrades would be were they in the same situation.'

"'I doubt it,' was the Major's reply. 'We have advanced our lines, and you are now within them. I received the news soon after you came. Your danger is heightened by the fact that spies have been doing considerable damage lately.'

"'And I'm liable to be shot if caught, eh?'

"'I am afraid so.'

"The subject was dropped for the time. It was merely a suspicion, and might not be fulfilled. We became very lively as the evening waned; but our conviviality was suddenly dashed by the entrance of a servant.

"The black's eyes were almost starting from his head, and he informed us, in an excited whisper, that a posse of soldiers were approaching the house.

"This news was confirmed by the sound of men and horses in the yard without.

"'Come into my bed chamber,' cried the Major, leaping to his feet. 'If there is any danger it will allow us time to prepare for it.'

"He hurried me into another apartment, and, locking me inside, went to review his visitors.

"In five minutes he returned, his face expressive of the utmost concern.

"'It's Captain Trock,' he said, 'with a company of soldiers. He's my enemy, and would like nothing better than to bring me into trouble. He told my wife he was in search of a spy, who had been seen in the neighborhood. He certainly suspects you to be in the house.'

"This speech disturbed me not a little. To be executed as a spy was, even in idea, simply horrible. 'I'll have to run for it,' I said.

"'Yes, but you are liable to be captured, and then nothing is gained. Here's my uniform,' and he threw the articles upon the floor. 'Dress yourself immediately and slip out of the window.'

"I have thought since that this was not very sound advice. Should I be discovered in the enemy's lines, and attired in their colors, I would be almost beyond pardon.

"As it was, I was allowed no time to think, and quickly began to metamorphose myself. I was hastened by the sound of loud voices, raised to a suspicious tone, without; and, a moment later, I slipped through the window.

"If he thought about it at all, the Major doubtless supposed that I would remain skulking near the house until the foes had left the premises; but I was driven away by seeing a soldier approaching just as I reached the ground.

"He did not observe me, and stealing around to the front of the house, I reached the road, and started away upon the run toward the Union lines.

"I hurried along for something like a mile, and began to regain my confidence. There was no moon, but the numerous stars gave sufficient light to warn me of the presence of foes should they appear, and also, unfortunately, to discover me to them.

"Major B—— had said the Confederates had advanced their lines, and I expected every moment to be challenged.

"Still I must proceed. The danger behind was just as great, and far more certain.

"Suddenly I heard the sound of horses in the wood on the right hand. I guessed that the foes were there, and leaving the open road in haste, passed among the trees upon the left.

"I stole along for some distance, and began to think I was to make a clean escape. But fate was against me, and when I saw two soldiers standing beneath a tree directly upon a line with myself, and not over a dozen feet away, I gave myself up for 'one of the lost.'

"But they did not seem to have observed me, and, halting immediately, I hoped darkness would screen me from their eyes.

"Five minutes I stood there, motionless. The fellows were talking together in semi-drunken tones, and I saw a bottle pass between them.

"This seemed favorable to me, so far; but my hopes were soon blown aside.

"One of the men saw me, and promptly directed the other's attention in the same direction.

"Whether it was the liquor they had taken, I have no means of knowing; but they made no attempt to approach, but stood consulting in low tones.

"I could not understand it; but even this was better than a downright discovery, and I stood still, straining my sense of hearing to catch their words.

"I heard the word 'Major' pass between them several times, and thinking they took me for the gentleman whose clothes I wore, I was about to walk in without noticing them, when one of the rascals shouted an oath, and, raising his rifle, discharged it at my head.

"I felt a stinging sensation immediately above my left ear, and my brain whirled. I must have thought myself dead, for I fell forward at full length, my face downward.

"I recovered my senses almost instantly, and as the rascals were running toward me, I lay perfectly quiet.

"'You've killed him, Hunk,' said one, in a shrill whisper.

"He stood over me, but did not attempt to touch my person.

"'Blank him!' growled the other, 'I don't keer if I hev. I remember how he thrashed me t'other day.'

"'For killing the old woman's cow?'

"'Yes' [another blank]; 'and if shooting a cow is to git a man thrashed I don't want to stay here no more.'

"'What are you goin' to do? You didn't speak to him 'fore you fired, and everybody knows you hate him. You'll be shot yourself.'

"'So will you.'

"'I didn't do the shooting.'

"'No; but you stood by, and didn't stop me.'

"The rascals argued in this strain for some time, and it was at last decided that they should spoil the body, and desert to the opposite side.

"I was well pleased with this decision, you may imagine, and scarcely breathed while the rogues rifled my pockets. But I was not yet clear, for they concluded to hide the body, otherwise it would be found too soon, and they should be stopped.

"I imagined at one time that they would attempt to cut me in pieces, that I might be more easily concealed, and was hesitating about discovering myself.

"Had I done so, instant death would have been the result; for the fellows would then be commended, as I had no business where I was. They had already deprived me of my weapons, and defense was out of the question.

"But, luckily for me, they at last raised me between them, and carried their supposed victim off through the woods, to a point further from the camp.

"Reaching, what they considered a convenient point, I was dropped upon the ground, and my murderers began to pile rubbish, brushwood, and, at last, logs upon me.

"I was in no enviable position. It is not the ill-fortune of every man to be present at his own burial; for such I soon discovered it to be.

"Fear incited the fellows to great labor, and when they had satisfied themselves that I was concealed past discovery, so much weight had been piled upon me that it was impossible that I should release myself.

"Besides I felt that I should be suffocated; a great log, heavy with water, lay upon my breast, and every limb was weighted down as close as though I had been in my grave.

"At last the men were leaving, and the horror of being left to perish helplessly alone came upon me. With an effort I essayed to call them back; but my voice was nearly pressed out of my lungs, and they returned not.

"The extreme horror of the next hour is scarcely to be told. I felt myself slowly, but inevitably, dying. Nothing, it seemed, could interpose to save my life. The only persons who could know my situation were far away by this time.

"I endeavored to compose my mind, and die like a stoic, but miserably failed. We all must die, I told myself; why this fastidiousness as to the manner? This horrible pain cannot continue always; and then I thought of my wife and children, who would look in vain for my return.

"I bore all the pains of the most terrible death; but relief came at last. Overstretched nature could sustain no more, and I fainted.

"How long I remained unconscious I know not, and it matters little. I wakened at last, and found a number of men around me.

"Major B—— was kneeling at my side, a bottle of liquor in his hand, which, as I opened my eyes with a groan, he held to my lips.

"As I revived, my friend helped me up, and, looking around, I found myself in the midst of Confederate soldiers.

"'What is it, Major?' I asked, weakly, for I was still thinking. 'How came I here?'

"'Don't you know, old fellow,' he responded, looking compassionately in my face. 'I found you under the brush heap there. The scoundrels thought they had murdered you.'

"The Major understood its meaning, for, with a glance at the gentleman, he turned again to me, saying, in a troubled tone:

"'You are not out of trouble yet. That's Captain Trock. He discovered that you had been at my residence, and trailed you afterward. You owe him your life indirectly, but he seems determined to resume the gift.'

"All this was given in a whisper, while the men stood suspiciously by.

"'I don't understand you,' I returned.

"'Trock captured one of the would-be assassins, and forced a confession from him. He is——'

"At that instant the Captain, who was too impatient to withhold longer, touched my arm.

"'You must to the commandant,' he said, harshly.

"The soldiers closed in around me (and the Major was included in the circle, and seemed to fully share me ignomony), and we marched slowly off through the wood.

"I felt considerably relieved to breathe again in the clear air, but still my danger was nearly as great.

"Captain Trock was a sour, haughty man, and there was no sign of a relenting disposition in his countenance.

"My friend told me in whispers as we walked along that he had been drawn into a dispute with the Captain, in which the latter's vanity had been joined, and that since that time he had pursued him with great vindictiveness.

"I knew my friend's disposition too well to imagine that he would receive an affront from any man unless powerless himself. This considered, I thought his case, as well as my own, desperate.

"We soon reached the commandant's tent, and, although it was late, an immediate examination was resolved upon.

"The commandant was a rigid-looking man of fifty, and he questioned me in a tone which decided my fate. It would be unnecessary to repeat everything that was said and done, but the substance was, that I had been found within the lines (at the Major's residence); that my friend had first concealed, and then furnished me with a a disguise as a means of escape.

"Captain Trock expressed his belief that I had been skulking in the neighborhood for several days; and one of the men who had fired upon me (the other did not appear) declared that his companion had taken papers from my pocket which the person who searched my pockets bore away with him.

"When the fellow whom Trock had captured a short distance from the camp was asked why he was deserting, he returned that he and his companion, after the shooting, had mistaken me for the Major, and being frightened, they had fled.

"This was sufficient evidence for a military court, and notwithstanding strenuous denial, I was sentenced to be shot at daybreak. The Major was to have another examination.

"I observed a triumphant sneer upon Captain Trock's face as we were led from the tent. He was probably amply satisfied with his revenge.

"We were conducted to a tent bordering upon the roadway, and placing our guards, Captain Trock retired.

"Although I was expected to die at sunrise, my fatigue was so overpowering that, had not the Major been with me, I should have fallen asleep when left alone.

"But my friend suffered the greatest anguish; to be disgraced in this manner he declared unbearable. He was of an eager, ambitious disposition, and many were the resolutions he formed to avenge himself upon the Captain.

"The night passed, as nights always will, no matter how uncomfortable our situation may be; and when the guard entered the tent in the morning they found me sleeping.

"I was quickly aroused, and taking leave of my friend, who protested my innocence with tears in his eyes, I marched from the tent.

"Long suffering seems to blunt our senses at times, at least such was my case at present. I felt sullenly desperate, and ready for any undertaking, however hazardous.

"I found a file of soldiers drawn up in front of the tent, and Captain Trock, dismounted from his horse, which stood alone at a little distance to the left, waiting for my appearance.

"As I saw the horse, the idea of attempting a desperate flight occurred to me.

"Nothing worse than death can happen, thought I, and recklessly determined to execute my plan.

"I complained of faintness, and seemed unable to stand. One of the two guards, more compassionate, perhaps, than usual, started to procure a glass of water.

"The file of soldiers stood twenty feet distant down the road. The Captain stood at their head, his glances fastened upon me.

"But the steed, which had the greatest interest for me at that moment, had strayed quite near me, and was quietly picking the damp grass at the roadside.

"Everything seemed favorable, and, suddenly calling every faculty into play, I sprang upon my guard, knocked him down, and a second later was in the saddle.

"My sudden onset frightened the horse, and he scarcely needed the incentive which I applied with my heel to send him flying down the road at breakneck speed.

"I heard the Captain give command to fire; then came the crash of musketry, and the balls whistled all around me. My greatest fear was for the horse; but the soldiers seemed to have fired high, for no bullets reached their mark.

"My mount was high-mettled, and before the soldiers could reach their horses, I was a considerable distance in advance.

"I was not pursued far, and two hours later reached my proper camp, where the resolve entered my mind, as I threw myself from the steed who had served me so well, that never again would I pay a visit within the Confederate lines.

"The Major's innocence appeared," said the Colonel, after a pause, "but he had lost caste, and upon receiving a slight wound, a few months after my escape, he left the army.

"But before doing so, he had punished Captain Trock for his perjury, by running him through in a duel."

Executions in France.

They have no blundering executions in France. The executioner is neither a hero nor an outcast, as in other countries. The system of executions has been simplified as much as possible. The instrument is erected the night before, and tried on a dummy to see that it works well. Formerly the condemned was often tortured and torn and hacked, and he was always encouraged by having a good look at the gleaming knife as he approached the ghastly instrument. Now the knife is hidden, the victim is in position in two or three seconds, a noiseless touch of the button, and all is over.

A Story of Daniel Drew.

Mr. Drew was squeezed one famous day by operators in Northwest stock, and he laid down a big pile of money in losses. Not unnaturally, Mr. Drew felt grieved, while other people were correspondingly high-spirited and happy. It was a great thing to catch the wiley deacon napping, and a hundred jokes went the rounds in celebration of his upsetting. Some of these bits of humor fell upon Uncle Daniel's own ears, but he didn't seem to pay much heed to comments that made all the rest of Wall street laugh hilariously. Some young men old enough to know better even went so far as to accost him personally and laugh in his face. Behind the smile that lighted his face it is barely possible that the recording angel heard a grinding of teeth, but the festive brokers did not hear any such thing, and they went on their way rejoicing for many days. One evening a big congregation of them were in an up-town club when all unexpected in marched Uncle Daniel Drew. He had called only for a moment, he was hunting for a man he did not find. It was not an excessively warm night, but Uncle Daniel seemed to be much overheated, and two or three times he drew out his big white handkerchief and bathed his face in it; and finally out of his pocket with the handkerchief came a slip of white paper to float and circle around till it settled at his feet on the floor. Mr. Drew didn't notice that he had lost anything; the speculative gentlemen before him did, and the foot of one enterprising broker was big enough to cover the slip of paper over as it lay there on the floor. Mr. Drew went out. The eager crowd gathered up the white scrap, and this in the Wall street king's own unmistakable handwriting was what it said: "Buy me all the Oshkosh stock you can at any price you can get it below par." Oshkosh was already pretty high. Everybody was agreeing that it was too high, and that a tumble was inevitable, but the handwriting of the millionaire operator plainly exposed on that slip of paper was sufficient to convince the eager crowd in that club-room that night that some new scheme must be afloat to send it further skyward. Right through the mill-stone they saw it all, and then and there they made up a pool to buy twenty or thirty thousand shares the next day. They did, and the man who sold it to them was Daniel Drew. He blandly told them all about it as they saw their money all going to pot Oshkosh declined a dozen points a day. Mr. Drew's handkerchief exercise had been carefully planned.

The Classification of Book-Lovers.

Mr. Sala has lately made a careful division of book-lovers into four classes, and people who enjoy stocking their shelves from time to time will now be able to describe their motives in book-buying by the use of the terms which Mr. Sala has defined with characteristic illustrations. It is a misfortune that more euphonious terms could not be compounded from the Greek to characterize two of the divisions of the great and growing army of book-lovers, but in the general interest of accuracy and conformity there will be no revolt on the part of those who find themselves described as "bibliognostes" and "bibliotaphe." According to Mr. Sala, "book-lovers are either bibliognostes, bibliomanes, bibliophiles, or bibliotaphes. The bibliognoste is learned in title-pages and editions, presses, and places of issue. He knows by heart the criteria of every editio princeps; he has Brunet and Dibdin at his fingers' ends, and can tell you at once that the 'Aristotle' of Manutius in good condition is worth £50, but that a Bebal is not worth as many sixpences. The bibliomane is a mere collector who, blessed with a long purse, buys whatever comes in his way. A bit of a bibliomane was Peter the Great, who, when his shelves were built, sent for the booksellers of St. Petersburg and said: 'Fill those with books.' 'With what books, your Majesty?' was the not unnatural question. 'With what books? Why, with big books below, and with little books above.' The bibliophile—the true lover of books—is he who buys to read and enjoy. The bibliotaphe is he who hides his books away under lock and key or who immures them in close-fitting glass cases, and knows little of them beyond their titles and the price which he has paid for each."—The Book-Buyer.

THE FEMALE ORGAN-GRINDER.

She was but an organ-grinder, with a little dog behind her, and a monkey on the organ which collected all the dimes,
And her face had all the sorrow that a human face can borrow as she twisted on the handle, playing tunes to ancient rhymes.
There was not a grain of pity for the woman in the city, and the boys and men about her hooted as she played away;
Then I cried: "Oh, vagrant woman, exile from a castle Roman, battered relic of an era where your race was of the best—
Tell me, now, that I have sought you, tell me, woman, what has brought you from Italian skies of azure to the deserts of the West?"
Has some cruel word, idly spoken, turned you, homeless and heart-broken, from those flowery vales and hollows where the Roman castles stand?
Or were you some gentle maiden dwelling in an earthly Aiden, when some social revolution drove you from your lovely land?
Tell me, old and battered woman, are your sorrows more than human? Is the music that you furnish grating on a weary heart?"
And the woman dropped her organ, crying, "Is it Biddy Morgan that ye're callin' ould and battered? Now, begorrah, you depart!"
Note—I departed.

"Oh, you do? How will you go to work to get us out on the road for our first stand?"

"Why? Haven't you got any money?"

"Not a dollar. We may strike luck the first night, and we may do a poor business for a week. Can you arrange to keep us along until we hit pay dirt?"

"I don't see how."

"And are you a talker? Can you get us out of a hotel where we are owing $25 and nothing to pay with? Can you give owners of halls the grand stand-off? Can you fix it with ticket agents to pass us as dead-heads? When salary-day comes around can you smooth it over with the kickers?"

"I—I don't believe I could."

"Nor I, either. Young man, go hence! Go out and strike a job of sawing wood, shoveling dirt, or ditch-digging. You'll have less on your mind and more in your pocket."—Detroit Free Press.

How a Dog Should Be Fed.

The puppy, when just weaned, should be fed four, five, or even six times a day, and from two months to four months of age, four times; after that three times, to the age of nine to twelve months, according to the breed—the smaller varieties reaching maturity soonest; after that twice a day is enough, a full meal being given each time, until maturity is reached. Regularity as to time is important in feeding, both because it assists health and is a considerable help in inculcating orderly and cleanly habits. Minute calculations have been made as to the amount of food required by a dog, with the result of conflicting statements of opinion, ranging from one-twentieth to one-twelfth of his own weight per day, and it is often stated in this form—one ounce of food for every pound the dog weighs. Experience convinces me that in the matter of quantity of food the scales are better dispensed with, using instead the dog's appetite as the correct measure; I therefore always advise that a dog should have as much at a meal as he will eat freely, and that when he stops to turn it over and pick out bits here and there, the dish should be removed.

The composition and quality of food is the next point claiming consideration. In reference to the first point, I think it necessary to refer to theories propounded by Dr. Billings, veterinary surgeon, of Boston, Mass., in two lectures delivered in that city, and reproduced with apparent approval by that section of the American press which specially deals with canine matters. I have not the text before me, so cannot quote with verbal accuracy; but, briefly stated, Dr. Billings, founding his argument on the admitted fact that the dog is a carnivorous animal, declared he should be fed entirely on flesh, and even went so far as to say that farinaceous food was poison to the dog. The English practice for centuries—from the time of that excellent huntsman and discourser on dogs and their treatment, Edmund de Langley, of the early part of the fourteenth century, confirmed by such practical writers as Turberville and Gervase Markham, of the sixteenth, Cox, Jacobs, and others, of the seventeenth, and all the masters of hounds, huntsmen, game-keepers, kennel men, and every other person who has kept a dog since—is dead against Dr. Billings' theory, which, indeed, should rather be named a "crotchet." For dogs there is no more wholesome food than the mixed scraps from the table, consisting of meat, bones, bread, and vegetables, and when there are more dogs kept than there are bones and scraps for, the broken victuals should be taken as the standard of the component parts of that which has to be further provided.

In regard to pet dogs kept by ladies, the great mistake often made is to overfeed and feed too richly. It is a mistaken kindness to feed dogs on rich, fat-producing diet; and to give sugar and sweet cakes and puddings is to certainly destroy the powers of the digestive and assimilative organs; and anything that produces excessive fatness will bring on asthma, to which disease pugs and other short-faced pets are especially prone. Occasionally we meet with, in all breeds, a dog that is a dainty feeder. These have to be coaxed to eat, a little at a time being given, and a tonic of iron and quinine with gentian given daily for a week or two at a time.—Huge Dalziel, in Harper's Magazine.

"Although the Fourth of July occurs next week we have had no rain in this vicinity since last fall. People unacquainted with the climate might think this was a bad thing, but we can assure such that it is most excellent for the wheat."

"The wild geese are already seen flying south, and we will doubtless have an unusually early winter. This is gratifying, as it assures an excellent wheat crop next season."

"A severe hailstorm passed over this region early in the week just as the farmers were commencing to harvest. We must congratulate our readers, as nothing is better for wheat at this stage of its growth."

"The eclipse of the sun here on Tuesday was the cause of much rejoicing among our farmers. It helped the wheat crop fifty per cent."

"An Eastern professor predicts that this country will be visited by great swarms of grasshoppers, as was the case a few years ago. We can but hope his prophecy may prove correct, as nothing will make wheat boom right up to fifty bushels an acre like grasshoppers."—Estelline (Dak.) Bell.

There Are No Lead Pencils.

There is no lead pencil in existence to-day, and there have been none for more than forty years past. There was a time when a spirale of lead cut from the bar or sheet sufficed to make marks on white paper or some roughed abrading material. The name lead pencil comes from the old notion that the products of the Cumberland mines in England are lead, instead of being plumbago or graphite, a carbonate of iron, capable of leaving a lead-colored mark. With the original lead pencil or strip, and with the earlier styles of the lead pencil made direct from the Cumberland mines, the wetting of the pencil was a necessary preliminary of writing. But since it has become a manufacture, the lead pencil is adapted by numbers or letters to each particular design. There are all grades of hardness, from the pencil that can be sharpened down to a needle point to the one which cannot make other than a broad mark. Between these two extremes are a number of gradations which cover all the uses of the lead pencil. These gradations are made by taking the original carbonate and grinding and mixing it with a fine quality of clay, in different proportions, according to the quality of the pencil required to be produced. The mixture is made thoroughly and then squeezed through dies to form and size it, after which it is dried and incased in its wooden envelope.—New York Mail and Express.

A Multitude of Ailments.

The ailments which afflict the kidneys and bladder are so numerous, that merely to name them would fill a space far outrunning the limits of this article. Suffice it to say that they are both obsthinate and dangerous. To their prevention Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is well adapted. The stimulus which it lends to the action of the kidneys when they are lethargic serves to counteract a tendency in them to lapse, first, into a state of pernicious inactivity, and afterwards into one of positive organic disease, which soon destroys their delicate integuments, poisons the blood, and causes death. A double purpose is served by this depurent. It promotes activity of the kidneys, and expels impurities from the blood which have no natural channel of outlet except those organs. Constipation, biliousness, fever and ague, rheumatism, and dyspepsia, are also remedied by this medicine of thorough action and wide scope.

Home Study.

Cramming is cruelty. A score of things well learned are better than a thousand things half known. A few hours' study a day makes a boy mentally healthy; too much study makes him top-heavy. A brain that is made alert by knowledge is a good thing, but a brain that is water-logged with poring over books is a very poor thing. Children should be made to study hard in school, but not a lesson should be learned at home. Emerson once said very tersely: "We are students of words, we are shut up in schools and colleges and recitation rooms for ten or fifteen years, and come out at last with a bag of wind, a memory of words, and do not know a thing." Our present methods are defective, but we shall apply better ones by and by. The system of the future will have this fact in it, and all through it—that a boy is an out-of-doors animal, and ought not to do a man's work until he acquires a man's strength.—New York Herald.

Everybody's War.

The liquor traffic might do for other lands—it will not do for ours; it might do for earlier centuries—it will not do for the last quarter of the nineteenth. There is war about it in America, the pledge of total abstinence is its muster roll; the gospel hymns are its rallying songs, the badge of blue its uniform. We aim our weapons straight at the brain, straight at the heart. Our bullets are ballots, our sabre strokes are home-thrusts of pathos, our bomb shells are statistics and arguments. We find our marching orders in two verses of this bible in which law and gospel are bound up together. One declares: "Woe unto him that justifieth the wicked for a reward;" the other says: "It is good neither to eat meat nor to drink wine nor anything whereby thy brother stumbleth."

In this vast and daily enlarging army, the mild, soft-voiced ones, who are afraid of guns and gunpowder, may march side by side with the gallant and the strong. I seem to hear their gentle footsteps as they gather to fight against rum in the name of patriotism, philanthrophy, and God. It is a woman, after all, who has given the costliest hostages to fortune. Out into the battle of life they have sent their best beloved with fearful odds against them; with snares that have been legalized and set along our streets. Beyond the arms that held them long, their boys have gone forever. There is not one man to whom some woman's life is not a dear and sacred thing; and I appeal to you, by the pain and danger they have dared, who are the best beloved of your homes, to represent by your ballot, their prayers, their tears, their hopes.

But beside being a war of the mothers and daughters, the sisters and wives, this is a war between religion and the rum shop. It is an irrepressible conflict, for the angel must triumph or else the dragon will. And so, whoever is not enlisted in this war, the seventy thousand churches of our land with their eight million members, corporations founded on the avowed principle of self-sacrifice for others' good, ought to come forward and place their names on the total abstinence muster roll.—Miss Francis E. Willard.

A Bird's Savings Bank.

In California the woodpecker stores acorns away, although he never eats them. He bores several holes, differing slightly in size, at the fall of the year, invariably in a pine tree. Then he finds an acorn, which he adjusts to one of the holes prepared for its reception. But he does not eat the acorn, for, as a rule, he is not a vegetarian. His object in storing away the acorn exhibits foresight and knowledge of results more akin to reason than to instinct. The succeeding winter the acorns remain intact, but, becoming saturated, is predisposed to decay, when it is attacked by maggots, who seem to delight in this special food. It is then that the woodpecker reaps the harvest his wisdom has provided, at a time when, the ground being covered with snow, he would experience difficulty otherwise in obtaining suitable or palatable food. It is a subject of speculation why the red-wood cedar or the sugar-pine is invariably selected. It is not probable that the insect the woodpecker is so fond of is found only on the outside of two trees: but true it is that in Calaveras, Mariposa, and other districts of California, trees of this kind may be seen covered all over their trunks with acorns, when there is not an oak tree within several miles.

A Perfect Philosopher.

"I stopped at a country hotel in Arkansaw some time ago," said a well-known traveling man, "and behind the clerk's desk, I noticed a rope hanging from a rafter. The rope had a knot on the lower end, and at first I thought that it must be used for lynching purposes. While I was pondering, a man came down stairs, approached the clerk's desk and said:

"'Why in thunder didn't you send that pitcher of water to my room? I ought to maul you.'

"The clerk took the end of the rope in his mouth, chewed it a moment or so and, in a cordial voice, replied:

"'It was an oversight, my dear sir. Will attend to it at once.'

"A few minutes later another man came up and said:

"'I want to know if I am to have a fire in my room? If you don't intend to have one made, say so, and I'll waltz you all over this house.'

"The clerk seized the rope again and chewed it. Then turning to the frowning man, he replied:

"'You must really pardon me, sir. I will go up and make the fire myself.'

"'What a strange man your clerk is,' I said to the proprietor of the hotel.

"'He's a great philosopher,' the proprietor replied. 'Do you know what he would have done had he not chewed that rope?'

"'No.'

"'Well, he would have shot those men. When a man gets mad he grits his teeth, and then finding no satisfaction, he adopts violent means. Some time ago, a fellow, just for mischief, slipped behind the desk and cut the rope; and then, before the clerk had noticed his loss, the fellow made some complaint. The clerk wheeled around, grasped the air, and then in a rage, jumped over the desk, seized the offender and almost killed him.'

"'He is a remarkable man.'

"'The most consistent and docile man in the world so long as his rope is in working order. Some time ago the proprietor of a large hotel came here, and after witnessing a few performances, offered the clerk a large salary to leave me and go with him, but I raised his salary and succeeded in holding him. Look at him, got the rope in his mouth again. Do you see how much of the rope is wound above? Well, as soon as he chews the knot off the end he lets down the rope and ties another knot. Within the past six months he has worn out three sets of teeth. See that man with the small grip-sack? He is a dentist and has come around to work on the clerk's teeth. I'll tell you what's a fact, that fellow is the most perfect philosopher I ever saw."—Arkansaw Traveller.

The Passing of Old Farmer Brown.

The summer was over, the autumn was past;
The crops were stored safely in bins, sacks and mows;
Around the great barn swept the snow-ladened blast;
Within, warm and cosy, the solemn-eyed cows
And fat, well-groomed horses, stood munching their hay
Or dozing the slow hours of winter away.

All day had the feathery flakes fell fast,
'Till highlands and lowlands were hidden from view
Beneath the white shroud, cold and cheerless and vast,
That lay over all. Still the light crystals flew
As night settled down; then the wind rose amain
And roared o'er the chimney and rattled the pane,

And shrieked at each crevice and tossed the light snow
In swift-whirling eddies, 'till round the old manse—
With quaint, gambrel roof and its porch wide and low—
A legion of storm-fiends screamed loud in their dance,
And spruce tree and pine sadly moaned as they swung
And swayed their long arms, where the chickadees clung.

The wide, open hearth was aglow with the blaze;
The logs hummed a tune and the tea-kettle sang—
Now loud and now low, on its crane, of the days
When voices of youth through the great kitchen rang,
And old farmer Brown, bent and feeble and gray,
Sat there by the fire while his thoughts stray'd away,

Far back through the past and were busy with names
And faces of those who, ere life's morning glow
Had faded away, left their fever-racked frames,
And passed to a land where the ebb and the flow
Of time is unknown. And ho fancied one form
Had come to his side through the night and the storm,

And stroked with soft hand the bowed head, as of old,
And spoke of the days when she stood at his side
As now, by the hearth, or with him watched the gold
And crimson of still summer sunsets; when wide
And rosy their path would o'er life's pleasant vales
And love was their pole star and tempered life's gales.

No voice stirred the air, but his soul caught the sound
And throbbed to her tones as the harp strings will thrill
When wandering night winds the tense cords have found,
Or light, skillful fingers roam o'er them at will,
But tense cords may snap and the music will cease,
And world-weary souls, soon or late, find release.

He sat there and smiled while the tea-kettle sang,
Now high and now low to the blazing log's tune,
But heard not, nor saw how the sparks upward sprang,
For winter had bloomed into roses of June,
And old farmer Brown, bent and feeble and gray,
Had passed from the scene of his labors away.

BIG GAME HUNTING.

Theodore Roosevelt, the New York statesman and Dakota ranchero, is writing a series of hunting articles for Outing. The second of the series appears in the April number, fully illustrated. From it we take the following:

Next day, accordingly, I determined to devote to going after antelope, one or two bands of which we had seen near the trail. The cattle were more than content to feed quietly on the thick bunch grass, and, from the nature of the ground, two men at a time were amply able to watch them and head off any bunch which seemed inclined to wander far away.

I started soon after breakfast, for antelope are the only game which can be hunted as well in the middle of the day as early or late. I was riding a well-trained hunting pony and had with me the little forty-six Winchester saddle gun. Before I had left the wagon camp behind me I came across a little band of prong-horns, catching a glimpse of them as they lay sunning themselves on the side of a hill, a very long distance off. Tying my pony to a sage bush, I executed a most careful stalk up a shallow dry-water course to a point from which I deemed I could get a shot, only to find to my chagrin that the band had left the place. I suppose they had seen me in the distance and had promptly run off the instant I began the approach—a favorite trick with the antelopes.

I made one other unsuccessful stalk in the morning, and spent nearly half an hour in trying to flag an old buck up to me, lying behind a ridge and waving a handkerchief tied to the end of a rifle to and fro over its top. Curiosity is with antelope a perfect disease, and they will often be unable to resist the temptation to find out what an unknown object, or one going through singular motions, means, even if the price of gratifying their mania for information has to be paid with their lives. This particular old buck, however, although greatly interested and excited by the motions of the handkerchief, could not make up his mind to approach close enough to give me a fair shot, and after cantering to and fro, snorting and stamping his feet, advancing a few yards toward me, suddenly halting back as many and then returning, he eventually evidently came to the conclusion that there was something uncanny about the whole affair and took to his heels for good.

I went back to the pony and rode on several miles further to where the country became less prairielike in character, the valleys being somewhat deeper and the ridges closer together, when I again dismounted and began to hunt over the ground on foot; and this time my perseverance was rewarded. As I was topping one ridge I saw a little band of five bucks slowly walking over the crest of the one directly across. I had come up very cautiously and felt certain that I had not been seen. The instant that the last animal disappeared I raced forward at a sharp gait, pulling up as I breasted the hillside opposite so that I could not be blown when I came to shoot. The antelope had been proceeding in a very leisurely manner, stopping to indulge in mock combats with each other or to nibble a mouthful of grass now and then, and when I came to the top of the ridge they had halted for good, perhaps 150 yards off.

I was out for meat, not for trophies, and so I took the one that offered me the fairest shot, a young buck which stood broadside to me; he was fat and in good condition for an antelope, but with small horns. The bullet went fairly in behind the shoulder, and though he galloped with the rest of the band for a couple of hundred yards, his pace gradually slackened, he came to a halt, then walked backward in a curious manner for a few feet, fell over, and was dead when I came to him.

After dressing him—and I may remark parenthetically that this work of butchering, especially when far from water, is one of the disagreeable sides of a hunter's life—I got him on the pony (it was a quiet little beast, used to packing all sorts of things behind its rider) and started towards the camp. The shadows had begun to lengthen out well before I got there, to receive a very real and cordial welcome from my hungry associates. Before long the venison steaks were frying or broiling over the mass of glowing coals raked out from beneath the roaring and crackling cottonwood logs, and I should be almost afraid to state how much we ate. Suffice it to say that there was very little indeed left of that antelope after next morning's breakfast.

The following day we took the somewhat refreshed cattle away from our resting ground, and after two rather long and irksome drives were able to head them out upon the great river bottom where the ranch-house stands.

Professor Drummond on the Huxley-Gladstone Controversy.

Science, Religion, Philology, and History have now unsheathed their most richly chased blades in this famous tournament. So goodly a fight has not been seen for many a day; and whether one regards the dignity of the combatants, or the gravity and delicacy of the cause, it is not possible to await the issue without the keenest interest. Meanwhile, a voice may be permitted on behalf of a group among the spectators who have not yet been heard in the controversy, but whose modest reluctance to interfere seems only equaled by their right. In arenas more obscure, but less worthy, they too have found this fight; and as a humble camp-follower, and from conviction that the thing must now be done, rather than as one possessing the right to do it, I would venture to state the case on their account.

Mr. Huxley interposes in this question because he is moved by the violence being done in high places in natural science. This third party is constrained to speak because of a similar violence done to theological science. Were the reconcilers of theology and Genesis equal in insight to their last and most distinguished champion, and did Mr. Gladstone himself realize the full meaning of his own concessions, little further contribution to this controversy might perhaps be called for. And, were the opponents of this ancient fraternity as calm in spirit, as respectful in beliefs, and as discriminating as to the real question at issue as Mr. Huxley, no other word need be spoken. But with a phalanx of reconcilers on the one hand, who will continue to shelter untenable positions under the carefully qualified argument of Mr. Gladstone, and with quasi-scientific men on the other, who will exaggerate and misinterpret the triumph of Mr. Huxley, a further clearing of the ground is necessary. The breadth of view, the sagacity, and inimitable charity of Mr. Gladstone's second article certainly go far with many minds to remove the forebodings with which they receive the first. Nevertheless, so powerful a championship of a position which many earnest students of modern religious questions have seen reason wholly to abandon can not but excite misgiving of a serious kind.—Popular Science Monthly for April.

Belonging to Neither Sect.

During the open-air meeting of the North and South the writer and Sergeant J. D. Houston, of Worth, rode up to a house in Western Virginia, where the people were about 'alf an' alf—that is to say, there were about as many Unionists as Secessionists. We were a little dubious about dining with Union people, fearing "unhealthy" food.

As we reached the yard gate a kind-looking old lady came to the door and asked what she could do for us.

"Madame," said I, "are you a Unionist or a Secessionist?"

She shoved her spectacles on top of her head, and casting a withering look upon us, answered:

"I'll give you to understand that I'm neither, sir! I'm a Methodist."—Albany (Ga.) Medium.

The Alabama in Action.

From an account of "Life on the Alabama," by one of her sailors, in the April Century we quote the following: "We got everything ship-shape and left Cherbourg for our last cruise on a bright Sunday morning, June 19th. We were escorted by a French armored vessel, and when we got outside we could see the Kearsarge awaiting us, about four miles away. Captain Semmes made us a short speech which was well received, though it seemed odd to me that an American should appeal to an Englishman's love of glory to fight the speaker's own countrymen. But we cheered, and the French ship leaving us, we steamed straight for the Kearsarge. 'There is no doubt that Semmes was flurried and commenced firing too soon.' We were, I should say, nearly a mile away, and I do not think a single shot told. The enemy circled around us and did not return our fire until within seven or eight hundred yards and then she let us have it. The first shot that struck us made the ship reel and shake all over. I was serving on one of the thirty-two-pounders, and my sponger was an old man-o'-war's man, who remarked, after a look out of the port, 'We might as well fire batter puddens as these pop-guns: a few more biffs like that last and we may turn turtle.' He had scarcely spoken when a shell burst under our pivot-gun, tilting it out of range and killing five of the crew. 'What is wrong with the rifle-gun?' was asked. 'We don't seem to be doing the enemy any harm,' while with slow precision came the crash of the heavy shell of the Yankee. One missile that seemed as big as a haystack whizzed over our heads, taking a section of the port bulwarks away, fortunately missing a man that was handling shot. He only remarked that he believed the Yankee was firing 'steam-b'ilers' at us. Another shell struck us amidships, causing the ship to list to port so that our gun weighing three tons raced in, pinning one poor fellow against the port-sill. He died before we could get him clear. This was the missile that sunk the Alabama. 'She's going down!' was the cry, and all was confusion. Another shell struck about the water-line, and the vessel reeled like a drunken man. The dead and wounded were lying about the deck, which was red with blood. Our officers did their duty and the men at once began to get up the wounded. The cutter and launch were in the water and the officers were trying to keep the men back till the wounded were all in; but certainly many of them were left, for I saw several on the berth deck when I went below, and the boats were then full and pushing off. When it was certain that the ship was sinking, all order was at an end. I had £10 and a watch in a locker between decks, and I ran below, but they were gone.

"'All hands on deck—ship's going down!' was called, and I had just got on the upper step of the forward companion-way when the water, entering the berth-deck ports, forced the air up and almost carried me off my legs. I cast my eye around for a moment. Old Gill, with his head crushed under the carriage of the eight-inch gun, was lying there, his brawny hands clinching the breast of his jumper. Just as the water came over the stern I went over the port bulwarks. I was a good swimmer and had not been in the water five minutes when a French pilot-boat came running past, and a brawny fellow in petticoats and top-boots dragged me out of the water."

Pay Off the Bonds.

Our statistical but always interesting contemporary, the Jackson Patriot, calls attention to the fact that "England in 1607, the year of the first settlement in this country, had "sold to the early settlers the whole United States for $1,000 and had taken a mortgage on the property for that amount at seven per cent interest, and the settlers had agreed to take up the mortgage at the end of every six months and add in the interest, there would not be property enough on hand now to pay the debt." This is a forcible illustration of the wealth absorbing effects of usury.

We would respectfully suggest that a marked copy of the Patriot containing this interesting information be sent to Secretary Manning. He is apparently oblivious of the costly and ruinous results of hoarding the people's money and allowing the interest bearing securities of the government to remain unredeemed. True, he has recently issued a few bond calls, but they are only for $10,000,000 each while he has nearly $150,000,000 available for applying to the reduction of the public debt.

The shore end or crib portion of the large new dock of Hannah, Lay & Co., which has been building for some time is about completed, and Allen's pile driver, of Charlevoix, is now driving the piles for the outer part of the dock. When completed this dock will be 225x900 feet in size and will be the fourth dock owned by this company at this place. The new dock will require 1,780 or more piles in its construction. It is the intention to build a breakwater, 200 feet long, extending out from the dock. Herald.

THE INDUSTRIAL OUTLOOK.

The Illinois State Labor Convention was in session during the week at Decatur. P. J. Quinn, of Chicago, was elected President, and A. C. Cameron, of Chicago, Treasurer. The murder of the Chicago policemen by anarchists was denounced. The report of Chairman Cameron, of the State Executive Committee, gave notice of the failure to secure satisfactory legislation on the child-labor and truck abuses, and on the prison-contract system, and recommended that workmen vote for the constitutional amendment abolishing the system at the fall elections.

One thousand miners in the Broad Top region, near Pittsburgh, struck for an advance to 50 cents per ton.

The Knights of Labor, at the fifth day's session of their convention, adopted a petition to Congress concerning the regulation of the currency, being the same petition passed at the annual session held in Hamilton, Canada, last October. The petition attributes the failure of labor to amass wealth, while producing it, to vicious legislation; sets forth the hardships inflicted on the people by the fluctuations of the value of money in various parts of the Union from 2 to 20 per cent., and charges the evil to the manipulation of national banks. It continues: We pray that your honorable body will fulfill the duties imposed upon you by the Constitution in Section 8 of Article 1, which provides that Congress shall have power to coin money and regulate the value thereof, and of foreign coin, and fix the standard of weights and measures; that you fix the measure of value by establishing a just, uniform, and invariable rate of interest for money loaned; that in order to maintain such rate of interest as the normal rate, you repeal all laws authorizing private persons or corporations to issue money, and in their stead establish public loan offices throughout the country wherever needed, at least one in every county, with proper officers to perform the duties of said offices; that the National Government lend money to the people at said offices on good and sufficient security, and at said fixed rate of interest on demand, and that the profits arising from the business of lending said money be covered into the public treasury for public uses, and that said loan offices be also made depositories for the savings of the people, and your petitioners will ever pray.

There was a good deal of wrangling during the sixth day's session of the Knights of Labor convention. The first open attack upon Mr. T. V. Powderly was made in the convention. His enemies charged that he was scheming to become Governor of Pennsylvania and that he was running the order on Roman Catholic principles. To these charges the General Master Workman entered a denial, claiming that a clique, backed by outside influences, was attempting to disrupt the order.

The boycott instituted at Milwaukee against two cigar factories has resulted in the indictment and arrest of seven members of the Executive Committee of the Knights of Labor, on charge of conspiracy.

T. V. Powderly sent a special messenger from Cleveland to Pittsburgh with a letter asking the Amalgamated Iron and Steel Workers' Association to become a district assembly of the Knights of Labor.

MISCELLANEOUS.

At the grave of General Ransom, in Rosehill Cemetery, Chicago, in presence of two hundred comrades from St. Louis, General W. T. Sherman delivered an eloquent address. Fifty ex-Confederate soldiers placed floral crosses and columns above the remains of the Union and Confederate dead at Oakwoods.

Services in honor of the dead heroes of the war were held in the several cemeteries at Washington after a parade of regular troops and Grand Army posts. A large wreath of roses and other flowers was sent from the White House to Mount Vernon, to decorate the tomb of Washington.

The day was generally observed throughout the Northwest with orations and the decoration of soldiers' graves. In many places the graves of the Federal and Confederate dead were decorated alike. The celebration at Joliet, Ill., was quite elaborate. The Rev. J. W. Conley delivered an oration in which he said that Jeff Davis was as George III. to Washington, as Judas Iscariot to Christ, and as Satan to God.

The wheat in the United States May 1 last was 104,000,000 bushels, against 152,000,000 bushels in 1885.

LATER NEWS IETMS.

The tenth and last day's session of the General Assembly of the Knights of Labor, at Cleveland, Ohio, was a veritable love-feast, and every member who had said anything against any other member extended the hand of fellowship. Before adjournment an address was offered and adopted inviting all labor organizations to unite with the Knights of Labor in the struggle against the tyranny of wealth. The address, in closing, says:

We have received a communication from a committee of the national officers of some of the national and international trades unions, requesting certain specific legislation at our hands, but as we believe that the object sought and stated in the preamble to the communication above referred to can best be accomplished by a conference between a committee of this association and a committee of any other organization, and as the propositions contained therein are inconsistent with our duty to our members, we therefore defer action upon said propositions until a conference of committees can be held.

The basis upon which we believe an agreement can be reached would necessarily include the adoption of some plan by which all labor organizations could be protected from unfair men—men expelled, suspended, under fine, or guilty of taking the places of union men or Knights of Labor while on strike or while locked out from work—and that, as far as possible, a uniform standard of hours of labor and wages should be adopted, so that men of any trade enrolled in our order and men of trades unions may not come in conflict because of the differences in wages or hours of labor. We also believe that a system of exchanging working cards should be adopted, so that members of any craft belonging to different organizations could work in harmony together—the card of any member of this order admitting to work in any union shop, and the card of any union man admitting him to work in any Knights of Labor shop.

We further believe that, upon an increase of wages or shorter hours of labor made by either organization, a conference should be held with the organized laborers employed in the establishment. When the demand for increase of wages or reduction of hours is contemplated, action upon a proposed reduction of wages or other difficulty to be agreed upon in a like manner, and that in the settlement of any difficulties between employers and employes the organizations represented in the establishment shall be parties to the terms of settlement.

An address was issued denying that the "Home Club" was engaged in plotting against the welfare of the order, and saying that the very best of feeling prevailed among all the delegates. An address was also issued to the Grangers complimenting them, and asking their aid.

MR. DAWES presented a petition in the Senate on the 3d inst., from the City Council of Gloucester, Mass., that retaliation be ordered against the Canadian Government for the seizure of American fishing-vessels. Mr. Edmunds expressed the hope that a ship of the United States Government would soon appear in the northern seas to encourage the fishermen. The Senate passed Mr. Van Wyck's bill for the taxation of railroad-grant lands, the object being that the corporations shall bear equally with the settlers the burden of paying the taxes. The House of Representatives passed the oleomargarine bill after amending it to make the tax five cents per pound. The vote on the passage of the bill was 177 to 99. Of the 177 votes the Democrats contributed 81 and the Republicans 96. The negative votes were cast by 84 Democrats and 15 Republicans. New England cast 17 votes for the bill and 4 against; New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Maryland, and Delaware 48 for and 13 against; the Southern States, including West Virginia and Kentucky, 21 for and 16 against; the Western States, including Missouri, 84 for the bill and 15 against; and the Pacific Coast States 7 for and 1 against the bill. Iowa, Kansas, and Minnesota voted solidly for the bill. Wisconsin gave 1 nay—Van Schaick; Michigan 7 yeas and 3 nays—Maybury, Tarsney, and Fisher. Illinois stood 15 to 4—Dunham, Lawler, Morrison, and Ward voting against the bill, and all the rest of them in favor of it except Eden, who was absent. Indiana voted 8 to 3—Cobb, Browne, and Ford voting against the bill. The following are the main features of the bill, as it passed: Butter is defined to be a food product made exclusively from milk or cream, or both, with or without common salt, and with or without coloring matter. Oleomargarine is defined as all substances made of oleomargarine, oleo, lardine, tallow extracts, etc., in imitation of butter, or when so made calculated to be sold as butter or for butter. Special taxes are imposed as follows: On manufacturers, $600; on wholesale dealers, $480; on retail dealers, $48. The existing internal-revenue laws, so far as applicable, are made to apply to these special taxes. Penalties are imposed on any person who shall deal in oleomargarine without paying the special tax. Provision is made for the proper stamping and labeling of every package of oleomargarine. A tax of five cents a pound is imposed on all oleomargarine manufactured and sold, and a penalty is prescribed for the purchase or reception for sale of oleomargarine not branded or stamped according to law. A number of sections of the bill are devoted to providing machinery to carry the law into effect.

CONGRESSIONAL.

The Work of the Senate and House of Representatives.

FOUR Republican Senators—Cullom, Manderson, Teller, and Van Wyck—voted with the Democrats in the Senate on the 28th ult., and killed the Northern Pacific forfeiture bill of Mr. Dolph, of Oregon. Mr. Conger presented the report of the Commerce Committee on the Eads ship-railway bill. In the report the committee says that the project is a practicable one, and that the net amount of annual revenue of the road will be in excess of the amount guaranteed by Mexico and the United States. The opinion is expressed that the aggregate amount ($7,500,000) will not have to be advanced by the Government. The committee reports back the accompanying bill as a substitute for Senate bill 584, with the recommendation that it do pass. The President vetoed bills for the relief of Rebecca Eldridge and Eleanor C. Baugham, widows of soldiers, and bills granting pensions to Mrs. Anne C. Owen, Simmons W. Harden, and J. D. Haworth. Approval is withheld in these cases on the ground that the disability for which relief or a pension is asked had its origin in causes existing prior to the enlistment of the persons for whose services the claims are made. In the case of Mrs. Eldridge, the President says: "It is not a pleasant thing to interfere, but we are dealing with pensions, and not gratuities." The President sent the following nominations to the Senate: C. R. Greathouse, of California, Consul General at Kanagawa; Wm. H. Cleveland, to be Appraiser of Customs for the district of Detroit, Mich. Adolph Lippman, to be Commissioner for Alaska, at Junction City. During the debate in the House of Representatives on the oleomargarine bill, a Jerseyman proposed a tax of 75 cents on each dish of hash, every boarding-house keeper to be required to file a statement of ingredients. All amendments to the bill presented were rejected.

THE House of Representatives only was in session on the 29th ult. The day was devoted, in committee of the whole, to discussion of the oleomargarine bill. Every attempt to amend it was voted down, and its friends showed that they were determined to stand by it just as it came from the House Committee on Agriculture.

MR. HARRIS, of Tennessee, introduced a bill in the Senate, on the 1st inst., providing for the payment to Mrs. Eliza H. Brownlow of $900 for Government advertising in the Knoxville Whig, published by her husband, the famous "Parson" Brownlow. Mr. Beck introduced a bill making it unlawful for any member of either house to act as railroad attorney, and fixing the minimum punishment for violating its provisions at a fine of $5,000, or imprisonment for one year. Bills were passed to prevent aliens from acquiring land in the Territories, and extending the eight-hour law to letter-carriers. The President vetoed another pension bill upon the ground that it was not based upon substantial merits. The President sent the following nominations to the Senate: David L. Hawkins of Missouri to be Assistant Secretary of the Interior, vice George A. Jenks, resigned; Joseph E. Johnston of Virginia to be commissioner in the district of Alaska, vice Chester Sober, resigned; John B. Riley of Plattsburg, N. Y., Indian School Superintendent, vice John H. Oberly, appointed a Civil-service Commissioner. The House again wrestled with the oleomargarine bill, and the opponents of the measure gained a point by securing the adoption of an amendment reducing the tax from ten cents to eight cents a pound. Mr. Weaver, of Iowa, arose to a question of privilege and with some heat denied the charges of an Iowa newspaper that he was unduly influenced to oppose the bill. He had been, and still was, in favor of the oleomargarine bill, and it was false that he had been influenced improperly in his course in regard to that measure.

MR. CULLOM, of Illinois, introduced in the Senate, on the 2d inst., a joint resolution proposing a constitutional amendment in regard to polygamy. Mr. Morrill submitted a proposed amendment to Senator Platt's open executive session resolution which makes this resolution apply to reciprocity treaties instead of to nominations. The House of Representatives, in committee of the whole, finished the oleomargarine bill. Mr. O'Neill, from the Committee on Labor, reported a bill to legalize the incorporation of trades unions. A bill for the payment of the awards for Alabama claims was signed by the President, after consultation with the members of the Cabinet as to its constitutionality.

Big Things.

The greatest wall in the world is the Chinese wall, built by the Emperor of the Tsin dynasty, about 220 B. C., as a protection against the Tartars. It traverses the northern boundary of China, and is carried over the highest hills, through the deepest valleys, across rivers, and every other natural obstacle.

Among the most remarkable natural echoes are that of the Eagle's Nest, on the banks of Killarney, Ireland, which repeats a bugle call until it seems to be sounded from a hundred instruments, and that of the banks of the Naha, between Bingen and Coblentz, which repeats a sound seventeen times.

The most remarkable artificial echo known is that of the castle of Simonetta, about two miles from Milan. It is occasioned by the existence of two parallel walls of considerable length. It repeats the report of a pistol sixty times.

The most remarkable whirlpool is the maelstrom off the northwest coast of Norway, and southwest of Moskenaesol, the most southerly of the Lofoden Isles. It was once supposed to be unfathomable, but the depth has been shown not to exceed twenty fathoms.

The greatest cataract in the world is that of Niagara. The Horseshoe Fall, on the Canadian side, has a perpendicular descent of 158 feet. The height of the American Fall is 167 feet. The Horseshoe Fall, which carries a larger volume of water than the American Fall, is about 600 yards wide, and extends from the Canadian shore to Goat Island.

The biggest diamond in the world, if indeed it be a diamond, is the Braganza, which forms a part of the Portuguese crown jewels. It weighs 1,860 carats. However, not a little doubt exists of its being a diamond, as the Government has never allowed it to be tested. It was found in Brazil in 1741.

The largest tested, but uncut, diamond is the Maharattah, belonging to the Rajah of Mattam in Borneo. It is of pure water, weighs 267 carats, and is of pear shape, indented at the thick end. It was found about 1,760 at Landark, in Borneo. It has been the cause of a sanguinary war. Before it was cut, the Kohinoor, which is one of the English crown jewels, was the largest tested diamond. It then weighed 793 carats. When in possession of the Emperor Aurenzebe it was reduced, by unskillful cutting, to 186 carats. During the Sikh mutiny it was captured by British troops, and presented to Queen Victoria. It was recut, and now weighs 106 1-6 carats.

THE KNOT TIED.

The President and Miss Folsom Securely Bound in the Holy Bonds of Matrimony.

The wedding of President Cleveland and Miss Folsom took place at the Executive Mansion in Washington on the evening of the 2d inst. It was w tnessed only by the members of the Cabinet, their wives, and twelve relatives or friends of the contracting parties. Rev. Dr. Sunderland performed the ceremony in the blue room, amidst a mass of rare flowers. The bride's dress was of ivory satin, garnished with India muslin. The President and his bride left in the privat coach of Robert Garrett for the cottage of ex-Senator Davis at Deer Park, Maryland. A report of the wedding festivities is appended.

Miss Folsom arrived at Washington in the private car of President Roberts, of the Pennsylvania Road, at 5:30 a. m., and was met at the depot by Miss Rose Cleveland, who conducted her to President Cleveland's carriage. Miss Folsom was followed by her mother and her cousin, Mr. Benjamin Folsom, who also got into the carriage, and they were all driven rapidly to the White House. There they were welcomed by the President and his sister, Mrs. Hoyt.

Miss Folsom refreshed herself, changed her dress for one of lighter hue, and joined the others at breakfast. They were a very merry party.

Miss Folsom spent the entire day in the private portion of the house with her mother, Miss Cleveland, Mrs. Hoyt, and Miss Nelson. Miss Cleveland gave her some interesting information about the management of the domestic affairs of the executive mansion.

Getting Out the License.

About 10 o'clock in the morning Col. Lamont got into the White House carriage and was driven to the office of the Clerk of the Supreme Court of the District, where, upon the payment of a Band silver dollar, he received the following permit:

"To any minister of the gospel authorized to celebrate marriages in the District of Columbia, greeting: You are hereby licensed to solemnize the rites of marriage between Frank Folsom, of Buffalo, N. Y., and Grover Cleveland, of Buffalo, N. Y., if you find no lawful impediment thereto; and, having so done, you are commanded to appear in the Clerk's office of the Supreme Court of said District, and certify the same.

"Witness my hand and seal of this court this 2d day of June, 1886. R. R. MEIGS, Clerk."

Beneath this is a blank form which, when filled out by the minister, will read as follows:

"I, Byron Sunderland, minister of the First Presbyterian Church, hereby certify that, by authority of a license of the same tenor as the foregoing, I solemnized the marriage of the parties aforesaid on the 2d day of June, 1886, at the White House, in the District of Columbia.

"BYRON SUNDERLAND."

A Rehearsal.

On the Colonel's return to the White House he was closeted with the President for some time. The offices of the second floor were deserted by all but Chief Clerk Pruden, who was preparing bills for the President to sign, just as though it was not the wedding day. At 11:30 Dr. Sunderland appeared and asked to see Col. Lamont.

"I have the form of the ceremony made up in the rough," he said, "and I have come up here to perfect it. I have hardly had time to think since Friday night. I have had so many newspaper men after me that I have had to sit up until two o'clock in the morning to be able to write anything."

The reverend doctor was in a most pleasantly excited condition, and almost completely out of breath. After waiting a moment he was ushered into the red parlor, where he had a conversation with the President. The rehearsal of the wedding took place at 12:30. It was informal, and was not held in the blue parlor. The President, Miss Folsom, and Dr. Sunderland sat down in Miss Cleveland's little parlor up-stairs and quietly went over the services together. There were some changes made to suit the taste of the contracting parties. When the rehearsal was about over the President stepped out and called in his brother, the Rev. William Cleveland. Then the President said to Dr. Sunderland that he had not expected his brother to be present, but that he had arrived at the eleventh hour. It would please him greatly, therefore, if Dr. Sunderland could contrive some means by which his brother could participate in the services.

Dr. Sunderland said that he did not know of any way in which the services could be split up, but he suggested that the Rev. Mr. Cleveland deliver the benediction. It was arranged that way. The President at first was averse to having the form of the ceremony made public, but he was finally persuaded.

Approaching the Auspicious Hour.

About 6:30 o'clock Secretary Lamar came lumbering up the flagstone walk, and he was followed a few moments later by the wizen-faced Dr. Sunderland and wife. After that the guests began to arrive rapidly in the following order: Postmaster General Vilas and wife, Mr. William Bissell, Secretary and Mrs. Endicott, Secretary Bayard, Secretary and Mrs. Whitney, and Secretary Manning and wife. Attorney General Garland did not put in an appearance. Various reasons are assigned for his absence, the most plausible being his well-known antipathy to full dress. He made a solemn vow not very long ago that he would not appear in public in a dress suit. The carriages of the guests drew up on Pennsylvania avenue near the main entrance. The guests were shown into the state dining-room, where their wraps were removed. From there they were ushered into the blue-room, where they were received by Miss Rose Cleveland, and where conversation was entered into for a few moments.

The blue-room seemed to have received the principal attention of the decorators, and the work was well done. The display of flowers was simply magnificent. The room was a mass of exotic plants.

There were now present in the blue-room: Mrs. Folsom, mother of the bride; the Rev. Dr. William Cleveland, the President's brother; Miss Cleveland and Mrs. Hoyt, the President's sisters; Secretary of State Bayard, Secretary of the Treasury Manning and wife, Secretary of War Endicott and wife, Secretary Whitney and wife; Postmaster General Vilas and wife, Secretary Lamar, Private Secretary Lamont and wife, Benjamin Folsom of Buffalo, Mr. and Mrs. Rogers of Seneca Falls, Mrs. Cadmar and Miss Huddleston of Detroit, Mr. and Mrs. Harmon of Boston (relatives of the bride), Mr. and Mrs. Nelson of New York, Mr. W. S. Bissell of Buffalo, the President's law partner, and the Rev. Dr. and Mrs. Byron Sunderland.

Miss Rose Cleveland was looking very fresh, although she had been up since 4:30 in the morning. She wore an exquisite dress of Nile green and cameo pink duchesse satin with silver ornaments, low corsage, garnished with pink roses, short sleeves, demi-length gloves in light tan. She carried a fan of pink curlew feathers.

Mrs. Folsom wore a dress of violet satin, with garniture in white faille, with crystal violet drops in pendants everywhere.

Mrs. Hoyt, the President's sister, wore a dainty costume on traine of China crepe in robins'-egg blue, most effectively garnitured with rare old lace. Her flowers were La France roses.

Mrs. Manning's dress was of white satin, flounced across the front with duchesse lace, trimmings finished with sea-pearls, square neck, and elbow sleeves. Diamond ornaments.

Mrs. Endicott wore satin with silver and white sapphire, draped in black Chantilly lace, and pompon in hair and diamond ornaments.

Mrs. Whitney wore a bodice of violet with nite satin and tulle skirts trimmed with violets. Diamond ornaments.

Mrs. Vilas' dress was a light-blue silk with long train strewn with daisies of silver, front of crystal and point lace and pearl trimming. Low neck and elbow sleeves.

Mrs. Lamont wore an ivory-tinted satin dress, demi-train, with a panel of crystal and pearl on the left side of the skirt, square-necked corsage, edged with crystal and jet fringe, elbow sleeves, and a beautiful corsage bouquet of jacqueminot roses.

Mrs. Rogers cousin of the bride, was dressed in a costume of delicate cameo pink, with brocaded front.

Mrs. Cadman, a relative of the bride, wore a white satin dress en traine, with black lace draperies and jacqueminot roses.

Mrs. Harmon wore a satin dress of light orange.

Miss Nelson wore a handsome costume of corn-colored satin, with overdress of white antique lace, cut pompadour, with low corsage and elbow sleeves. Her flowers were jacqueminot roses.

Mrs. Sunderland's dress was gray satin trimmed with lace, long train, square neck, and elbow sleeves.

It wanted ten minutes of seven o'clock when Miss Cleveland, Mrs. Folsom, and the wedding guests placed themselves in a circle about the blue-room, Mr. Bayard standing at the head of the line at the left, while Mr. Cleveland's brother stood at the other end of the horseshoe. The Cabinet officers did not arrange themselves according to their rank, but stood in line just as chance placed them. Mr. Lamar was next to Mr. Bayard; and Mr. Whitney stood above Mr. Vilas.

At exactly 7 a messenger made a quiet signal to Colonel Lamont from the red parlor, and the Colonel repeated the signal to Dr. Sunderland, who immediately took his position in front of the great bank of flowers at the south end of the room. A second later the Marine Band, which was stationed in the ante-room, struck up Mendelssohn's "Wedding March," while booming cannon from the arsenal swelled the chorus of sound. Then the movement from up-stairs began, and the bridal party appeared.

All were anxious to watch the President's bearing, and all agree that he was cool and composed, showing that same self-poise exhibited by him on inauguration day. He was in faultless evening dress, his coat fitting like a glove, instead of his usual turn-down collar, he wore a high stand-up one, with a white-lawn tie carefully knotted at his throat. A white rose was fastened to the lapel of his coat.

Upon his arm leaned Miss Folsom, who fulfilled the role of the traditional beautiful bride. She never looked handsomer. Her rather tall, slim, graceful, well-rounded figure was displayed to its full advantage by her exquisite Parisian wedding dress. Its soft ivory color made a gentle contrast with the fresh soft pink of her cheeks. Her brown hair, curled loosely upon her gracefully poised head, showed gleams of reddish lights through the soft tulle veil, which fell in a trailing mist over her dress. Her blue eyes sparkled with excitement. She walked well, with a graceful, dignified bearing. The bridal couple turned to the right as they entered the room from the long hall, marching in step with gay music from the distant ante-room, and faced the officiating clergyman. Mr. Whitney settled his glasses once or twice more firmly upon his face. Mr. Lamar stood with his hands behind him, and gazed with a look of dreamy rapture upon the bride, who, under the scrutinizing gaze of the small group, flushed and paled alternately. Mrs. Folsom fell back to the left to meet Miss Cleveland, and her friend Miss Nelson passed to the opposite side of the room from the Folsom relatives. Mrs. Hoyt stood by them.

The Rev. Dr. Sunderland was never more sonorous and impressive than in his performance of the ceremony. The little man inflated himself and made the most of every inch of his height, maintaining throughout great self-possession and dignity. His thirty years of experience had prepared him for just such a wedding. He wasted no time.

Entering the Holy Estate.

Dr. Sunderland then said, very solemnly and distinctly: "Forasmuch as we are assembled to observe the holy rites of marriage, it is needful that we should seek the blessing of the great God, our Father, whose institution it is, and therefore I beseech you now to follow me with reverent hearts in prayer to Him:

"Almighty and Everlasting God, the Father of our spirits, the framer of our bodies, the giver of every good and perfect gift—Thou who canst see the end from the beginning, who knowest what is best for us Thy children, and hast appointed the holy rite of marriage to be sacredly observed throughout all generations, regard now, we beseech Thee, Thy servant, our Chief Magistrate; endow him plentifully with Thy grace, and fill him with wisdom to walk in Thy ordinances. Be very nigh to him in the midst of many cares and grave responsibilities. Day by day may Thy law direct him and Thy strength uphold him, and be Thou forever his sun and shield. Be Thou graciously pleased to look down upon this Thy daughter, even as Thou didst favor the chosen Rebecca and many noble women that have adorned the world. May she indeed be a precious boon of good to her husband to cheer and help him continually, a woman gifted with the beauty of the Lord and shedding the sweet influence of a Christian life upon the nation in whose sight she is to dwell. Wilt thou approve what we Thy servants come to do in Thy name by thine authority and under the laws of the land in which we live, and graciously assist them, this man and this woman, who are here to be united in the bonds of holy wedlock according to the institution of Thy words. Mercifully be pleased, Almighty God, to vouchsafe to each of them Thy grace that they may well and truly weigh the unfailing vows which they are now about to make to each other in the presence of this company and before Thee, and that they may be enabled hereafter at all times so to live together as to rejoice in the solemnization of this union with joy unspeakable and full of glory, through Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen."

Turning then to the company, Dr. Sunderland said: "Marriage is honorable among all men in that a man shall leave his father and mother and shall cleave unto his wife and they twain shall be one flesh. It was constituted by our Creator in the first paradise. It was confessed by patriarch and priest, prophet and apostle. It was confirmed by the teaching and adorned with the presence of the Redeemer, and has been honored by the faithful keeping of all good men and women since the world began. It is not therefore to be undertaken lightly or unadvisedly, but soberly, discreetly, and in the fear of God." Into thi holy estate this man and this woman come now to enter. If any now can show just cause why they may not be lawfully united in marriage, let him now speak, or else hereafter forever hold his peace."

Addressing himself to the bride and groom, Dr. Sunderland then said: "If you desire to be united in marriage you will signify the same by joining your right hands."

The bride and groom then joined hands, and of the latter Dr. Sunderland asked: "Grover, do you take this woman whom you hold by the hand to be your lawful wedded wife, to live together after God's ordinance in the holy estate of wedlock? Do you promise to love her, cherish, comfort, and keep her in sickness and in health, in joy and in sorrow, and, forsaking all others, keep you only unto her so long as you both shall live?"

The Groom (firmly)—I do.

Dr. Sunderland—Frank, do you take this man whom you hold by the hand to be your lawful wedded husband, to live together after God's ordinance in the holy estate of wedlock? Do you promise to love him, honor, comfort, and keep him in sickness and in health, in joy and in sorrow, and, forsaking all others, keep you only unto him so long as you both shall live?

The bride answered, in a low but clear voice, "I do."

Dr. Sunderland—In token of the same let the wedding ring be passed.

Mr. Cleveland put the plain gold band on the bride's extended finger, and with increased solemnity Dr. Sunderland said: "Forasmuch as Grover and Frank have here agreed and covenanted to live together after God's ordinance in the holy estate of wedlock, and have confirmed the same by giving and taking a wedding ring; now, therefore, in the presence of this company, in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, I pronounce and declare that they are husband and wife, and what God hath joined together let no man put asunder."

The Rev. Dr. Cleveland then pronounced the benediction: "God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Ghost, bless, preserve, and keep you, the Lord mercifully fill you with all spiritual blessings, and grant that you may so live together in this world that in the world to come you may have life everlasting. Amen."

The Bridegroom's Kiss.

President Cleveland bent over and kissed his bride full on the lips. The other gentlemen present were not accorded the privilege of saluting the bride, who confined her favors to the ladies; otherwise, however, there was nothing to mar the harmony of the occasion.

Congratulations.

Mr. Whitney made a graceful speech to Mrs. Cleveland, and Mr. Lamar showered compliments upon her. He said that he had never in his life seen any one who so completely satisfied his ideal of a mistress of the White House. "You will not only rule as a queen in the White House," he said, "but you will also be a queen in all our hearts." This, with a low bow which Mr. Lamar alone knows how to make, was considered the banner compliment of the evening.

Mrs. Folsom, the bride's mother, who had shown deep emotion during the ceremony, was the first to tender her congratulations. Miss Cleveland followed her, and then the Rev. Mr.

Cleveland and other relatives and friends in turn. While these congratulations were going on the Marine Band performed the bridal chorus and march from "Lohengrin."

Meanwhile the chimes throughout the city were making pleasant music, and Presidential salutes were fired by batteries of artillery near the river. The chime of bells of the Metropolitan Methodist Episcopal Church rang out Mendelssohn's Wedding March.

President Cleveland and his bride led the way into the East Room, the adornments of which were in keeping with its majestic proportions, and its ample space and brilliant illumination gave an excellent opportunity for a display of the ladies' toilets. The room presented a mass of exotic plants.

In the Dining-Room.

After a brief season of promenading and conversation, during which the congratulations were renewed, the company proceeded to the dining-room of the mansion, where a collation was served. There was no formal order observed; the guests sat at the small tables, or slowly promenaded the room as they discussed the menu. The souvenirs of satin boxes containing pieces of the bridal cake, each one bearing the hand-painted monogram of "C. F.," were greatly admired.

While the collation was being served the bride slipped away to her room and changed her bridal robes for a heavy traveling dress of gray silk, after which she returned and was joined by the President, who in the meanwhile had changed his dress suit for a traveling costume.

At 8:30, President and Mrs. Cleveland bade their friends good-by and left the White House through a private exit from the red-room into the south grounds. In a closed carriage they were driven away, amid showers of rice that were thrown after them, and cries of "Godspeed" came from the rear porch.

The bridal party having left the White House, the guests made merry for a short time. By ten o'clock all the guests had taken their departure. The President and his bride were driven to the depot, where they took the train for Deer Park, Md., for a week's honeymoon.

The Courtship.

Major Oscar Folsom, the father of the bride, was the law partner of President Cleveland and his enthusiastic supporter in his canvasses for Sheriff and Mayor of Buffalo. He was killed in 1875 by being thrown from a buggy when Miss Frank was only 11 years old, and the little girl was left in charge of the father's law partner as guardian. In his position as her father's most intimate friend and executor the President has been acquainted with Miss Folsom from childhood. Both she and her mother have learned to respect and admire his manly qualities as well as those fine and delicate qualities of mind and heart that charm a woman, and on his part the President has found in the daughter the characteristics which made him almost revere her father.

She has inherited all the brilliant qualities of her father, who was for years the leading orator and jury lawyer of Western New York. After the death of her father, Miss Frank went to live with Grandfather Folsom, of Folsomdale, where she lived until going on her trip to Europe. During her residence there Mr. Cleveland was a frequent visitor to the house, and it is said proposed marriage, and was accepted before the inauguration. In these few words can the story of the courtship be told. It is not a thing of yesterday, and the marriage which consummates it has been the dream of the President's life ever since Miss Folsom began to bud into womanhood.

The lady of the White House is looked upon by all feminine eyes. Every social act of hers is watched, and if she be a person of originality and sets any new customs in the manner of her dress or mode of arranging entertainments she is appreciated, and her ways copied. The bride is eminently fitted for the position.

The Folsom Family.

Oscar Folsom, her father, comes from an old and honorable family. The first of the name came from England in 1638 in the ship Diligent, of Ipswich. This was John Folsom, or Foulsham, as the name was then spelled. It is derived from the town of Foulsham, in Norfolk County, England, near Hingham. John came with a colony from Hingham and founded the town of Hingham, Mass. The family name was gradually changed until, in 1659, it was written Folsom by all the members in the United States.

Many distinguished Folsoms are chronicled in the family genealogy, notably Gen. Nathaniel Folsom, a Brigadier in the Colonial army. In 1774 he was chosen to the first general Congress, which met in Philadelphia. He served during the siege of Boston as a Brigadier. In 1775 he was commissioned Major General. In 1777 and 1779 he was again a member of Congress. He died in 1790, aged 64.

A BUSY LIFE ENDED.

John Kelly, the Chieftain of New York's Tammany Society, Passes Away.

His Death a Peaceful One, His Faculties Remaining Intact to the Last Moment.

"I have tried to live the life of a good Catholic, and die in the comfort of that faith," were the last words uttered on earth by John Kelly, the noted Tammany chief of New York, who passed away peacefully at his house in that city on the afternoon of Tuesday, the 1st inst. He had been sick for a long time—in fact, his illness dated back to the close of the last Presidential campaign—but it was not believed by his intimate friends that he was so near death's door. His mental faculties were bright and clear to the last. His death was painless and peaceful. He held the hand of his wife until his hold relaxed in death. Mr. Kelly leaves two children, a girl and a boy, aged respectively 9 and 7 years. His widow is a niece of the late Cardinal McCloskey. Mr. Kelly expressed a wish that his funeral should be private and simple, consequently there was no public demonstration.

Dr. Edward L. Keyes, who attended Mr. Kelly throughout his illness, says that his patient had been in failing health for two years. The nerve forces were impaired, and all the functions were deranged in consequence. He made strong efforts to regain his health, but they were futile. He finally acknowledged that it was useless to hope for recovery, and for six or eight months past he had confessed he was dying. At times Mr. Kelly was much depressed in spirits, but at no time was his intelligence impaired. He retained that throughout, and at all times had full control of his senses. His physical deterioration was great. His hair and beard became perfectly white. He lost at least sixty pounds in flesh. His heart and other integral organs were very much affected, although he had no organic disease. He seemed to show no regret, but appeared to be willing to let go his grip on life.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

"John Kelly—Grate Setter," was the sign which hung from a modest two-story house in Mott street, New York, in 1844. It indicated the humble beginning of one who, twelve years later, was a member of Congress, and who, for thirty years since then, was one of the most prominent political figures of New York. His name was familiar to everybody, and his features have been portrayed so frequently by the caricaturists that even children recognized it. It is said that the editor of an illustrated paper at one time instructed his artists to remember that when timely subjects did not present themselves a cartoon on John Kelly was always in order, and Kelly has been seen on a street-car perusing this very paper, his eye twinkling merrily when he found a humorous representation of himself. John's strong characteristic was his unostentatiousness, and for that reason people know very little about his private life.

John Kelly was born in New York City April 20, 1822. His father died when he was 8 years old. When the New York Herald was in its infancy young Kelly walked into the office one day and asked the elder Bennett if he wanted an office boy. Bennett was a good judge of character and quick in deciding. He talked with the youth a few minutes, and then told him to go to work. He became a great favorite with Bennett, and when at length he grew older and determined on learning a trade, so as to better support the large family that was depending on him, Mr. Bennett offered him strong inducements to remain, and on parting with him predicted that he would succeed anywhere. The elder Bennett was as strong a friend of Kelly's as the present Bennett was a bitter enemy. Kelly learned the trade of soapstone cutting and grate-setting, at which he afterward made a considerable fortune. He proved to be a remarkably shrewd business man, and his faith in the future of New York City was so great that with every $200 or $300 he would get he bought a lot up-town; these lots are worth to-day from $5,000 to $10,000, and Mr. Kelly has died a millionaire. Though his charity was distributed most secretly, it is estimated that he dispensed $250,000 in that way. When a young man John was notable as an athlete. The notorious John Morrisey said of Kelly that he had the build of an ideal pugilist. Though the cartoonists have always represented him as a dumpy man, he was nearly six feet in height and weighed about 240 pounds. He ran with the "fire laddies" in his early days, and made hosts of friends, who elected him Alderman in 1853. Tweed, of ring fame, afterward said of this body: "There never was a time before that you could not buy the Board of Aldermen, and if it was not for John Kelly's severity you could buy it now."

In 1854 he was elected to the Thirty-fifth Congress. He resigned his seat before his last term was completed to take the office of Sheriff, to which he had been elected. It was while in Congress that General Cass, President Buchanan's Secretary of State, spoke of him as "Honest John Kelly," which he has been commonly called since. In 1868 he was chosen the candidate for the Mayoralty in opposition to Bill Tweed's Tammany Hall candidate, but an awful burden of domestic afflict on in the loss of his wife and son compelled him to withdraw and take his two daughters—all that was left of his family—to Europe for his own health as well as theirs. He remained away three years, and during his absence New York City was given over wholly to the plunder of the Tweed ring. Prominent men like Mr. Tilden, Seymour, Hewitt, and Belmont sought Mr. Kelly to help them in this crisis. He had vowed never to again enter politics. Their importunities continued for a year, till at last he entered the fight, and while Mr. Tilden and Charles O'Conor attacked the Tweed ring in the Legislature and in the courts Mr. Kelly had a hand-to-hand tussle with them in Tammany Hall, their citadel, and routed them, as is well known. This gave him a prestige which he held since. An idea of the tremendous power which this ring wielded may be obtained from the fact that it gave employment to 12,000 persons and disbursed $30,000,000 annually. In 1876 Mr. Kelly was appointed Comptroller of the city, and not only stopped the debt of the city increasing, something unprecedented, but actually reduced it $12,000,000 during his term of office.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

MR. MANNING RESIGNS.

On account of failing health, Daniel Manning, secretary of the treasury, has sent his resignation to the president, in the course of which he outlines the financial policy of the government, in the following language: "The reforms in our fiscal policy which you have maintained, and which have been framed and commended to the wisdom of the legislative branch, are reforms necessary to our safety, binding in honor, obligatory in the the traditions of the democracy, set down with promises in our statute book. Our present tariff laws are a needless oppression instead of an easy burden. Our currency is a chaos, in which we pour from forced purchases of one of the precious metals a mechanical increment, under a coinage law so ill judged and untimely that it hinders the opening of our mints to the natural and unlimited coinage of both metals and the free expansion of our gold and silver coin along with the growing needs of a mighty people. All our needful customs revenue might be collected by strictly revenue duties upon a few score articles instead of by extravagant or prohibitory duties upon more than 4,000 articles. The mere machinery of administration by its own mass and complexity breaks down and crushes out the enterprise it assumes to protect. A better currency than elsewhere exists might be had by a few lines of repealing and empowering legislation, followed by two or three years of capable administration of the treasury, and joined with the present sagacious conduct of our foreign policy by the state department. Under the operation of currency laws and tariff laws now in force, which you and the forty ninth congress were elected by the people to repeal and reform, the burdened industries of our country are plunging heavily along a miry road toward foreseen danger. We talk of arbitrating our respective share of disaster, instead of knocking off our self-imposed fetters and releasing a general prosperity. This is not, in my deliberate judgment, a time when the president can delay to provide or afford to dispense with an actual as well as a titular head of the treasury department. The fiscal policy of the federal government in respect to a debt so large, taxation so pervasive, and a currency which is universal, cannot fail of being a chief factor in national and individual well being. Your own duty to which you have addressed yourself with such clear and unflinching purpose, the duty of congress in the premises and the laws which may yet be enacted for the guidance of the treasury department, will require that you be assisted in their administration by an officer capable of full efficiency and unwearied circumspection."

In a brief letter the president urges Mr. Manning to accept a leave of absence until October 1st, to give himself a chance to recover his health, and to give the president more time to consider all the circumstances in case Mr. Manning is still determined to retire from the cabinet.

NOTES AND NEWS.

In a recent interview with Mr. L. C. Storrs, secretary of the state board of corrections and charities, a reporter of the Saginaw Evening News discovered that the long established custom of bringing pauper children into this state from eastern states to find homes, is working more harm than good to the state. We have in Coldwater a school for the care and education of our own waifs, and the history and supervision of each is so complete that if one happens to get into a home not just suited to its needs, the defect can be remedied, while in the case of these children from the east, with no immediate care or supervision, if the homes prove unsatisfactory, the children are likely to run away and mingle with and grow up among vagabonds and criminals, and in that way do our state a positive damage. In the interview Mr. Storrs protested vigorously against filling our state with these children, one paragraph of which we copy as follows: "I think it should be discouraged, for many reasons. With the greatest care and pains that can be taken to get the children from distant states into good homes, mistakes will be made; the children not properly placed will soon become discouraged and, perhaps runaway, and doubtless become paupers or criminals, increasing by just so many these classes of our state, already too large. Then, too, our state, at great expense, has provided for and is fitting by the excellent training at Coldwater of our own poor children for the homes, and has provided by the county agency system for an oversight of them after being placed, that any mistakes made may be corrected, and so every influence surrounding them shall fit them for useful lives in the future."

The Boyne Statesman's mention last week of the marriage of President Cleveland and Miss Folsom was in keeping with that paper's usual indecent assaults upon people of prominence. How proud the people of Boyne City must be of their local paper!

My native land! amid thy cabin homes, Amid thy palaces, a demon roams; Frenzied with rage, yet subtle in his wrath, He crushes thousands in his fiery path; Stalks through our cities unabashed, and throws into the cup of sorrow bitter woes; Gives to pangs of grief an added smart, With keenest anguish rings the breaking heart; Drags the proud spirit from its envied height, And breathes on fondest hopes a killing blight; Heralds the shroud, the coffin, and the pall, And the graves thicken where his footsteps fall! 'Tis rum.

The Library Magazine.

One hardly appreciates the vast amount of valuable and entertaining matter which is contained in the Library Magazine, if he sees it in weekly form only; when its several issues are brought together in monthly parts it presents an array of valuable and timely articles that is fairly astonishing. The part for June contains a score of important papers selected from the best current literature, British and American, besides which there are the departments of "Books and their Authors," and "Literary Notes and Comments," which contain well-nigh two hundred notices and notes. It is doubtful if any other magazine, in Europe or America, furnishes so much valuable and interesting reading, even at five times its cost, which is only $1.50 a year. John B. Alden, Publisher, 393 Pearl St., New York.

Care for Piles.

Piles are frequently preceded by a sense of weight in the back, loins and lower part of the abdomen, causing the patient to suppose he has some affection of the kidneys or neighboring organs. At times, symptoms of indigestion are present, flatulency, uneasiness of the stomach, etc. A moisture, like perspiration, producing a very disagreeable itching, after getting warm, is a common attendant. Blind, Bleeding and Itching Piles yield at once to the application of Dr. Bosanko's Pile Remedy, which acts directly upon the parts affected, absorbing the Tumors, allaying the intense itching, and effecting a permanent cure. Price 50 cents. Sold by Geo. W. Crouter. 152

Only 35 Cents.

So confident are we that Dr. Pete's 35 cent Cough Cure will not disappoint the most sanguine expectation of a single broken-down consumptive invalid, that we warrant it. Had we not the most perfect confidence in its virtues, we would not think of offering it as we do. Sold by Perry Weed and Dr. G. W. Crouter.

A Reliable Article.

The Great German Doctor.

The remarkable phase in the practice of Dr. Peter W. Schmidt (frequently called Dr. Peter), he never asked one to describe their disease, his intuitive perceptions being so strong he can tell any one their trouble without asking a question. His success is phenomenal. His practice enormous. He is sought after by hundreds who never he goes, because he cures when every physician and remedy has failed. The giving of his great medicine, Golden Seal Bitters, which has made a great success, to the world marks a new era in medicine. Blood, liver, kidney, and stomach disorders yield to this master of disease, and its wonderful cures are regarded as phenomenal, but the germ of faith ever says, "What has been may be again." We say to the sick and discouraged give Golden Seal Bitters a trial. It is all we ask. They will speak for themselves. Sold by Perry Weed and Dr. G. W. Crouter.

BUTTER AND EGGS WANTED

THE IMPOSSIBLE.

Man cannot draw water from an empty well,
Nor trace the stories that gossips tell,
Nor gather the sounds of a pealing bell.

Man never can stop the billow's roar,
Nor change the winds till they blow no more,
Nor drive true love from a maiden's door.

Man cannot o'ertake a fleeting lie,
Change his wheat to a field of rye,
Nor call back years that have long gone by.

Man cannot a cruel word recall,
Fetter a thought, be it great or small,
Nor honey extract from a drop of gall.

Man never can bribe old Father Time,
Gain the peak that he cannot climb,
Nor trust the hand that hath done a crime.

Man never can backward turn the tide,
Nor count the stars that are scattered wide,
Nor find in a fool a trusty guide.

Man cannot reap fruit from worthless seed,
Rely for strength on a broken reed,
Nor gain a heart he hath caused to bleed.

Man never can hope true peace to win,
Pleasure without and joy within,
Living a thoughtless life of sin.

ANYBODY.

A fading spinster, lone and lorn,
Upon a summer's night,
Was praying for proposals
With all her maiden might.

Beneath her window posed an owl
In sober dignity,
Inspecting the fair landscape
From perch on apple tree.

A zephyr rustled o'er that owl,
Who by that window sate,
The maiden hearing "Who! who! who!"
Cried "Any one, O fate!"

TRAILED BY BLOODHOUNDS.

BY CAPTAIN JAMES MONTFORD.

"The person who passed through the war without meeting with adventures that thrilled his blood, or mysteries which chilled it, must have been a very queer individual."

"We all met with adventures, Colonel," I replied, "but they flitted past so quickly that they became obliterated by the stirring events which came after."

"Umph! I must have a better memory than other people," the old gentleman said, smiling, "for scarcely a day passes but some circumstance is recalled to my mind."

"Then it is your duty to supply the deficiencies of your friends."

"Well, I think the most horrid action I was concerned in took place a few days before the battle of Perryville. There was a negro teamster attached to our company, who was one of the principals. He was a tall, raw-boned fellow, with a countenance of mingled brutality and cunning.

"He was stubborn and unmanageable to a degree, and we had a good deal of trouble with him at different times.

"It was always necessary to place a 'boss' over him, and even then willful mistakes were always occurring.

"One day he was shoeing a horse, a valuable black, belonging to one of the aids, and a sergeant was directing his movements.

"The fellow was sullen, and had committed several faults. At last he pared the hoof so close that the blood followed the knife.

"I happened along at that juncture, and saw the sergeant raise the stick he held in his hand, and bring it down over the black's shoulders.

"The negro turned his head, and cast a look so fierce and vengeful at his chastiser that the latter changed color.

"I shall not soon forget the glance; it expressed all the depravity of his vile nature.

"He did not speak; not even a cry of pain escaped his lips. Resuming his task with the manner of one who desired to complete it as soon as possible, he had soon finished, and, after examining the horse, I walked on.

"The next morning the sergeant was found, wrapped in his cloak, dead.

"The vein in his throat had been severed in a horrible manner, and from the position in which he lay it was evident the deed had been done while he was sleeping, and that he had not been allowed an opportunity to defend himself.

"There was not the slightest clew to the perpetrator of this outrage; but it at once occurred to me that the negro teamster was the murderer.

"I did not express my opinion until I had made inquiries and found that the fellow had left the camp.

"None of his acquaintances had the least knowledge of his whereabouts.

"I then made my suspicions known, and a strict search was instituted; but nothing was found to bring home the charge.

"At last one Medill offered a suggestion which, though it was, perhaps, no more than strict justice would permit, has always seemed awful to me.

"It was to trail the murderer with bloodhounds, a practice too often followed in that country.

"'There's a gentleman near here,' said Medill, 'who owns a fine pair. They will find him, I'll warrant it, if he's above ground.'

"After some consideration, it was decided that the soldier's suggestion should be followed.

"It was necessary that an example should be made; for murder, like everything else, if it goes unpunished will spread.

"Medill and another man were dispatched for the dogs, and they returned about the middle of the forenoon, accompanied by an old negro who had charge of the brutes.

"They were an ugly looking pair, evidently old, and their bodies slashed with many wounds.

"I could not resist comparing them with the black whom I thought the murderer. They seemed well chosen for their duty.

"They found a scent immediately, but not the right one. They pursued one of the soldiers who stood upon the outside of the group, and it required all the efforts of their black master to restrain them.

"But after considerable difficulty a scent was found, and the negro expressed an opinion that it was the correct one.

"A dozen men, among whom I was one, mounted the swiftest horses in the command, and as the dogs started away with long leaps we followed.

"It was a plain trail for the first half a dozen miles, and we covered the distance in a very short time.

"There was something wonderfully exhilarating in the chase, notwithstanding the nature of the game we had in view.

"There is more or less of the savage in man, and it only requires a proper opportunity for it to display its traits in full strength.

"I experienced the greatest eagerness imaginable in pursuing that poor wretch, and knew from the flushed faces and sparkling eyes of my companions that they felt the same emotions.

"Although we urged the horses forward as fast as they could bear, the dogs were far ahead.

"They came to a halt, however, after we had traversed six miles.

"A narrow creek lay in their path. When we came up they were running up and down the bank, with their noses to the ground.

"We forded the creek, and the dogs failed on the scent.

"'It am a black man,' declared the keeper, his voice trembling with excitement; 'he has waded up de creek; no white man would ever do dat.'

"On we went again. In about half an hour we heard a peculiar sound from the dogs.

"'He am treed!' cried the keeper; and we rode rapidly up the mountain at the foot of which we had now arrived.

"We soon came in sight of the dogs, and a small cabin, which seemed deserted.

"The brutes were running about, uttering that strange sound characteristic of them when they have found their game.

"Leaping from our horses, we ran up to the cabin door. It was secured upon the inside, and we had some difficulty in breaking it down.

"As we did so there came a yell from our companion, who had been left to watch on the outside.

"The negro murderer had leaped from a small window in the upper part of the deserted hut, and was now running for life.

"We could not pursue him on horseback as he darted up the rocky slope. He was strong and fleet of foot; none of our hunters could rival him.

"The dogs were tearing about inside the cabin. Their keeper succeeded at last in bringing them to the fresh trail; but then the negro was barely discernible, far up the mountain.

"The fellow was exerting himself to the utmost, and I could not help admiring his pluck, even while straining every muscle in the pursuit.

"We clambered up the slope as rapidly as we could; but the negro and his pursuers had passed from our view.

"Suddenly we heard again that peculiar sound from the dogs. The murderer was at bay. Perhaps fighting for his life with the fierce hounds.

"We ran forward, almost falling at every step, and several gave up the chase, dropping upon the ground through fatigue.

"I was one of the first who came within view of the strange scene presented at the top of the mountain.

"The dogs were sitting upon their haunches at the foot of a huge tree whose limbs hung over a high bluff.

"The negro was hanging upon a limb of the tree. His face was distorted, and his eyes seemed upon the point of dropping from their sockets.

"His clothing hung about him in shreds; his hands were torn and bloody.

"As we came within sight he turned his eyes upon us with the look of a wolf at bay; then he looked down at the dogs who were yelping a few feet below.

"'Come down,' I cried, and the fellow rose to his feet, steadying himself with one hand.

"Seeing his movement the dogs rose also; they licked their frothy lips in anticipation of the prey which they were never to taste.

"Standing for an instant upon his insecure perch, the negro glanced around him.

"The look of desperation upon his face was that of a demon; with a cry scarcely human he swung his form backward, and then leaped far out over the bluff.

"Rushing to the edge, I dropped upon my knees. I saw the form whirl over in the air, then drop from sight.

"We circled the bluff and came upon his mangled body, but

With scarce a shred to tell of human form,
Or fragment for the sea-bird or the worm."

AUCTIONS.

BY ANNIE E. MYERS.

It is a matter of history that women in Babylon were publicly auctioned off to the highest bidders for wives.

This sale occurred annually among those old heathen, at which time all virgins of a marriageable age were required to assemble at a certain place in their respective districts, and thither flocked all the gay and frolicsome young pagans to select their wives.

No doubt the dandies fluttered and bobbed around, stopped here and there, put their turbaned heads together for confidential confabs, much after the fashion of the busy bee around an intoxicating clover blossom. The young fellows whose silken purses were well lined with gold and silver consulted and compared notes as to the comparative beauty of the candidates to come under the auctioneer's hammer, gave passing attention to the probabilities in regard to the dispositions and tempers of the respective mothers-in-law elect, while the dusky swain whose bidding must be more modest, and whose tastes and desires must be regulated to enjoy what may be left, passed quietly yet observingly around, mingling freely in the midst of the excited throng, silently picking up points and waiting their chances, after the fashion of the hangers-on around the wheat-pit in the Chicago Board of Trade.

The style of conducting this Babylonian sale was quite American in its main points, but perhaps on a fairer basis than deals in "Sept." wheat.

The most beautiful was put up first, and he who bid the most money gained possession of her. The second in appearance followed, and the bidders gratified themselves with handsome wives according to the length of their purses.

But, alas! Strange as it may appear to modern civilization—our civilization in which every girl may become a wife if she can satisfy herself with what the gods provide—among the Babylonians there were some ladies for whom no money was offered.

It seems that physical beauty alone was the one thing desired in a wife. Those benighted heathen had not acquired the taste that could appreciate the æsthetic loveliness of even protoplasmic psychology. But the pagan dogs had all the inventive genius of a maneuvering modern mamma, consequently when all the beautiful virgins were sold the crier ordered the least handsome to stand up, when he would demand who would marry her with a certain sum, then who with a smaller amount, until she would finally be adjudged to the one who would be satisfied with the least. In this manner the money paid as premiums for beauty served as bribes for disagreeable looks.

This custom emanated from the minds of idol worshipers, at least one hundred years before Christ came with His enlightening religion, but in what movement of reform, in what solution of mystifying social questions has a more humanitarian doctrine been adopted?

The contemplation of this unique stroke of diplomacy has suggested a modern adaptation.

Why would it not be a neat manner of disposing of our men?

Use the premiums obtained from the sale of the luckless young and old bachelors who seem incapable of getting themselves married, as bribes to hasten the disposal of married men whose wives are anxious to get rid of them.

Until a man is married his failings are not observable, he is an adorable object in the eyes of all femininity, unless he wears green goggles or parts his hair in the middle, and most of them would go off under the auctioneer's hammer like a dynamite bomb or hot cakes in a gentlemen's restaurant, and the sum realized therefrom would be sufficiently large to greatly accelerate the disposal of the unfortunates whose wives have disclosed to the public their heretofore hidden deformities—men are so deceiving.

If such a sale were to occur at this season of the year, the man who is never satisfied with the house he and his family occupy, thinks the rent too high, or the repairs not properly attended to by its landlord—the man whose wife is obliged to keep the chair-legs in canvas casings to be in readiness for the semi-annual flitting—would be the man who would probably require to be accompanied by the largest bribe.

If not him, it would be the man whose wife is snubbed out of all chance of the most elementary self-assertion. The brute who is guilty of beating his wife would need a large portion to make him salable, but it would be insignificant compared with the amount required to launch the man who is able to paralyze and subdue his wife—in public.

It is presumable that, among these deformed and unsatisfactory husbands, he who could be disposed of with the least ready cash would be the man who belongs to six clubs and lodges and had to "meet a friend" the seventh night, but who, with a modicum of grumbling, provides a liberal wherewithal for the new spring bonnet trimmed with a profusion of the flowers that bloom in the hat season.—Chicago Ledger.

A Cat's Nine Lives.

Of the cat it is commonly said, says a writer in Popular Science Monthly, that it has nine lives. By this saying nothing very definite is meant beyond the opinion that under various kinds of death the cat lives much longer than other animals that have to be killed by violent means. When any question is asked of the police or of other persons who have to take the lives of lower animals, they tell you, without exception, according to my experience, that the cat is the most difficult to destroy of all domestic animals, and that it endures accidental blows and falls with an impunity that is quite a distinguishing characteristic.

The general impression conveyed in these views is strictly correct up to a certain and well-marked degree. By the lethal death the value of the life of the cat is found to be at least three times the worth of the dog. In all the cases I have seen in which the exactest comparisons were made the cat outlived the dog. A cat and dog of the same ages being placed in a lethal chamber, the cat may, with perfect certainty, be predicted to outlive the dog. The lethal chamber being large enough to hold both the cat and the dog, the vapor inhaled by the animals being the same, with every other condition identical, the result, as an experimental truth, may be accepted without cavil.

The differences, always well marked, are sometimes much longer than would be credible in the absence of evidence. I have once seen a cat falling asleep in a lethal chamber in the same period as a dog, remain breathing, literally, nine times longer, for the dog died in five minutes, and the cat not only continued to breathe in profoundest sleep for forty-five minutes, but would have been recoverable by simple removal from the vapor into fresh air, if it had been removed while yet one act of breathing continued. This, however, was exceptional, because the cat in the same lethal atmosphere as the dog does not, as a rule, live more than thrice as long—i. e., if the dog ceases to breathe in four minutes, the cat will cease in from ten to twelve minutes after falling asleep.

Novelist Howells and His Dainty Wife.

Howells is a dumpy little man, with a fat nut-brown face, full jaws, handsome chin, eyes that ooze a warm, bright light from their hanging lids, and wearing his hair parted in the middle and banged squarely and most delightfully over his brow. That bang is a touch of nature that makes all women's hearts kind to him. He is undersized, walks with a little lumpity-lump gait most fetching, and has boyish manners hard to harmonize with those stories of his Boston exclusiveness. Mrs. Howells, his dainty little wife, looks like a precious bit of old china, like a fragile, creamy-tinted cup, sprigged all over with blue forget-me-nots, "seen," Charles Lamb would say, "through the lucid atmosphere of far Cathay."—Washington letter to the Savannah News.

THEY begged him to play a little. He seemed to feel bashful at first, but after a while began to play vigorously. "What powor!" said a listener to the owner of the piano. "Yes!" exclaimed the latter in alarm, "he seems to have considerable muscle; but he ought to know that this isn't a gymnasium."

LIFE is like a pack of cards. Childhood's best cards are hearts; youth is captured by diamonds; middle age is conquered with a club, while old age is raked in by the insatiable spade.

The True Ministry of the Kiss.

Of the great needs of American home life to-day, a hearty, sincere, and frequent manifestation of affection stands at the head. Thousands of families there are in which never a kiss is exchanged. The day is begun and ended by all, from the father to the five-year-old, in the same heartless fashion. No wonder the years rapidly hide their faces in the "long ago."

Yet what can stay so many sorrows as the hearty kiss of true affection? Does mamma's kiss possess such wonderful curative power for the baby, and the child's have no power of healing for the mother?

Boys, kiss your mothers. It won't break the heart that has endured the strain of ceaseless vigil and care through all the years of your infantile tenderness, and the later years of your happy, headlong, heartless helplessness. Try it some day. Many a boy has risen to noble renown by the self-denying toil of a widowed mother. She is proud of your success, and asks no other reward for the heavy struggle than the hearty affection of an appreciative soul. Don't deprive her of that slight recompense, my boy. Should the cloud become so heavy as to take her from your sight, you will never have another mother. The law may give a man a dozen wives; heaven can give him but one mother. The boy that is too big to kiss his mother is too small to kiss anybody else. Girls, beware of him! Such boys fairly pant with anxiety to attend every occasion that may afford them opportunity to kiss some butterfly, whose chief accomplishments may be little waist (no reference to economy) and big bustle—not of useful activity, but of paper.

I know, my boy, your mother's voice may lack the low melody of your "last flame," but it will ring with the music of unselfish affection long after your "flame's" has been lost amid the ashes of selfishness. Your mother may not be able to vie with some girl you know in coddling, with a wealth of affectionate adjectives and languishing attitudes, a pet pug-nosed dog or rabbit-tailed cat. But with arms and body rising superior to the pain and ache that tortured her frame, she carried you night and day in the lingering sickness of your infancy; she pressed you to her heart and covered with kisses your face, even while made so repulsive with foul disease that your fair charmer, who daily divides her affections between you and her dog, would have turned away in disgust. But, then, her arms have borne a nobler burden, her heart is filled with a holier love, her mind occupied with a loftier ideal, else you would not be where you are to-day. Then kiss the dear old face, deeply seamed with care for you. Don't wait till that loving smile, stereotyped by death, can only be impressed upon your heart forever. The noblest and highest ordeal of your future is embodied in your mother, my boy.

Girls, kiss your fathers. Make them glad every day that their patient toil has such affectionate reward. Show, each one of you, that you appreciate your father. His tremulous hand may not be as fair and smooth as the "lily" hand of the dude seeking your smile. His aged form may not be as erect as the brainless fop who impatiently waits permission to take you to a new home, there to surround you with every luxury—at your father's expense. His handwriting may not be as roundly regular as that of your last correspondent; but that sprawling signature on the corner of an old envelope will drain more money out of the bank in a minute, than your admiring Adonis' copper-plate, written all over a spotless page of foolscap, can in ten years.

Then, each kiss imprinted on that whitening brow may help you to remember that your parents won't be with you forever. The rapidly revolving hand is completing the circuit of life's dial; each passing day brings nearer the season for flight; each growing infirmity is a pluming of the wings; by-and-by the mellow dusk of life's autumn will lure the gentle spirit from your bleak neglect to the summer bloom of the glory-land. Then will settle over the old homestead the blight of a poverty which no wealth can banish. So strengthen the soul and cheer the spirit of your father and mother by the affection of to-day; and if, by reason of early privation and disadvantage (from which they have carefully guarded their children), you breathe the purer atmosphere of better things, know that the frequent kiss of loving appreciation is the magical power by which you may daily lift the hearts of your parents to the height upon which their loving self-denial has placed you.—Rev. Henry B. Hudson.

He Remembered.

"Now, pa, dear," said a Hartford girl, "you will do just one or two little errands for me to-day, won't you?"

"Why, certainly, my dear."

"Oh, that's over so good a pa. You just match these seven colors in worsted, buy me three good crochet needles, you know what kind, and a—a—package of caramels."

"All right, my dear. I'll remember the caramels." And that was all he intended to remember.—Hartford Post.

SIR WATKINS WILLIAM WYNNE talking to a friend about the antiquity of his family, which he carried back to Noah, was told that he was a mere mushroom of yesterday. "How so, pray?" asked the baronet. "Why," exclaimed the other, "when I was in Wales, a pedigree of a particular family was shown me; it filled five large skins of parchment, and near the middle of it was a note in the margin: 'About this time the world was created.'"—St. Louis Magazine.

TENNESSEE'S distinguished historian, Judge Haywood, was once presiding in a case where a woman was being tried for some offense in which the evidence was clearly against her. At the close of the trial the Judge, in giving the case to the jury, said: "Gentlemen, you have heard the evidence and you know the law." Then, after a pause: "There is no punishment a man can inflict upon a woman and still be a man." The woman was acquitted by the jury without leaving the box.—Jackson (Tenn.) Blade.

DISTANCE LENDS ENCHANTMENT.

And she said the bare Numidian, and the much-tamed Abyssinian, and the Cannibal and Guinean overflowed her with contrition.
And her deep sighs weighed the breezes for those lands where bread nor cheese is; for the Turks and the Chineses she was filled with deep emotion.
And her ardent love was greater all the more she strove to cater to those tribes beyond the equator, or across a distant ocean.
And like Rachel, that sweet Jewess, she wept tears as thick as glue is at the action of St. Louis and Chicago's degradation;
And that those towns where such sin is, such a race for golden guineas, might be made as good as Lynn is, was her prayer and supplication.
And the wild men of Alaska or of barbarous Madagascar she would say, if you should ask her, that she loved them deep and tender,
While her husband, luckless victim, looked as if the Fates had licked him, and, through back streets where they kicked him, walked about with one suspender.

A Great Find.

The agent of a dime museum, who had been sent out by the proprietor with a roving commission to replace a leading attraction who had lately married another freak, and gone out of the show business, came upon a Long Island fisherman.

"Anything unusual in the fish about this vicinity?" he inquired.

"Naw, nuthin' out o' ordinrey," replied the old man, "'cept that they bites more one day than they does t'other."

"Didn't you ever hook a big fish that pulled you overboard, and towed you across to the other side of the lake?"

"Naw, never ded."

"Didn't you ever see the fish so hungry that they jumped right into your boat to get at the bait?"

"Naw, can't saay thet I ded."

"Didn't you ever see the lake so full of fish that you had to get out of your boat and shove it along over their backs?"

"Naw, don't think I ever ded."

"Never caught a fish that had swallowed a precious gem of untold wealth?"

"Saay, does I look es ef I hed?"

"How long have you been fishing, anyhow?"

"Nigh onter sexty year, man and boy."

"Old man," joyfully exclaimed the dime museum agent, as he took him by the lapel of his coat, "come with me! I have gold for thee."—Exchange.

Armored Ships Not in Repute.

Is it, therefore, a fact that armorclads are drifting into disrepute? It cannot be disguised that at the present time there are very earnest debates on this point. The question as it affects the armored ship stands differently from what it did some years ago. An insignificant torpedo-boat may by one blow destroy the Inflexible. To meet this species of peril it has been proposed to armor-plate the bottom of the ships. Such a proposal seems to be carrying the principle of employing armor to the verge of absurdity. There is a demand on the part of naval officers for crinoline-netting to protect the ships against locomotive torpedoes. But where this device is adopted it cannot be said to give a sense of security. Moreover, the use of such an appliance militates against the speed and handiness of the vessel, and exposes her to other risks.—English Shipbuilder.

"My dear," said Mrs. Gensing, addressing her husband at the breakfast table, "I am going to discharge the hired girl, for she does not do to please me."

"Well, I hope you won't discharge her until we get another girl to take her place."

"Yes, I will, and you'll see that we get along just as well. I am going to do her work myself. Now, don't you say a word, for I'm going to do it."

Mr. Gensing said nothing, for, to tell the truth, the economical idea pleased him, but the next morning he could not see his wife get up and make fires, so he made them. Then he brought water and milked the cow—in fact, discharged nearly all the duties of the hired girl.

"My dear," Gensing's wife said a few days later, "I told you that we could get along just as well without a hired girl. What's the use of wasting money? Now we are getting along just as well as can be, without a word of complaint. You have never given me credit for what I can do. Say, George, before you go down town I wish you would bring in some wood and a couple of buckets of water, and if you are not in too much of a hurry you may wipe the dishes for me."—Arkansaw Traveler.

Danger!

If you have a feeling of oppression and uneasiness a little above the diaphragm, and just below the right ribs, aggravated by lying on the right side, look out! As sure as fate, your liver is disordered. Perhaps not seriously as yet, but—fatal hepatic abscesses are not uncommon. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is the precise remedy to regulate the liver, and prevent its congestion and inflammation, and to disperse such minor indicia of its derangement as yellowness of the skin and ball of the eye, furred tongue, sourness of the breath, nausea on rising in the morning, dizziness, sick headache and constipation. By relaxing the bowels painlessly, it opens a channel of exit for the superfluous bile, checks a tendency to congestion and engorgement of the liver, at the same time giving a gentle impetus to its secretive action, and affords relief to the stomach, which is usually inactive, out of order, and oppressed with wind when the bowels are costive. Use the Bitters also in fever and ague, rheumatism, and kidney troubles.

An Indiana Lawyer.

A somewhat eminent lawyer in Indiana, Judge Z——, given at times to bibulous conviviality, on appearing one morning on the streets in Washington, in that State, was accosted by a minister of the gospel as follows:

"Well, drunk again as usual, Judge."

To which Judge Z—— answered: "So am I," and passed on.

The same lawyer visited an Illinois town and got on a spree. A police officer told him if he did not go to his botel and keep off the street until he got sober, he would be arrested and locked up.

"Why can't I?" inquired the officer.

"Because, sir (hic), got no jurisdiction; th's is (hic) an Indiana drunk."

While getting shaved this lawyer, who is quite bald-headed, was attempted to be guyed by a doctor whose hair was very profuse. The doctor said:

"Why, Judge, you are getting quite bald."

To this the Judge answered: "Yes, brains and hair don't grow together. By the way, Doctor, I observe that you have a fine head of hair."—Detroit Free Press.

The proprietor of the Great Western Poultry Yard, Mr. James E. Goodkey, St. Louis, Mo., is enthusiastic in his praise of Red Star Cough Cure, which cured him after all other remedies failed. He says it neither constipates the bowels nor causes sick headache.

NOW THAT the season has arrived when disinfectants are often wanted, it is well to remember that chloride of sodium, or common salt is one of the cheapest, most effectual, and harmless. It can be used in strong or weak solution about the person or the premises. —Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

A Sufficient Reason.

Visitor from out of town (addressing the school)—In the year 1825, my dear young friends, several boys walked from Salem to Boston and back, a distance of thirty miles, to hear Daniel Webster speak. If there were no railroads or means of transportation today, would the boys of the present generation undertake such a journey, do you think?

Visitor—Ah! and why?

Small Boy—Because Mr. Webster is dead.—New York Sun.

"Good deeds," once said the celebrated Richter, "ring clear through heaven like a bell." One of the best deeds is to alleviate human sufferings. "Last fall my daughter was in decline," says Mrs. Mary Hinson, of Montrose, Kansas, "and everybody thought she was going into consumption. I got her a bottle of Dr. R. V. Pierce's 'Favorite Prescription,' and it cured her." Such facts as the above need no comment.

Late Hours For Children.

The old adage of

"Early to bed and early to rise Makes a man healthy and wealthy and wise,"

is true of children even much more than of grown persons, from the fact that their entire systems are much more susceptible to the evil action of anything not in complete harmony with the laws of health. The mind as well as the body requires its intervals of rest in order to recuperate after exertion. Exercise of the mind destroys or decomposes a portion of the cells of the brain, for it is only by the action of these brain cells that we can have thought, just as it is only by the action of the cells of the muscular tissue that we can have motion of any portion of the body. During the waking hours the brain cells are continually in action, sometimes one part and sometimes another, according to circumstances. During the time this waste of brain tissue is going on there is also a counter action of repair, but not sufficient to supply the loss without an interval of cessation in the process of destruction, in order that the reparation process may catch up, and thus make the thinking properties of the brain as good as before. And in the case of children it must even do more than repair the damage, it must make the brain stronger than before; for the child's brain is continually growing, in order that the mind may be stronger, and thus be prepared for the necessities of the future, when greater things will be required of it. And again the child's brain is very tender and not inured to hardships like that of the adult. It cannot be knocked and dandled about with impunity like that of a strong and vigorous man, any more than the body of a child can endure the hardships of the "horny handed sons of toil."

There are five avenues to the mind through which it receives messages or impressions from the outer world. These are designated the five senses; viz.: seeing, hearing, smelling, tasting and feeling. While these avenues are all open it is almost impossible for any other than a thoroughly exhausted mind to obtain the necessary rest for recuperation, for the messages are coming in from each of these five senses, and the mind is kept as busy as a telegraph operator who is listening to the messages from five different lines at one time.

It is therefore a wise provision of nature that she shuts off the light of day once in twenty-four hours, bringing on a condition of darkness which closes the main avenue to the mind, that of sight. This in turn causes a cessation of labor, and thus closes, in a measure, another of the avenues. For when labor stops noise stops, and without noise there is no hearing. Under these circumstances there is not likely to be anything brought within reach of the organs of smell or taste, which shuts them off. This leaves nothing but the nerves of feeling, and as this sense can but slightly through the influence of movements, and movements have already practically ceased, we have the various avenues all practically closed except as they are continued through artificial means.

Thus we see that nature has provided the very best means to bring about the desired condition to permit this required rest before the mind is too much exhausted.

We see, too, why it is best that the mind should obtain rest during the hours of darkness, as provided by nature. Perfect rest can be obtained only under these conditions. When sleep occurs at other times it is only partly satisfactory, and sometimes the person feels more weary after such sleep than before.

It is a noted fact than persons who work at night and sleep in the daytime soon break down in health, and it is almost sure to be by some nervous disease, being frequently what is known as neurasthenia or nervous prostration; more especially is this the case if the person is of a nervous temperament.

Children, whose brains are much more tender than those of adults, need their rest at the proper time, or great damage may be done them, both in dwarfing their minds, and in causing diseases of the nervous system, which may either produce death or lay the foundation for life-long misery.

The people of America are much more prone to nervousness and nervous diseases than any other nation, and undoubtedly one great cause is, that they are allowed while children to keep late hours. Their parents love to make little men and women of them when they are in reality only babies.

Children require also much more rest than adults, because they have not only to recuperate the tissues which have been used up, but they must furnish enough that the mind may grow and become larger than before. Hence the child must have a great deal more rest and sleep than the adult, in order that nature may have more time in which to accomplish this greater work.

When we allow children to remain up in the evening as long as grown people, we are not only sowing seeds for their future misery by a deranged nerous system (a condition which can produce more pain and suffering than any other), but we are robbing them of the growth of brain, thus deadening their intellects, making them less intelligent than nature would otherwise make them. And all this simply for gratification for short time. Oh, the selfishness! oh, the stupidity, the sinfulness of the parent who thus treats the poor innocent child. In many cases it would be more charitable to beat out its brains with a club and thus end its misery forever.

The practice of taking children to to theaters, to balls, suppers, etc. where they have to remain up until a late hour, is entirely contrary to nature, and the excuse that the children "like to go," and "I don't like to refuse them anything which I myself enjoy," simply shows that the child has been allowed to require an unnatural habit which should be discontinued immediately. It is only perfectly natural for children to be sleepy and want to go to bed soon after their evening meal, which should be soon after dark in the winter, and a little before dark in the long days of summer.

The practice of giving children's parties in the evening where they are taught to act like miniature men and women is so contrary to nature that I wonder it was ever allowed by a civilized human being. Let them have afternoon parties on the lawn or somewhere where they can play and romp all they please, and have a good time. If this soils their fine clothes, it is better that they should be soiled, than you can have others made that are more suitable. But at any rate, let them be children while they are children, for it is only in this way they are perfectly happy. Don't undertake to undo the work of nature, for nature's works are God's works, and he who undertakes to undo the works of God is sure to accomplish inevitable ruin. Nature's laws are God's laws, and he who disobeys them disobeys God just as surely as when he breaks the Ten Commandments. Nature's revelations are God's revelations, and he who refuses to study nature, refuses to study God's truths just as surely as when he refuses to study the bible.—[Florence M. King.

MORE IRON IN MICHIGAN.

What is Supposed to be a Rich Find in Charlevoix County.

Special to the Detroit Free Press.

ELK RAPIDS, June 14.—Several times the Progress, of this place, has noticed that there were indications of oil on the farm of S. S. Spalding, near Norwood, Charlevoix County. These reports have set parties investigating and they have found not oil, but a superior quality of magnetic iron ore. All along the beach tons upon tons of black sand are found, which is simply magnetic ore. A cigar box filled with it weighs twenty-five pounds or more, and it assays about sixty-five per cent, pure iron. Back from the beach the outcropping of a ledge upon examination proves to be magnetic ore, which yields forty two per cent, of iron. No one knows yet how far this ledge extends, but indications of iron are found all the way from Elk Rapids to Boyne City. This same black sand spoken of crops out near Elk Rapids and several pieces of ore have been found in the interior. From the best authorities on the subject the evidences go to prove that a very fine quality of magnetic ore lies buried at Norwood. The ledge mentioned weighs, one would judge from what one could see of of it, hundreds and thousands of tons. Several samples which have been analyzed would yield all the way from twenty to eighty five per cent of iron. One piece from the ledge yields forty-two per cent, and the sand 65.85 per cent. A large number of acres of land have been leased, and work will begin as soon as possible, to see what will pan out. A company with a capital stock of $50,000 will at once be founded and the matter will be pushed. If the find proves as valuable as the evidences lying on the surface would seem to indicate the Grand Traverse region has struck a bonanza.

The existence of oil and iron on the premises above mentioned has been suspected for a number of years, and those who have had the most faith in the value of the mineral deposit have been subjects of ridicule among the people and the press of the Traverse region.

The attention of one interested party was directed to the surface indications of oil in a most comical manner, and one which he cannot easily forget. He was hunting his cows one dark night, and in attempting to cross a swampy place on a fallen tree he fell down through the brush into the water. For days afterward his clothes were so saturated with the crude petroleum that he could not wear them. From that day to this he has not for a moment lost faith in the ultimate success of any well conducted effort to develop the hidden resources of that particular section of country.

We have been over the ground, and have for some time had reason to believe that negotiations were pending, by which these surface indications were to be tested, and have for several weeks been daily looking for some definite report of progress of the work, but have not been authorized to print anything.

We have in our office a piece of the ledge which the above dispatch says will yield forty-two per cent of pure iron, and have a number of times seen samples of the black sand which yields sixty-five per cent of iron.

While the above dispatch may be unauthorized and a little a premature, we have reason to believe that enough is already known to warrant the assertion that that particular section of Charlevoix County is about to begin a "boom," such as has not been seen in the Traverse region for a long time, if ever.

Powers' Successor.

LANSING, June 14.—It is quite positively understood here that Hon. Henry P. Henderson, of this county, will be appointed United States Judge to Utah, vice Powers. Mr. Henderson has a record at the Ingham county bar not excelled by that of any lawyer in the state. He is a gentleman of great attainments in his profession, one who has won the respect and regard of his people by the purity of his character and his personal worth. Not the least becoming of his traits is that modesty of demeanor usually associated with great talent. Mr. Henderson served a term in the legislature as a representative from his county. He acquired much influence in that body and was found to be a man of sound judgment, of correct instincts and always devoted to the cause of the people. None will rejoice more at his appointment than his old legislative associates.

Patronize Legitimate Dealers.

I have always been an advocate of home support. I believe in trading with personal friends in preference to strangers: that the men who are in business here who have reputations at stake, are the ones to whom I should go for what I need, in preference to some glib-tongued man who pays no taxes, has no habitation—is here to day and no one knows where he will be to-morrow. It does not stand to season that a peddler who is roaming from place to place, even though he goes in style, can procure goods any cheaper, can sell any cheaper, or make any better selection of goods. It is preposterous on its face. It is ridiculous to think about. He makes a bigger profit and sells a poorer quality of goods by going from house to house than he could by having a store, or he would not do it. He can display a cheaper grade of goods and dwell at length on their value, because he has not a better quality of goods to make comparisons with. The men who buy large stocks of goods, who pay rent, hire clerks, and contribute to the municipal revenues, have a right to complain that the municipal authorities permit peddlers to go from house to house. It is annoying to women folks to have these fellows ringing at door bells and wanting to display goods. If dealers in linens or liverpads have anything to sell that is meritorious let them open a store where they can be called on. If they have superior articles and sell at under prices (neither of which they do,) the people will soon find out that fact. My advice is, and always will be, to have nothing to do with migratory peddlers. Do not trade with them—do not encourage them—do not give them license. If your merchant has not the article you want, tell him to get it for you. He will do it, and get you a better article and sell it to you cheaper.—Jackson Sunday Times.

Wages in Germany.

WASHINGTON, June 8.—Consul Warner sends to the state department from Cologne an interesting document giving the rates of wages and general condition of the laboring classes in protection Germany. He says he has worked the report up with great care and that it contains many points that have not before been made public. The wages of a laborer, whether he works in iron or steel manufactories, coal mines, stone quarries, on buildings or railways, ranges from forty-seven to seventy cents per day, and, if he is a skilled laborer, from eighty to ninety-two cents per day. Female labor is only allowed in a limited degree, and is only paid from twenty-four to thirty cents per day. Working hours are from 6 to 6 in summer and from 7 to 7 in winter. One hour is given for dinner. Half hour for breakfast and half hour for coffee in the afternoon. The government has no power to regulate or interfere with working hours, but it takes care that certain restrictions with regard to the employment of women and children are observed. Rent is $2.85 per month on the average, or one full week's wages. Meals cost twenty-four cents per day; they consist principally of potatoes. They have also peas, beans, vegetables, common pork, and black bread. Occasionally they have dried fish and beef, but more often horse flesh. The laboring classes are poorly clothed as a rule.

Cleveland's Good Record.

Out of 2,100 nominations which the president has sent to the senate, 1,700 have been confirmed and only thirteen rejected. We don't believe that Brother Blaine would have been as lucky as that if he had been elected. Mr. Cleveland has made a good record, and the fact that so few of his appointments have failed to secure the approval of the senate shows that the charges of the republican press that many of his nominations have been of the most disgraceful character, are utterly unfounded. Some of those rejected were men who personally are known to be elegant gentlemen and patriotic citizens. They were opposed by the republican majority solely on political grounds.—Lansing Journal.

"The President and his bride are the happiest of mortals; there are only thirty newspaper correspondents on hand to mar the love-making," telegraphed a correspondent on Monday last from Deer Park, Md.:

The President enjoys a smoke after every meal, and generally paces up and down in front of the porch while he puffs his fragrant Havanas. After dinner yesterday he came out to the cottage door with his wife beside him. He drew his cigar-case from his pocket and after glancing in it said something to his wife, and she hastened inside, returning a moment later with a cigar. She playfully placed the weed between his lips, and then, selecting a match from his match-case, lit his cigar for him, and they both laughed merrily over some remark he made. There are many of the lovers' secrets that the newspaper men fail to find out. An old mountaineer tells a charming little story of the honeymoon. He was loitering in the woods near the trout stream over which the rustic bridge mentioned above crosses. "I did not mean to watch them," said he, blushingly, in relating the incident, "but suspecting that the big man was the President, who I had heard was here on his bridal journey, I had a sort of curiosity to see his wife. They were standing on the little bridge. She accidentally dropped her handkerchief in the stream. The President quickly crossed to the other side of the bridge, as the little bit of lace swept under it, and, reaching down with the hooked handle of his bamboo cane, brought up the handkerchief. His wife took the dripping handkerchief, and as she pressed the water out of it she looked up with a smile in the President's face and he bent down and kissed her tenderly.

"That's all there was of it," said the gruff old countryman, "and I likes the President for it. His wife is the purtiest little lady in the land."

The second reading of Mr. Glad-stone's home rule bill was defeated in the British Commons on the 7th inst., by a vote of 341 to 311. This is a larger majority against the measure than was anticipated either by the Tories or the Liberal and Whig dissentients. The fate of home rule, for the present at least, will be decided by the British and the Irish people at the polls. New elections will be ordered within the next six weeks. In the meantime a political campaign exceeding in intensity and passion any that has ever occurred in the British Islands since the reform campaign of 1832 will be entered on. On one side will be arrayed all the power of caste and privilege, all the influence begotten of religious hate and race prejudice; on the other the liberalized democracy of Great Britain and Ireland, led by the most eloquent of living men. It will be a tremendous struggle.

Mr. Gladstone was loudly cheered in the House of Commons (says a London dispatch) on rising to announce the speedy dissolution of the house, and was cheered again at the close of his statement. MR. BECK'S bill to prohibit members of Congress from accepting retainers from subsidized railroads passed the Senate, on the 10th inst., by a vote of 31 to 11, but Mr. Hawley secured a reconsideration of the matter. On motion of Senator Allison, the Senate passed a bill appropriating $50,000 as an additional sum to complete the Des Moines (Iowa) public building. Vernon, O.; Samuel S. Clayton, Ada, O.; C. A. Gallagher, Cheboygan, Mich.; Prior B. Mayo, North Springfield, Mo. The report of the House Judiciary Committee on the Edmunds anti-polygamy bill was presented to the House. The committee expresses its dissent from the twelfth section of the Senate bill, the effect of which would be that the conduct of the corporate "Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints" would be controlled by trustees of the church in conjunction with trustees appointed by the President. This union of trustees of the church and those of the government could not be distinguished from a union of the church and state and a law respecting the establishment of religion. Nor could it be other than a limitation on the free exercise of religion where a majority who control in matters of faith and discipline are appointed by the President. The committee recommends a revocation of the charter and a dissolution of the corporation as in the line of public policy, if it can constitutionally be done.

CONGRESSIONAL.

The Work of the Senate and House of Representatives.

THE report of the Committee on Indian Affairs on its investigation of the condition of the Indians in the Indian Territory and other reservations was submitted in the Senate on the 4th inst. Touching the claims of the Creeks and Seminoles in Oklahoma, and the pretenses of a right of entry upon these lands by bands of colonists, the committee unite in the conclusion that the United States has no right to dispose of the ownership of the soil in that ceded tract without further agreement with those tribes, except for the purpose of settling other friendly Indians upon those lands. The Senate passed the Chinese indemnity bill, appropriating $150,000 to cover damages inflicted by rioters at Rock Springs Wyoming. Senator Chilcom submitted the Hennepin canal bill as an amendment to the river and harbor appropriation bill. In the House of Representatives Mr. Wheeler, of Alabama, made a bitter attack upon Mr. Stanton for his action when Secretary of War, which excited some comment. The Secretary of War sent a communication to the House recommending that $50,000 of the amount appropriated by the act of March 3, 1883, for the armament of fortifications, be reappropriated, and made available for the construction of guns.

THE Ingalls resolution calling upon the Secretary of the Interior for the authority for the issuance by the Land Commissioner of an order suspending the receipt of applications for public lands under certain acts, passed the Senate on the 5th inst. The private pension bills rushed through numbered 220. The oleomargarine bill being brought to the Senate from the House the question of its reference was postponed and the bill was allowed to lie on the table to await the return of Mr. Miller, Chairman of the Committee on Agriculture. Mr. Beck gave notice that he would insist on its reference to the Committee on Finance. Mr. Blair reported favorably from the Committee on Labor an amendment to the sundry civil bill, proposing an appropriation of 100,000 Bland dollars to aid in the establishment of a school in Utah under the direction of the Industrial Home Association of Utah. The object of the amendment is stated to be to aid in the suppression of polygamy. The House of Representatives passed bills appropriating $100,000 each for public buildings at Sioux City and Zanesville. During a debate over the Union Pacific bond-extension bill an exciting controversy took place between Mr. Holman (Indiana) and Mr. Crisp (Georgia). Mr. Holman insinuated that the Pacific Railroad Committee was unduly influenced in favor of the corporation, and Mr. Crisp's indignant denial and recriminations caused considerable of a sensation. On motion of Mr. Holman an amendment was adopted increasing from forty to fifty per cent. the amount of the net earnings to be paid into the sinking fund in case the companies refused to accept the provisions of the act.

The Senate, in executive session, confirmed the nomination of A. P. Swineford to be Governor of Alaska. In the House of Representatives bills were introduced to establish a military fort near Denver; to grant a pension of $100 a month to the widow of General Durbin Ward; to prohibit the employment of convict or alien labor on public works; to erect a monument in Brooklyn to the victims of prison-ships, and to prohibit the obstruction of interstate railroad business. Judge Payson's bill repealing the pre-emption, desert land, and timber laws, and amending the commutation provision of the homestead law, was passed by a vote of 183 to 40. A resolution was presented for an inquiry into the Pension Department, and to report upon the propriety of continuing the excessive expenditures under the present system. Mr. Crisp, of Georgia, apologized for a "warmth of expression" in the House in regard to Mr. Holman, of Indiana. The apology was accepted.

A BILL appropriating $150,000 for the erection of a branch home for disabled volunteer soldiers west of the Rocky Mountains was passed by the Senate on the 8th. A bill was passed providing for a commission of three persons, to be appointed by the President, to investigate the truth of alleged discoveries of the specific cause of yellow fever. In the House of Representatives, in moving to expunge from the Record a speech by Mr. Wheeler, of Alabama, Mr. Kelley, of Pennsylvania, read a private letter written in the spring of 1862 by Secretary Stanton, frankly defining his attitude toward General McClellan. The resolution offered by Mr. Kelley was referred to the Committee on Rules. An effort in the House to get unanimous consent to report the amended Senate anti-polygamy bill was defeated by the objection of Caine, the Mormon delegate from Utah. The incident served to show the watchfulness of the Mormon lobby and its determination to throw every obstruction in the way of adverse legislation. The House spent some hours in committee of the whole (Mr. Blount, of Georgia, in the chair) on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

A MEASURE was favorably reported to the Senate, on the 9th inst., prohibiting the transmission of lottery circulars through the mails. Bills were reported favorably appropriating the following-named sums for public buildings: Duluth, Minn., $100,000; El Paso, Texas, $150,000; for repairs and enlargement of the public building at Des Moines, Iowa, $150,000; increasing the limit of cost of the public building at Peoria, Ill., from $225,000 to $275,000, and making an additional appropriation of $25,000 for the public building at Keokuk, Iowa. Bills were passed, providing for a portrait of Gen. George H. Thomas; to establish two additional land districts in Dakota; to legalize the incorporation of trades unions; referring to the Court of Claims for examination and report to Congress certain claims for property seized by General Albert Sydney Johnston in the Utah expedition of 1857. The oleomargarine bill was considered by the Senate. Senator Butler read a telegram from the Mayor and a large number of citizens of Spartanburg, S. C., urging the Senators from that State to use their influence in defeating the oleomargarine bill, which the signers declare the worst form of protection. "Let people buy oleomargarine," they say, "as they would any other article of food." In the House of Representatives, while the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill was under consideration, Mr. Hitt, of Illinois, commented on what he termed the extraordinary provision that requiring the certification of the entire list of applicants from each State who passed the examination) which had been forced upon an appropriation bill to nullify the civil-service law. Mr. Cox, of North Carolina, Chairman of the Committee on Civil-Service Reform, Mr. Compton and Mr. Shaw, of Maryland, boldly attacked the law without any disguise, while Mr. Springer, Mr. McAdoo, and Mr. Randall advocated the modifications proposed by the Appropriation Committee. Mr Hitt, of Illinois, Mr. Butterworth, of Ohio, and Mr. Bayne, of Pennsylvania, Republicans argued in favor of the principle of civil-service reform, Mr. Hitt charged the Appropriation Committee with having gone out of its province to insidiously attack civil-service reform. Mr. Randall declared that the regulations enacted had cheated the representatives of the people out of rights which they should have stood up and defended in behalf of their constituents.

The Same Old Crowd.

An old New York gentleman, meet-ing his grandson, said to him in an impressive tone of voice:

"My dear boy, I hear some very discouraging reports about you. They say that you go behind the scenes, and toy with the actresses. Is that so?"

"Yes, uncle; to a certain extent."

"Drop them, my boy. I've been there when I was at your age, a century ago. They are a bad lot."

"But, uncle, actresses of to-day are very different from what they were when you were a boy."

"Not much. They are the same identical actresses."—Texas Siftings.

BLOODSHED IN IRELAND.

Hotels Sacked and Burned—Rioters and Policemen Shot Down—Nine People Killed.

[Belfast (Ireland) dispatch.]

A mob of Orangemen made an attack upon a tavern kept by a man named Duffy. The police were promptly on the scene, and after a stubborn contest, during which they used their carbines, drove the mob away in disorder. The rioters reassembled with increased strength and again attacked Duffy's, this time overpowering the police and driving them from the place. In the first assault Chief of Police Carr was wounded. He was carried away and now lies in a critical condition. When the Orangemen returned to the fight they were accompanied by a large number of factory girls, who goaded or shamed the men on to battle and formed a most dangerous element.

When the officers abandoned Duffy's the mob at once took complete possession of the tavern and it was thoroughly sacked. All the taps and spiggots were set running, and everybody was invited to help himself according to his taste. All the barrels of liquor found in stock were carried into the street, lifted up high and let fall until they broke and liberated their contents. All the furniture was carried out, piled in the center of the roadway, and burned in a bonfire to furnish the rioters light during their debauch. Men, youths, and girls drank until they fell helpless in the gutters, the girls acting with greater fury during the earlier stages of the orgy than the men. The noise, the profanity, and the disorder were terrible.

The mob ended its work by firing the tavern itself, and it burned to the ground. Then the stronger men, who had become infuriated and overpowered by their potations, ran through the streets, wrecking and pillaging wherever they went, and increasing their following the further they proceeded. These rioters, after a while, congregated around the police station and stoned the police until they were tired. They then marched down to another tavern. The police hastened thither in advance and attempted to protect the property, but they were overpowered and driven away. The mob, left in possession, treated the tavern as they had treated Duffy's—turned on all the taps, broke the full barrels in the street, made a bonfire of the furniture, and finally set fire to the building.

The police returned, and this time got the better for a time of the mob, whose ranks were depleted by the scores who had fallen away in drunkenness, and extinguished the flames before they could gain control of the structure. But the officers were unable to drive the rioters from the locality, and they remained and dominated it until morning. During the rowdyism of the night Mr. Gladstone and Mr. Parnell were both burned in effigy, and a dummy corpse labeled "home rule" was cremated.

The rioting was renewed here this evening and the riot act was again read. The mob increased in size and began throwing stones at the police. The latter fired, killing four persons. The mob returned the fire and a brisk fusillade was kept up for twenty minutes. The mob drove a force of 150 policemen into the barracks and then attacked the buildings, firing revolvers and throwing stones at the doors and windows. The police fired, killing five persons. Several Protestant clergymen tried to disperse the mob, but their efforts were unavailing.

During the riots one hundred houses were wrecked. After sacking the hotels many Orangmen reeled through the streets shouting "To h—l with the Pope!" Twenty-five policemen were hurt.

Two men named Hart and Mason were arrested for the murder of Thomas Gallagher, who was shot dead during the rioting at Lurgan. Gallagher was a well-known local simpleton. He waved an Orange sash in the face of a home-rule mob during an incessant fire between that mob and its Orange enemies. During the riot the situation at one time became so desperate that Mr. Mathers, a local Orange leader, publicly declared that unless the authorities did their duty he and a thousand armed Orangemen would take charge of the town. Mathers was on the point of carrying out his threat when the military appeared.

An infernal machine, consisting of a jar filled with a black substance and some clock-work, was thrown last night against the door of a Protestant house in Lurgan and exploded in the doorway. Arthur and Andrew Donnelly, leading Catholic merchants, have been arrested at Lurgan on the charge of firing from their windows. A mob wanted to lynch the prisoners and stoned the police. It was finally dispersed at the point of the bayonet.

DROWNED HER SON.

A Vermont Mother's Unnatural Crime.

[Stanford (Vt.) special.]

Mrs. William Sloan has for several months been extremely jealous of her husband, and the affairs of the family have been the topic of conversation among the villagers. Mr. Sloan returned from work at an early hour last evening. His four-year-old boy, who always met him at the door, failed to do so. On going into the house he inquired for his son, and his wife said she had sent the boy on an errand. His long delay resulted in a general search for the child, whose lifeless body was found in a ditch. The body was removed to the house and laid at the feet of Mrs. Sloan. She did not show any signs of emotion or surprise, and merely said it served her husband right to inflict such a punishment on him. The cool way in which she took the matter, and the fact that she had refused to join in the search, led the neighbors to believe that she had committed the murder. A constable took her in custody and shortly after being locked up she confessed having drowned the child. Her only reason for doing so was, as she said, to spite her husband. The shock has made Mr. Sloan insane.

AN AWFUL DEATH.

Eight Innocent Victims of a Man's Desperate Revenge Perish in the Flames.

Oil Poured Over Clothing and the Floor and Then Fired by the Villain.

Fritz Schleier, a watchman at Schoenhofen's brewery, near the corner of Canal and Eighteenth streets, observed flames issuing from the basement of the two-story frame building Nos. 731 and 733 South Canal street about 3 o'clock yesterday morning. Schleier's first attempt to give an alarm was a failure, owing to his not understanding the working of the box, and when he saw that no apparatus responded he telephoned to the Twelfth-Street Station, from which point the fire department was notified.

When the department arrived the two buildings were enveloped in flames. The work of subduing the fire was brief. Engine No. 25 first reached the scene. Capt. Schimmels placed his men, and himself hurried to the rear where he elevated a ladder and raised the windows. As the smoke lifted he beheld a terrible sight. Huddled together in one room whither they had rushed in their race for life lay eight human beings. Capt. Schimmels' men conveyed them to the sidewalk as rapidly as possible, where they were identified as follows:

Michael Murphy, aged 45, an employe of the South Division Railway Company.

Mrs. Annie Murphy, wife of Michael, aged 40.

Nellie Murphy, aged 12.

Annie Murphy, aged 10.

Aggie Murphy, aged 1.

Mrs. Mary Durkin, aged 28.

Patsy Lavin, aged 4, a son of Mrs. Durkin.

The firemen came very near missing the only survivor of the terrible experience on that floor, the tiny 3-weeks-old child of Mrs. Durkin. A heavy shawl, it seems, kept out the heat and smoke and saved its life. The child is doing well at the County Hospital.

Exploring the ruins further the firemen discovered the body of William Hahn, a butcher, aged 65, in a bedroom in the rear of the second story at No. 731. The old man lived there with his son William. The latter saved his wife and children and jumped from the front window to the street. He aroused his father, and thought he might make his way out alone, but, being so feeble, the old man succumbed.

John Rawleigh, who occupied the ground floor of No. 733, stated yesterday that this was the third time within a year the premises had been fired. He reverts to the arrest of a man named Savage for burglary a year ago, in which Mr. Rawleigh and his father, the owner of No. 733, assisted. The friends of the prisoner, who received five years in the penitentiary, it is said, swore revenge against the Rawleighs, and two days after the arrest the premises were on fire. Nine days later the building was again fired. Each time rags saturated with oil were found in the basement.

Rawleigh and the watchman say that the flames seemed to break out simultaneously from several parts of the building.

THE PREMIER DEFEATED.

The Home-Rule Bill Fails to Pass a Second Reading—The Victory of the Opposition Won by a Vote of 341 to 311.

[London cablegram.]

The Government was defeated by a majority of thirty on the second reading of the home-rule bill. The vote on the bill was 311 for the measure and 341 against it. Mr. Gladstone moved an adjournment until Thursday and the motion was adopted.

Mr. Gladstone entered the House of Commons at 4:55 o'clock this afternoon (7th) and proceeded straight to his seat. When his presence was noted he was greeted with tremendous cheering. The Premier wore a white rose in his lapel. The House of Commons was crowded to its utmost capacity at the hour of opening the session. The Opposition loudly cheered John Bright and Lord Hartington as they entered and took their places. The Parnellites were all in good voice, and they gave Mr. Gladstone an enthusiastic welcome.

The excitement during division had no parallel in the history of the House of Commons. Lord Randolph Churchill first discovered the Government was defeated, and by waving his hat and indulging in other joyful demonstrations aroused the enthusiasm of members of the Opposition, who, rising, waved their hats and cheered again and again. When the figures were announced the noise was deafening. Parnellites challenged the vote. O'Connor called for cheers for the Grand Old Man, which were given with gusto by the Government supporters. Sir William Harcourt and his companions rose and bowed to Gladstone, who was somewhat embarrassed. The Parnellites called for groans for Chamberlain, which were given with shouts of "Traitor!" and "Judas Iscariot!" Chamberlain merely laughed. When order was restored Gladstone rose, white and trembling, and moved to adjourn until Thursday. Healey and O'Connor again challenged the vote, saying they would not offer any opposition, but wished to express their repugnance of the conduct of many members of Gladstone's party. During the hubbub Gladstone, wearing a haggard look, left the House cheered by his opponents.

THROUGH A BRIDGE.

Six Persons Killed and Many Injured by a Railway Accident in South Carolina.

A north-bound passenger train on the Northeastern Railroad plunged through the Santee River trestle, midway between St. Stephen's Station and Santee River bridge, smashing up the coaches and killing six passengers. The killed are: John L. Cole, Dr. G. C. Kinloch, William Inglesby, Miss McIver, of Charleston; Miss C. E. McWhite, of Marion; Miss Hannah Wilson, residence unknown.

Conductor B. G. Mazyck and Mail Agent F. W. Remmeker were badly injured. The cause of the accident is not yet known, but it is supposed to have resulted from the insecure fastenings of a rail on a changing gauge.

THE LATE DR. DIO LEWIS.

Dr. Dio Lewis, the Well-Known Hygienic Reformer and Author, Died Not Long Ago at His Home in Yonkers, N.Y.

In February he was thrown from his horse, receiving a slight wound on the left leg, and some weeks afterward unusual fatigue in walking was followed by erysipelatous inflammation of the wounded leg. A serious phlegmonous erysipelas in a few days implicated the entire limb, and finally extended to the body and caused death.

Dr. Lewis was born in Auburn, N. Y., March 3, 1823. He studied medicine at Harvard College, and practiced in Port Byron, removing thence to Buffalo. He traveled and lectured for a number of years on physiology and hygiene, until he settled in Boston, and there developed his system of exercise for schools and homes, teaching that the body should be trained as well as the mind to insure the perfect development of the human being. He opened a school for young ladies at Lexington, Mass., where he could embody his ideas of physical training, and he had great success, the school numbering some one hundred and sixty pupils, many of them broken-down invalids from other institutions. The building was burned in 1867. Since then he has devoted himself to lecturing and writing on health subjects. He was the originator of the Woman's Temperance Crusade in Ohio. He spent his last few years in New York and vicinity and removed to Yonkers in September last.

For the two years preceding his death he published in New York Dio Lewis' Nuggets, a bi-monthly. His published works on his favorite topic of hygienic education include "New Gymnastics," "Weak Lungs, and How to Make Them Strong," "Talks About People's Stomachs," and "Our Girls." For several years his Dio Lewis Monthly has published in brief form the matter that afterward was issued in volume. His last work, "The Dio Lewis Treasury," is now in press.

Judge Payson's Land Bill.

Judge Payson's land bill, passed by the House of Representatives, repealing the pre-emption, desert-land, and timber-culture laws and amending the commutation provision of the homestead law, after providing for the repeal of the pre-emption law allows bona fide claims to be perfected, and also permits a second homestead entry in lieu of the pre-emption privilege to any person who has not had the benefit of pre-emption and who has failed from any cause, except by sale or disposal of his right thereto to perfect title to a tract of land heretofore entered by him. The second section, in repealing the timber-culture act, makes provision for perfecting bona-fide claims lawfully initiated before the passage of the act. Section 3 amends the homestead act by allowing the minimum price for the quantity of land entered to be paid at any time after the expiration of thirty calendar months from the date of entry, the proof of actual settlement to be filed six months prior to the application for patent. Section 4, in repealing the desert-land act, makes the usual reservation for completing lawfully entered claims. The fifth section withdraws from public sale and private entry all lands except isolated and disconnected fractional parts, mineral lands, and others of a local nature. Section 6 preserves the right to transfer portions of the settler's entry under homestead or pre-emption for church, cemetery, or school purposes, or right of way for railroads. Judge Payson says the repeal will not affect the right of soldiers to the public lands in any way. Their right is under the homestead law, which is simply amended so as to increase the time of commutation to thirty months.

Ex-President Arthur.

[New York special.]

There has been a turn in the condition of ex-President Arthur. The steady gain that is said to have been going on for the last month has stopped, and it is said on good authority that he has taken a considerable step backward, and that there are grave doubts as to his ever getting well. The nature of his disease gives rise to many conflicting symptoms. It is well known that in similar cases, where the patient has appeared to be on the road to recovery, very suddenly appeared a dangerous and perhaps fatal relapse. While it is not true that the relapse has come in the General's case, he has of late been getting weaker, and his vital force has been greatly lessened by the return of the attacks of insomnia which were so troublesome in the early part of his sickness. A friend who saw him recently was much struck by the physical depression that seemed to involve the entire muscular system, and every movement of the body was languid, and, to a certain extent, uncertain. That the General's family are somewhat alarmed is shown in the close and continuous watch that is kept over him; but, while the danger of a relapse is ever before them, a hopeful view is taken of the case, and however active or serious the symptoms may become, there is no indication given of discouragement.

BASE-BALL.

An Interesting Race for the League Pennant, with Detroit Still in the Lead.

The base-ball race for the League pennant is assuming an interesting phase. The Detroit team, at the close of the fifth week of the season's play, still held the lead, closely pressed by the Chicago Club. The New Yorks have tightened their grip on third place and bid fair to hold it. The Philadelphias have fourth place. The St. Louis team has fifth place, and are liable to give the Phillies a race yet. The Bostons are sixth in line, with the two young clubs at the bottom of the list. It is too early to talk about the championship yet, but if the Chicagos cannot keep it there is no one club Chicago people would rather see win it than Detroit.

Conclusive evidence of the interest taken in the race lies in the number and character of the responses received by A. G. Spalding & Bros. to their offer of a cash prize of $100 to any one who could name the clubs in consecutive order as they would stand at the finish of the race, and no less remarkable are the guesses that have been made. Up to the 7th inst., when the time for filing guesses closed, there had been 6,287 postal cards and letters received, in which the writers had aspired to become prophets. Of these, 3,221 placed Chicago first, 1,027 give Detroit first, 1,405 give New York the honor, 511 place Philadelphia first, 109 put St. Louis there, and the balance were 8 for Kansas City, 5 for Boston, and 1 for Washington.

DIAMOND DUST.

IT costs Yale College $5,000 a year for base-ball.

DETROIT thinks that the "big four" was a wise investment.

THOMPSON, of the Detroits, is the tallest man in the League.

IT is feared that Ewing's injuries will permanently cripple him.

CHADWICK, of the Clipper, does not think New York will win the pennant.

SHAW, of the Washington Club, is not making the showing expected of him.

DAN BROUTHERS, of the Detroits, has failed in but two games so far this season to make a base-hit.

THE Sporting Journal says that as soon as Kelly, of the Chicago Club, reaches first base he becomes a kleptomaniac.

MCCORMICK is doing great work for the Chicagos this year. He has pitched in nine games and won every one of them.

THE Philadelphias traveled 1,500 miles to play at Kansas City and did not receive a cent. Rainy weather was the cause.

SIX games in Detroit drew 17,000 people. The same games in Philadelphia would have drawn 50,000.—Philadelphia Times.

CAPTAIN ANSON, of the Chicagos, has failed to make a base-hit in only three games this season, and he has played twenty-seven.

BUFFINTON, of the Bostons, seems to be a back number. In the six games he has pitched he has landed the Bostons victorious only once.

GAFFNEY is reported to be the author of the statement that when umpires write letters to each other they address each other as "Fellow Target."

THE League championship since 1876 has been won as follows: Boston, 1877, 1878, 1883; Chicago, 1876, 1880, 1881, 1882, 1885; Providence, 1879, 1884.

PRESIDENT YOUNG has instructed League umpires that when the second ball is knocked out of the grounds before the first could be returned a new ball must be used.

THE Detroits refused a band and military escort when they left home, because they thought it might prove a Jonah, and begged to be allowed to depart as quietly as possible.

CASEY and Dailey, of Philadelphia, are doing well, while the wonderful Ferguson is doing badly, no less than twenty-one earned runs having been made off him in nine games.

THE lowest per cent. of opponents' base hits made in the League last year was made off Welch within an even .200, Keefe and Baldwin being next with .201, and Clarkson close after with .207.

LAST year there were eleven League players with a batting average of .300 or better, Connor leading with .371, Brouthers second with .358. The remaining nine were, in the order named, Dorgan, Richardson, Gore, Sutton, Anson, Ferguson, Ewing, Thompson, and Hanlon. O'Rourke failed to get in the .300 list by one notch. So far this season there are just eleven batters with .300 or better, and O'Rouke leads them all. He has made 40 hits, with an average of .377, Brouthers being second with 42 hits and an average of .358. Thompson is third, with .336; Connor fourth, with .333; Richardson, of Detroit, fifth, with .321; Anson sixth, with .317, Denny seventh, with .309; Morrill eighth, with .303; Mulvey ninth, with .301; and Ward and Dunlap tenth and eleventh, with .300 each. Detroit has three of these big batters, New York three, St. Louis two, and Chicago, Boston, and Philadelphia one each.

Anson	.317	Williamson	.234
Sunday	.290	McCormick	.216
Gyan	.285	Gore	.215
Kelly	.277	Flynt	.195
Pfeffer	.267	Mosllc	.187
Dalrymple	.250	Clarkson	.170

The Live-stock Sanitary Commission has complained that the roads are violating the law.

—The experience of a Detroit family Wednesday in the use of gasoline for the purpose of destroying moths should re-enforce the frequent warnings that have been afforded in the same fashion before. Benzine or gasoline will destroy moths; there is little doubt about that; but pour over furniture, with a fire in reach of it, it will destroy moths very much as the Chinese first learned to roast pig, by shutting a pig up in the parlor and then burning the house down.—Free Press.

—At Davison's ship-yard at Bay City is being built a vessel which will be the largest that has ever been put afloat on the great inland seas of this continent. Her capacity is 3,500 tons, and she will carry 700,000 feet of saw-logs or 2,500,000 feet of lumber, sufficient to load an ordinary tow of vessels. She will carry as much lumber as six ordinary lumber barges. She is 275 feet long, 51 feet beam, and 12 feet depth of hold.—Detroit Tribune.

—In 1882 a poor old colored woman left her boy 8 years of age on a farm near Woodstock, Ont., and went to Detroit to earn a living. Every month she sent $5 for the support of the little fellow. Two years ago the woman who cared for the boy sickened and died, and her son took him in charge, and abused and starved him. The boy ran away a few months ago and went to Detroit, where he lived a vagabond life till picked up by the police. Superintendent Stocking, of the Newsboys' Home, advertised for a home for the boy, and who should answer it but his own mother. It was a most affecting meeting, both mother and son weeping for joy.

—Thomas W. Ferry, ex-United States Senator from Michigan, and ex-acting Vice President of the United States, has returned to his home in Grand Haven. Broken in health and fortune, for three years he has been wandering in foreign lands, but he returns home apparently in good health. During his absence he has traversed Great Britain, Norway, Sweden, Russia, France, Belgium, Italy, Germany, Greece, Turkey, Palestine, and Egypt, has hobnobbed with the Sultan, Kaiser Wilhelm, and Gladstone, been shown around Berlin by Minister Pendleton, traveled up the Nile with Minister Cox, rode on camels and dromedaries, visited Jerusalem, and swam the river Jordan. Altogether, the ex-Senator appears to have had rather a lively time during his "exile." He refuses to discuss politics or his financial affairs.

—A wholesale dealer in hats, doing business in New York, has this to say about a long time popular head-gear: "The real Mackinaw straw is grown in Michigan by the Mackinaw Indians and some half-breeds, but the production is inconsiderable, and it is so expensive it has gradually dropped out of general trade. A hat made of Mackinaw can not possibly be sold for less than $5, and the finest will cost you $6, every time. You are evidently surprised and are going to tell me that your last year's Mackinaw only cost you three dollars at retail! Well, so it did; but it was, nevertheless, made out of Japan straw, which is imported here in plaited bundles. The wholesale and retail dealers call this straw 'Japan Mackinaw,' to answer trade requirements. The Japan straw is a good article, but, unlike the Mackinaw we used to boast, it will not retain its color. In all New York there are only three hat firms which manufacture hats from the genuine Mackinaw. These, of course, are three fashionable high-priced dealers, and they will tell you that they make very few of them. These hats are so expensive that people will not buy them, and the trade is becoming less and less each year. The Japan goods owe their prominence to the fact that they can be imported and plaited at a cost less than that of the Mackinaw or any other kind of goods which are plaited in this country."

THE JOURNAL.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

In Bartow, Fla., recently, four lives were sacrified in one day to the God of Rum. Two young men under the influence of liquor were making more noise on the street than the police thought good for the place, and in an attempt to stop the brawl two policemen were shot down, one of them instantly killed. The young men fled, but were followed and caught by the sheriff and citizens. The sheriff succeeded in getting them into the jail, but soon after dark between 200 and 300 citizens armed themselves with guns, went to the jail, disarmed the jailer, and dragged out the two murderers and hung them to the nearest tree. The lynchers were the leading men of the town, who did not propose to let public sentiment change while waiting for justice through the slow process of law, and perhaps release the murderers on some technicality.

The Detroit Journal "interviewer" recently met W. B. Wilson, of Muskegon, member of the democratic state central committee for the ninth district, and he gives the following concerning L. G. Mason's chances for congress: "Politically, there isn't much talked of in our vicinity but congressman, and our choice is emphatically and unanimously L. G. Mason. Mr. Mason is a democrat, an honest man, and is possessed of ability that would make itself felt in congress. He has a perfect conception of what the people want, and he has the confidence of the people. If the ninth district shall nominate Mr. Mason, who, by the by, is our present mayor. Gen. Cutcheon, elected two years ago by about 2,700 majority, will be given an opportunity to stay at home and attend to his legal business."

The greenback state central committee have named Aug. 17 and 18 the date, and Grand Rapids the place for holding the next convention for nominating state officers.

King Gold.

In an able article on the depression in commercial enterprise, and the consequent downward tendency of prices and wages, the New York Sun says:

What, we may be asked, is the cause of this universal calamity? We answer that, in our judgment, it has but one supreme cause, and this is the adherence of the world to the gold standard of money. The amount of gold produced is constantly diminishing, and its value as money is in consequence continually increasing. There is not enough of it to keep prices steady, and hence the enterprise of the world is everywhere stagnant; and the greatest sufferers from the effects of this situation must be the laborers, whose numbers are continually increasing while the demand for their work is not increasing, but the contrary.

Truer words than these have not been penned by any writer on the causes of the present industrial situation. In the briefest possible language the Sun has told the whole story of the trouble with the business and brawn of the country. It is King Gold that is reducing the peoples of the world to hopeless poverty and want.

The young farmers who ran into debt in prosperous times a few years ago for their 40 or 60 acres are to-day trying to pay for their land in money which is worth nearly 35 per cent more than it was when the mortgages which are plastered over their little homes were placed on record. Labor cannot stand such a crushing load, and it is fast going to the wall.—Lansing Journal.

President-Making by Congress.

Secretary Manning's letter of resignation and President Cleveland's response thereto should sting congress to action such as their more elaborate utterances in annual report and messages have thus far failed to elicit. From his sick-chamber the secretary again warns congress and his party that the burdened industries of the country "are plunging heavily along a miry road to foreseen disaster," under the operation of currency and tariff laws the vices of which they have been in vain besought to reform. A few lines of repealing and empowering legislation are all that congress is asked to do, in order to secure "a better currency than elsewhere exists. Instead of extravagant or prohibitory duties upon more than a thousand articles which pile up a surplus in the treasury, to invite such measures as the free-education scheme and omnibus pension bills, "all our needful customs revenue might be collected by strictly revenue duties upon a few score articles."

For answer the senate passed over two hundred more private pension bills on Saturday, while these sentences were still ringing in its ears. And the house, only twenty four hours before enacted a measure for a tax of 25 per cent ad valorem upon one article for the benefit of another, besides imposing a special tax upon all concerned in its manufacture or sale.

The tone of the president's response, however, leaves no room to doubt what the fate of these and kindred vicious measures will be when they reach his desk. Neither Senator Blair's pension bill nor Representive Hatch's oleomargarine bill has any more chance of the executive approval than the flood of private measures the first waves of which have already been repelled by his sturdy common sense and steadfast integrity.

Both parties in the XLIXth congress are vying with each other in affording Mr. Cleveland opportunity to make a record for the approval of the country. He could ask no better foil to throw his own actions into bold and shining relief. They are, both republican and democrat, doing what in them lies to make him the next democratic nominee, and most likely his own successor. What will become of them is of less importance.—Chicago News.

NOTES AND NEWS.

Should L. G. Mason, of Muskegon, be the democratic and greeback candidate for congress in the ninth district Hon. Byron M. Cutcheon will not find his re-election a walk a-way by any means.—Traverse Eagle.

The Detroit Journal shows its ignorance when it asserts that Michigan democrats are wedded to a single gold standard for money. The Herald knows not the first democratic paper in the state favoring the single standard. On the contrary the democratic press are pratically a unit for gold, silver and paper currency, of equal value.—Big Rapids Herald.

The Flint Journal, edited by an old veteran and stalwart republican, says Uncle Joshua Begole could beat R. A. Alger out of his boots in a race for the governorship, on their merits, neither to have a boodle. Uncle Joshua is just begining to be appreciated. The day is coming when he will stand very near the head of Michigan's governors.—Cheboygan Democrat.

It is probable that there will be fusion between the democrats and greenback party in this state, and we shall see some long faces on the part of republicans as they look at the prospects before them. There seems to be an inevitable muddle in that party this year and between the county and city syndicates there is little harmony.—St. Johns Independent.

In many places the friends of law and order are claiming that, where a man swears he is worth a certain amount, making him thereby a sufficient surety on a liquor seller's bond, he should be put on the tax roll as being worth the amount stated under oath. Such should be the practice everywhere. If the man is not worth the amount sworn to, then he should be punished for swearing to a barefaced lie.—Ex.

Cure for Piles.

Piles are frequently preceded by a sense of weight in the back, loins and lower part of the abdomen, causing the patient to suppose he has some affection of the kidneys or neighboring organs. At times, symptoms of indigestion are present, flatulency, dizziness of the stomach, etc. A moisture, like perspiration, producing a very disagreeable itching, after getting warm, is a common attendant. Blind, Bleeding and Itching Piles yield at once to the application of Dr. Bosanko's Pile Remedy, which acts directly upon the parts affected, absorbing the Tumors, allaying the intense itching, and effecting a permanent cure. Price 50 cents. Sold by Geo. W. Crouter. 152

Only 35 Cents.

So confident are we that Dr. Pelo's 35 cent Cough Cure will not disappoint the most sanguine expectation of a single broken-down consumptive invalid, that we warrant it. Had we not the most perfect confidence in its virtues, we would not think of offering it as we do. Sold by Perry Weed and Dr. G. W. Crouter.

C. F. Gates and H. N. Blatchford, of Chicago, will arrive at the Chicago resort on Saturday of this week, to prepare for summer business and pleasures.

Over 100 children attended the school picnic at Boyne on Tuesday, which was postponed from the previous Saturday on account of the rain. Those who attended report a good time.

East Jordan is preparing for a big celebration on Saturday, July 3d. A. D. Cruickshank will be the orator. A fine lot of attractions are in preparation, and those who attend may be sure of a glorious day.

"The Mining Journal, of Thursday says that the little steamer Queen of the Lakes, which recently passed here on her way to Duluth for the Duluth and Superior line, was found to be unfitted for the work there, and has been resold to Bay City parties. She is now on her way down".—L'Anse Sentinel.

If the iron mines at Norwood should prove as productive as the prospectors now seem to have confidence, what will a few skeptical people think of the prospects of a railroad from Boyne Falls to Traverse City, via. Ironton, Charlevoix, Norwood, and Elk Rapids, as was mentioned in the JOURNAL some months ago?

"A couple of parties from East Jordan, Charlevoix county, were in town this week looking up the chances for starting a drug store. One was a druggist, the other a doctor. Our advice (gratis) is, don't come—at least not now. What this town wants is something to increase the volume of business, not to divide what little there is."—L'Anse Sentinel.

Miss Carrie Hilton's school closed last Friday with a picnic, which was a pleasant affair. The program consisted of music, recitations, declamations, etc., and were alike creditable to teacher and pupils. In their musical program were a duet by Miss Carrie Hilton and May Shores, and one by Nora and Cora Vandensen, which have received special commendation.

The Detroit, Mackinac & Marquette railroad "The Mackinac Short Line," issues another circular which says: We desire to call attention to an important change in our running arrangement, by which quick time is made and close connections maintained at all points. Passengers by this line are enabled to effect a great saving in distance and time as against any other route, and a consequent saving in fare and other traveling expenses. Only 18¾ hours between Detroit and Marquette, and 24½ hours between Detroit and Calumet.

The Canadian schooner Nipigon is in trouble at Chicago, she having passed through the straits from Canada without reporting at Cheboygan as required by law. Her captain claims that his boat was leaking, a heavy gale blowing and a fog shut in the harbor and he was afraid to come ashore and pushed on. His boat was seized, and the matter submitted to the secretary of the treasury. The penalty is the forfeiture of the boat and cargo, and we hope the full penalty will be meted out to the vessel's captain. It is about time to show the Canadian authorities that they will not be allowed to seize American vessels on the slightest pretext, with the knowledge that Canadian captains can bust our navigation laws all to pieces and plead the baby act every time and escape. The captain's excuse for passing Cheboygan was too thin altogether.—Cheboygan Democrat.

Children's Day Exercises.

At the Congregational church last Sunday morning, J. S. Smithson occupied the pulpit in his usual entertaining manner. It needs but the bare announcement that he will speak to fill the house with attentive listeners For the evening service a concert program was prepared, consisting of responsive readings, music, and recitations. The music was rendered by both choir and congregation, and the recitations as follows, interspersed throughout the exercises:

He Leadeth Me—Georgie Irwin.
He Goeth Before—Artie Kanagy.
The Good Shepard—Clara Eaton.
The E'en Brings a' Hame—Nettie Kelly.
That Sweet Story—May Suffield.

There was a profusion of birds and flowers in the decorations.

At the M. E. church the services of the entire day were devoted to the little folks, and the decorations were of a nature to be fully appreciated by them. The concert in the evening was held at the hour of the usual young people's meeting, and consisted of addresses, recitations, etc., interspersed with vocal and instrumental music. Chief among the exercises were the following:

Address, "Our Jubilee"—S. C. Reed.
Address of Welcome—Freddie Myers.
Recitations by Miss Helen Meech, Miss Edith Rathbone, and Miss Edna Green.
Responsive Exercises by Mrs. Parmelee's Class.
Speech—By Roy Washburn.
Childrens Day Exercises by Mrs. Meech's Class.
Recitation, "An order for picture—Winifred Lee Gale.

The Fourth.

It having been decided that we can have our new steam fire engine by July 1, for a test, our citizens have taken hold of the question of celebrating the Fourth, making as one of the attractions a public exhibition of the working qualities of the new steamer.

A meeting was held last night, committees appointed, and subscriptions taken. The program is being arranged to-day. Another meeting will be held tonight to complete the arrangements.

It is expected that Judge Rice, of Cadillac, will be the orator. Other attractions will be boat-racing, games, etc., and a torchlight procession of boats on Round lake in the evening.

Program next week.

Traverse City feels big because President Cleveland threatens to visit there this summer; Charlevoix is crowing because Sam Jones the revivalist is booked for that place; and Kalkaska—well, Kalkaska will entertain Belva Lockwood to-morrow. BUTTER AND EGGS WANTED.

THE TARNISHED MEDAL.

BY NATHAN D. URNER.

Turning old keepsakes over,
In a pensive mood one day,
I chanced on a tarnished medal
Whose plating had worn away,
Showing the brass beneath it,
Bereft of the bright disguise
Which it falsely wore when, years before,
It had formed my boyish prize.

With festival preparations
The country school was a-whirl,
And a beautiful silver medal
Was offered the boy or girl
Who the greatest number of tickets
Should among the neighbors sell;
And my striving hard for that bright reward
I yet can remember well.

Early and late on my mission
I wandered from door to door,
Oft meeting with naught but failure,
After trudging a mile or more;
But buoyed by the hope of possession,
That was ever before my eyes,
Till mine at last was the victory,
And mine the glittering prize.

My joy in my schoolmates' envy,
As I wore it before them all,
I can still with a blush remember,
But I likewise can recall
My bitter humiliation
When the medal proved, alas!
But a worthless toy of the worst alloy—
A bauble of silvered brass.

And now there comes the reflection
Of how often in latter life
Do the prizes shrink that we toil for
Through many a weary strife;
And how well it is to make certain,
Before we expend our strength,
Of the real worth of the things of earth
That we hope to attain at length.

ONE BRAVE ACT.

BY W. H. S. ATKINSON.

Steamville was just a large railroad town in the West. Deduct the shops and yards of the Grand Transcontinental and New Orleans and Idaho Railways, with their necessary adjuncts, from Steamville, and nothing remained. Indeed, at the time of which we are writing very little did remain in a business way—for a great strike was in progress.

The shop doors were closed on cold forges, silent hammers and deserted benches; the round-houses were filled with dead locomotives; no freight trains moved in or out of the yards or depots. Altogether, Steamville, for the time-being, ill deserved its name.

It is not necessary for us to inquire into the causes which led up to the strike. Whether real or imaginary, a number of the Grand Transcontinental employes declared they had grievances which must be adjusted; so the District Assembly K. of L. ordered out all the freight trainmen of the Grand Transcontinental Railway, together with several of its tributary lines. This, with all subsequent orders emanating from the District Assembly, was signed "JOHN HEADFORD, Master Workman."

General Superintendent Mansel sat alone in his private office, at Steamville headquarters. His duties had altered somewhat in the last few days. Instead of devoting his energies to bringing about the safe and speedy running of trains, he now divided his time between telegraphing the President of the road, in Chicago, and interviewing detectives. He was worried a good deal. The fact was, he wished to do the right thing by the men, and at the same time he was not the man, at this critical time, to fail the directors, who trusted him implicitly.

One man—a man he had never seen—Superintendent Mansel cordially disliked, and that was none other than John Headford, the Master Workman whose name appeared at the foot of all the District Assembly documents. It is hardly surprising, perhaps, that the Superintendent (who was a good-hearted, whole-souled man in the main) bore no great love to any labor organizations. The Knights of Labor, District Assembly 2002, with its Master Workman, he absolutely disliked. "Lot of damned scoundrelly fire-bugs and train-wreckers, those labor agitators and wire pullers," he would say; "trying to make questionable points for the workingmen, and a few dollars for themselves at the same time. There were all our boys working away and well satisfied with everything until along came these Knights of Labor with their master workmen, and secretaries, and every other kind of grand high monkey work. I'd just like to meet this fellow Headford, who is so fresh with his general orders. Nineteen to one he's a cowardly sneak, ashamed to show his face in Steamville, judging from the way he hides himself in his own town all the time. If I ever get near enough to him I'll tell him what I think of him and his loafing crew, sure as my name is Tom Mansel." At the end of which, or similar remarks, the General Superintendent would stretch himself out to the full length of his seventy-three inches.

It was 2:15 p. m. when the General Superintendent sauntered into his office and took his seat with an air of relief.

Once more No. 14, the fast express carrying the mails for the far West, had been started out of Steamville without any mishap. So far the strikers had interfered with none but freight traffic; but there was no telling when the more reckless of their number might take upon themselves to impede the progress of passenger trains. Therefore the officers always felt better as each succeeding train carrying passengers departed in safety from Steamville, where the strikers were more numerous than at any other point along the line.

The Superintendent had just lighted his cigar when a man entered the office, closing and locking the door behind him. He was a detective in the employ of the railroad company.

"Number 14 has just left, Mr. Mansel. Where is her first stop?"

"She will stop for water at Prairie Flower, fifty-five miles west of here. Why?"

"That train will be wrecked at Running Creek, which is, I understand, ten miles this side of Prairie Flower. I have just learned that a gang of men went down on a hand-car this morning with tools, to loosen all the bolts and fastenings of the trestle over the creek. I'm afraid it's too late to prevent a fearful accident."

"But there is a telegraph station two miles this side of the creek," said the Superintendent; "I will send a message and have the operator flag Number 14. There is plenty of time; she is not due to pass that telegraph cabin until 3:25. It is now just 2:25."

"It is too late, Mr. Mansel," said the detective. "The arrangement was made to cut the wires immediately after the departure of Number 14 from Steamville. But have your operator try what he can do."

The operator was instructed to call all the offices between Steamville and Prairie Flower. In a few moments he reported that he could obtain no response.

"Good God!" exclaimed the excited Superintendent; "there is only one chance to save that train, but I'll take it."

Rushing down to the yard he found the engine which had brought in Number 14 from the east. It was the only locomotive which had steam up, and the fireman was already commencing to rake out her fires.

"Hold on!" shouted the Superintendent to the fireman; "fire up, for God's sake. Do as I tell you—it's life or death—and I'll pay you five hundred dollars in cash to-night!"

To the excited Superintendent every moment seemed an hour. In six minutes they had on a full head of steam and plenty of coal aboard. Mr. Mansel backed the engine on to the main track. But a crowd of angry strikers had gathered around, and, seeing the chief official of the road with his hand on the throttle, began to think some scheme was afoot to get ahead of them. Few, if any, of their number knew of the wrecking scheme; but, having allowed the passenger train to proceed unmolested, they would permit no "extras" to move.

"Great heavens, boys!" shouted the frantic Superintendent, "we must save life. Number 14 will be wrecked if we cannot overtake her. Burn the round-house and smash every stick of property in the yard, if you will, but for God's sake let me go on!"

But the men would not listen. They thought it was a ruse to get a locomotive outside the town limits and move some freight cars from the west yard, two miles away.

They dragged Mansel and the fireman from the cab, while a number of them took possession of the locomotive and prepared to take her back to the round-house. It was useless for the Superintendent to protest or struggle; he had to give in.

But, as he thought upon the terrible loss of life which must shortly occur, he saw a quiet and unassuming man step from the crowd and board the locomotive. As he did so every other man on the engine climbed down, not one of the crowd interfering. As this man started the engine he called to Mansel, "Don't you worry about the wreck until you hear from me."

One hour passed—two hours—three hours. About sundown Number 14 came back into Steamville. She was uninjured. All the passengers and all the trainmen were safe. But upon the floor of the baggage-car, covered with a couple of overcoats, lay the dead body of the man who had saved the train.

He had got away from Steamville all right, but in passing through the west yard a dozen different pistols had been emptied into the cab of the locomotive, forced to slow somewhat to go by the many switches in safety. There was no time to stop and explain to the men. Forty miles must be made in as many minutes, so the engineer, bleeding from half a score of bullet holes, kept ahead, and was soon bounding along the track at a terrible speed. Less than a mile from the rocking trestle he signaled Number 14 and brought the train to a standstill. He just had blood and breath enough left to tell the conductor about the scheme for wrecking the train, and with a parting injunction not to blame the Knights of Labor for such mean and dastardly work, the man died.

General Superintendent Mansel was the first to view the body of the dead man after it was lifted tenderly from the baggage-car. And this was his first meeting with JOHN HEADFORD, Master Workman (for it was none other). He had said he would tell this John Headford what he thought of him the first time he saw him. But it was useless telling him anything now. If he could hear, the Superintendent would say (for Tom Mansel does not think it unmanly to acknowledge a mistake)—"Will you shake hands? You are a brave man."

John Headford's heroic death had a good deal to do with bringing about a reconciliation between the railway company and its employes.

Travelers over the Grand Transcontinental Railway may now see, at the eastern end of the new iron bridge over Running Creek, a tall marble shaft, erected by the passengers on Number 14 and the railway men of Steamville. Near the base is chiseled this inscription:

JOHN HEADFORD,

MASTER WORKMAN, K. OF L.

"Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends."

Behind the Scenes.

It is the first night of the season.

All is in readiness for an opening night's representation. The company's members answer to well-known names upon the "stock lists." They have been engaged with much care and due consideration of properly supporting the eminent and world-renowned actress who gives her name to the company.

Upon the stage, the first scene is set, every rope, every slide is in place. The carpenter has ceased his hammering and the paint-pots are at rest. There must be no waits on this first night. Faint and soft from beyond the heavy curtain may be heard the orchestra playing the opening overture. There is a subdued palpitation in the atmosphere which indicates nervous anticipation and restrained excitement. The ladies and gentlemen have patiently submitted, during the last month, to multitudinous rehearsals, eagerly availed themselves of all new "business" the efficient stage manager has suggested, and to-night it, as well as themselves, is to be put to the test, and they can not tell how they will do until it is done. The oldest veteran loses confidence.

In the dressing-rooms above the stage, on a level with the flies, all is bustle. The star's room is sacred from intrusion, but in the ladies' general room the gas jets glare and flash within their globes of wire, rouge-pots, powder-boxes, pencils, wigs, etc., litter every available spot. The "old woman" is padding one her young, slim hips; the "leading lady" is drawing in her rather matronly waist, and the "maid in waiting" is assorting some stage jewelry.

A knock at the door, and it is unceremoniously pushed ajar by the "first walking gentleman," who imparts the valuable information that if they will "put a small round dash of black just below the lower lid, at the outside corner of each eye, it will make them look as large as saucers."

It is received with disdain, and he is peremptorily ordered out, vowing he will never give them another point. A bell sounds, the curtain rises, and all is quiet around the stage as the play proceeds. Shortly upon the narrow stairs leading from the dressing-rooms, the "old man" buttonholes a young reporter and is giving him "copy."

"I have appeared in all the principal cities, supported the most noted stars," you can hear him say, his voice raising as he proceeds.

"I am letter-proof in Iago and Claude Melnotte; and"—assuming a heroic, tragical tone of voice—"if I can not play Othello better than Mr. Bustup, you may take this"—tapping his forehead lightly—"from this," at the same time throwing out his broad chest and loudly slapping himself in the region of his heart.

The reporter disappears, apparently in a state of collapse caused by the bare idea of such a possibility, no one can tell which possibility.

The play moves on, a door opens and closes above, light steps sound near the stairs. It is the "soubrette," a pretty, modest, young girl. She has had some experience in slightly abbreviated skirts, but this is her first appearance in tights. To-night she takes the part of a page.

She has made her toilet with elaborate care. There is not a wrinkle in the fine silk webbing that encases her round, straight limbs. Every ribbon is in place. The plume in her little cap waves gracefully erect.

Reaching the steps, she hesitates, then runs back, and you might hear her murmur, "How can I ever go down? The audience does not alarm me, but those people on the stage, how they will criticise me!" Presently she reappears, wrapped in the Newmarket cloak she has worn to the theater. She descends with a painful assumption of indifference.

It is some time before she must go on; she has come down early to become accustomed to it. She stands around in the flies. "How can I ever take off this cloak?" is her mental cry.

But here comes "the star," regal, dazzling, and panting with excitement. Her most trying scene is just finished. She is and again. At last she turns back for the last time. Her sharp eye catches sight of the little "soubrette." She comprehends the situation with a glance, and, holding out her hand, says:

"Ah! my dear, let me see how you look."

The bright girl takes the cue instantly. She throws off the cloak, doffs her cap, drops on one knee, and kisses that friendly hand.

The lady, raising her, exclaims:

The embarrassment is all passed. The queen has spoken. There is now no need to be afraid.

One of her smallest but most appreciative audiences has had a glimpse of the kind, generous woman hidden beneath the robes of the stage artist, the star.—Chicago Ledger.

A Flirt's Confession.

"I do not think that I ever flirted with the hope or intention of seriously winning men's hearts. It was fun to receive their attentions and to be able to lure them away from other girls, and especially was this the case when the men were married or engaged. In most instances I think they went back to their own and their own received them. Why did I do it? Well, I think the reason was this: I really liked all agreeable men and anything that looked like lack of appreciation on their part was so exceedingly distasteful to me that I straightway strove to overcome it. The young fellows just coming out came into my net as a matter of course for several years, but older men heard of me before being presented, and fought shy. I did not understand this then. I thought they disliked me, whereas it was probably caution or disapproval, and I set myself forthwith to disarm the caution and change the disappoval to liking. It was simply unpleasant to me to have anyone indifferent. I have cried time and again on my way home in the carriage, simply because some one whom I wanted to please seemed indifferent. Several times I was actually caught with tears on my cheeks by those of whom I was thinking, and I always managed to let them guess the reason of my tears. That was always effectual. It never failed to bring about the desired end, but I declare solemnly that I never did it on purpose—cried, I mean—and I never intended to be caught in tears. I suppose that most men will refuse to believe this, but it is true. I was simply at my wits' end with wretchedness, because I thought some one had taken a dislike to me."—The Hour.

Sized Him Up.

This is a story which the Rev. Dr. Rush, Secretary of the Freedmen's Aid Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, tells to the annual conference, before whom he presents the claims of his society. A young negro in the South had been converted and at once wanted to preach. His elders thought he was not fitted for the important work; but he well-nigh staggered them by relating a vision, in which he had plainly seen the letters "G. P. C.," which could mean only "Go preach Christ." A white-haired negro preacher slowly arose and told the ambitious young brother that while he had, no doubt, seen the letters in a vision, he had failed in the interpretation. They probably meant: "Go pick cotton," or "Go plant corn." This settled the matter. A preacher in the New York Conference, when the story was told a few days ago, remarked to a friend sitting near: "I wish we had men in our white conferences sharp enough to explain away as satisfactorily the arguments by which our young incompetents try to convince the committee that they have been called to preach the gospel."—New York Tribune.

"YES," said the lecturer on moral science, "there are several classes of people who do not bear prosperity, the largest of which is composed of those who never get a chance to bear it."

A MARRIED woman lasts longer than a single one, because she is husbanded.

It Is to Be.

In the history of nations, and of men, the works of the fittest seem likely to survive the longest. They may be lost sight of for a little season, but like the flowers of June they come again and prove their right to admiration and renewal.

Passing over the events in cyclopedia from the wars of Alexander to Grant, from the pyramids of Egypt to the Brooklyn bridge, and noting the drift of sentiment in art, religion and invented improvements, we are forced to conclude that, with all of the crime and suffering of the races on the globe, we know but little after all of the cruelty of war, the baseness of passion, or the utter degradation of man in the present as compared with the past.

The past was bloody, revengeful, stupid, cruel, and barbarous in war, reaching to the hand-to-hand contest for kingdoms by poison or by intrigue, while the present consents to battle only as a last extremity, and treats the vanquished with becoming regard for their humanity. The past gloried in blood and torture to men and women over religious contentions, the present grows more and more tolerant of personal belief. The past aimed at the promotion of rulers, the present would improve mankind. It mattered little in the past that whole nations were subjugated as serfs; to the present the intellect of sages is bent on humane dealings between all conditions of life.

That the fittest seem surviving in a material as well as a social sense is shown in the progress of educated nations. England, America, Germany and France, these are the progressive people of the world in thought and science; the restless invention enjoyable by the masses who govern themselves by new and original methods, and instead of saying with Alexander that we fight them, because two cannot govern the same country, we compete with them proudly and celebrate their advancement in fairs and expositions with rejoicing, because we see in them an element of profit and friendship.

There may be times when political leaders look on the misfortunes of neighboring nations with Alexander's greed of conquest, or Cæsar's desire for their gold, but it is not the sentiment of our time to foster such ambition. Men are learning to like each other for selfish reasons if for no other. And this is one of the surest elements of universal progress—a desire to create commerce by friendship. The signs of the times to-day indicate that the four great Christian nations, with several more lesser ones in influence, would cheerfully unite in a treaty of perpetual peace or an agreement to arbitrate every national difference hereafter.

With this sentiment comes a deep feeling of security, a love of home, and a desire to command commerce by deserving it. The people of the West are hurrying their grain to far-away markets in islands on foreign shores, while those of the East are taking interest in farm lands and large ranches to bring them into greater production. The people of the North and South are busy in their forges and their forests fitting and preparing the tools and timber to be used by those who, in ancient times, would have been enemies.

And what does all this argue—for the scroll seems unrolling and the marching armies and tortured prisoners and chariots falling from precipice rocks, and martyrs burning at the stake, and kings enjoying the combats of wild beasts in the arena, and rulers plotting the destruction of cities, while vast armies, fording streams, are met and murdered without truce or mercy, seem rising in the Eastern back-ground, and industries with their palace loads of grain and blooded cattle are flying back to meet them from the West—what does it mean, this startling sentiment of men? It means that a union of the good is before us. It means that the implements of modern warfare are to be forged in the friendship of nations, that the war is to be a war of commerce, its battles to be fought with skill and enterprise; that instead of destroying productions we are learning to applaud every means that will increase trade, cheapen good living, supply luxury, and benefit mankind.—*J. An Anthropological Garden.

An exhibition is projected at Berlin to show the races of men and their habits, as animals are shown in zoological gardens. In the exhibition it is intended that representatives of various races shall permanently reside, while of such as cannot stand the cold of the climate, representatives will be brought to Germany to reside during the summer. A museum of objects pertaining to the different races will be established in connection. A LIBERAL OFFER.

Five Thousand Dollars to Any Charitable Institution,

If It Cannot Be Done as It Is Stated.

Rochester, N. Y., Union and Advertiser..

Friends of ex-President Arthur are very much disquieted.

Of course he is not going to die! He is in the hands of a very particular physician.

His doctor does not call it Bright's Disease! No, it is stomach disorder that he is suffering from now, and every few hours he takes a cold, and from time to time many other symptoms are developed. Those symptoms the public should know are really secondary to Bright's Disease.

His physicians say that everything that medical skill can do for him is being done.

This is not so.

The case is a prominent one because the General is an ex-President; and yet there are thousands of farmers quietly dying, in their farm-houses, of secondary symptoms of Bright's Disease, called by every other conceivable name; thousands of workmen, likewise dying, leaving helpless families; hundreds of thousands in all walks of life who have sickened, and are likewise dying, helpless victims of powerless physicians.

Eight years ago a very well-known gentleman was about to enter upon large commercial transactions. His medical adviser quietly dropped into his office one day and told his confidential clerk that he would be dead in three months, and that he ought to settle up his business affairs at once.

That man is alive and well to-day, yet he was given up as incurable with the same disease that is killing General Arthur.

Our reporter met this gentleman yesterday, and in conversation about the General's case he said:

"I will give $5,000 to any charitable institu-"tion in the State of New York, to be designated "by the editor of the New York World, the ed-"itor of the Buffalo News, and W. E. Kissol-"burgh of the Troy Times, if Warner's safe "cure (taken according to my directions), which "cured me eight years ago, can not cure Gen-"eral Chester A. Arthur of Bright's disease, "from which he is suffering.

"Now I want you to understand," he said, "that we do not profess to make new kidneys, "but we do know from personal experience, "and from the experience of many thousands "of similar cases, that we can stop the consump-"tion of the kidneys. Many a man has gone "through life with one kidney without incon-"venience. Thousands of people have lived a "majority of their life with one lung. They "did not have a new lung made. We do not "make new kidneys, but if the kidney is not "consumed too much we can stop disease and "prolong life if taken in time."

This offer comes from H. H. Warner, proprietor of Warner's safe cure, of this city.

Mr. Warner also said: "My dear sir, there are "Governors, Senators, Presidential candidates, "members of Congress, prominent men and "women all over the country whom I personal-"ly know have been cured of disease, such as "General Arthur suffers from, by our Warner's "safe cure, but owing to the circles in which "they move they do not care to give public tes-"timonial to the fact."

Mr. Warner is interested in General Arthur's case because he is personally acquainted with him, and he says that it is a shame that any man should be allowed to die under the operation of old-fashioned, powerful cathartics, which have no curative effects, rather than that a modern, conceded specific for kidney disease, whose worth is acknowledged world-wide, should save him.

"If you doubt the efficacy of Warner's safe cure," say the proprietors, "ask your friends and neighbors about it. This is asking but little. They will tell you all you want to know."

"We have kept a standing offer before the public for four years," says Mr. Warner, "that we will give $5,000 to any person who can successfully dispute the genuineness, so far as we know, of the testimonials we publish, and none have done it."

Were General Arthur a poor man, unable to be left "in the hands of his physician," he would use that great remedy, as many thousands of others have done, and get well. How absurd, then, for people to say that everything that can be done is being done for the ex-President, when the one successful remedy in the world that has cured, or that can cure, a case like his has not been used by them.

Moved to Tears.

"John?"

"Yes, dear."

"Do you remember coming home last night and asking me to throw you an assorted lot of key-holes out of the window, so that you might find one large and steady enough to get your latch-key in?"

"Yes, dear."

"And do you remember the night before how you asked me to come down and hold the stone steps still enough for you to step on?"

"Yes, dear."

"And the night before that, how you tried to jump into the bed as it passed your corner of the room?"

"Yes, dear."

"And still another night, when you carefully explained to me that no man was intoxicated as long as he could lie down without holding on, and then attempted to go to bed on a perpendicular wall?"

"Yes, dear."

"John, do you realize that you have come home sober but two nights in the past week?"

"Have I, dear?"

"That's all, and you ought to be ashamed of yourself, too. The idea of a man of your age—— But, John, why, you're crying. There, there, dear, I didn't mean to be too severe. After all, you did come home sober two nights."

"Yes, that's what makes me feel so bad."

And then the meeting adjourned.—Chicago Rambler.

Our Worst Enemies,

Next to our vices, are our follies. Among them is the imperiling of future bodily comfort, and the average tenure of life to which persons of moderately good constitutions are presumably entitled, by imprudence in eating and drinking, and the reckless use of drugs. It is one of the happy capabilities of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters that it can repair damages thus inflicted. When the blood is thin and watery, the bowels out of order, the complexion and tongue both giving evidence of biliousness, there is a necessity for repairs upon the human tenement obvious enough to startle its possessor. A course of the Bitters, the abandonment of "drugging" for relief, and a common-sense diet and mode of life—these will speedily produce a change for the better. What quinine for fever and ague, and mercury for biliousness and constipation, won't do, the Bitters will. It also relieves rheumatism and neuralgia, and inactivity of the kidneys.

Scholastic.

Speaking of school stories, I went to school myself once, and one day when visitors were present the teacher thought he would show off the spelling and defining class. Things went on well until the word "singular" was given out. There seemed to be a diversity of opinion as to the meaning of the word, one saying it meant one thing and another another, until the teacher, by the way of throwing light upon the matter, asked:

"Now, if I should say a man was a singular man, what should I mean?" whereupon a bright boy shouted, "A man that didn't have any wife!"

A teacher asked one of her pupils the other day to give her the sum of five and six.

"'Leven," was the reply.

"You shouldn't say 'leven," she said. "Say 'eleven' always. Next boy, how many are five and seven?"

"E-twelve!" was the prompt reply.

The New Judge Charges a Jury.

He said: "Gentlemen of the jury, charging a jury is a new business to me, as this is my first case. You have heard all the evidence as well as myself; you have also heard what the learned counsel have said. If you believe what the counsel for the plaintiff has told you, your verdict will be for the plaintiff; but if, on the other hand, you believe what the defendant's counsel has told you, then you will give a verdict for the defendant. But if you are like me, and don't believe what either of them has said, then I'll be —— if I know what you will do. Constable, take charge of the jury."—Medical and Surgical Reporter.

A GLASGOW physician tells of a patient who was troubled with foul eructations, the odor of the gas coming from his stomach being disagreeable to himself and all about him. Once his breath caught fire from a lighted match coming near the mouth; doubtless due to the development of carburetted hydrogen in a very disordered stomach. Now that the country is so prolific in useful gas wells, men's stomachs can be devoted to better purposes than developing their own illuminating gas.—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

"Blood Will Tell."

Yes, the old adage is right, but if the liver is disordered and the blood becomes thereby corrupted, the bad "blood will tell" in diseases of skin and throat, in tumors and ulcers, and in tubercles in the lungs (first stages of consumption) even although the subject be descended in a straight line from Richard Cœur de Lion, or the noblest Roman of them all. For setting the liver in order no other medicine in the world equals Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery." Try it, and your "blood will tell" the story of its wonderful efficacy.

An Important Study.

The senate bill providing for the study of the nature of alcoholic drinks and narcotics, and their effects upon the human system, at West Point and Annapolis, in the Indian schools, and in the public schools of the territories and the District of Columbia, has been reported favorably to the house and placed on the calendar. The report accompanying the bill states that nearly 2,000,000 men and women have petitioned the legislatures of the different states for similar laws, and up to the present year the wishes of the people have been complied with in fourteen states. As an evidence that the people earnestly desire a law like the one suggested, the committee points to the fact that petitions bearing the names of 71,276 persons have been presented to this congress asking for its enactment. The effect of similar laws in the different states where they are in force has, in the opinion of the committee, proved most salutary. Such laws lead to progress, and serve to check a threatened evil to humanity and the general welfare. The report argues that the bill invades no right of self government. The measure had the vital merit of involving no political significance, but appealed to the very foundations upon which popular self government reared—the intelligence of the people. It was difficult to see how any objection could be raised to such a statute, except by those who feared to have the next generation educated upon a subject universally recognized to be of the most vital importance to individual health and social security.—Toledo Blade.

What Labor Knows.

Labor knows better than any other element in society the extent of the drink evil. The intelligent workingman who looks abroad perceives that all efforts at securing better conditions for his class must fail so long as the class itself, through lack of self restraint and self denial, squanders so large a proportion of its earnings in the saloon, and by the cultivation of depraved tastes kill its own conscience, ambition, self-respect and capacity for improvement. He perceives the futility of talk about the inequality of compensation so long as the fact exists, patent to all the world, that if labor retrenched half its expenditures upon drink a fund would result sufficient to insure comfort and abundance to all its members and to furnish them besides with the means of a higher education and enjoyment. He knows from sad experience that, as a working-man writes to the Voice, "three fourths of the destitution among laborers and their families is the result of intemperance." He knows, too, that the saloon in politics has degraded the suffrages, corrupted the voter, set the citizen against his own best interests, helped scoundrels to public plunder, excluded honest men from office, stopped the progress of communities, and recruited continually the ranks of the dangerous classes, whose lawlessness, punished or unpunished, is paid for at last out of the wages of the workers.—N. Y. Tribune.

The movement among Knights of Labor to prohibit the use of intoxicants by the members is in the right direction. If successful, it will do much to increase their power and ameliorate their condition. The knightly reasons for the prohibition are that "the man who does not use liquor will be less liable to commit rash and violent acts;" "that his employer will not have his drinking habits as an excuse for getting rid of him, and will listen to his grievances more respectfully if he is a man of sobriety." The Knights also say that "the man who drinks is the slave of his employer."—N. W. Christian Advocate.

The Great German Doctor.

The remarkable phase in the practice of Dr. Peter W. Schmidt (frequently called Dr. Pete) is, he never asked one to describe their disease, his intuitive perceptions being so strong he can tell any one their trouble without asking a question; His success is phenomenal. His practice enormous. He is sought after by hundreds wherever he goes, because he cures when every physician and remedy has failed. The giving of his great medicine, Golden Seal Bitters, which has made his great success, to the world marks a new era in medicine. Blood, liver, kidney, and stomach disorders yield to this master of disease, and its wonderful cures are regarded as phenomenal, but the germ of faith ever says, "What has been may be again." We say to the sick and discouraged give Golden Seal Bitters a trial. It is all we ask. They will speak for themselves. Sold by Perry Weed and Dr. G W. Crouter.

MORTGAGE SALE.

MORTGAGE SALE.—Default has been made in the payment of the interest money secured by a mortgage dated the 25th day of October, 1881, executed by Thomas J. Daily and Laura J. Daily, his wife, to Ellen U. Kirkland, which said mortgage was recorded in the office of the register of deeds of Charlevoix county, Michigan, on the 30th day of October, 1881, in liber 9 of mortgages, on page 456. And the said mortgagee having elected to consider the whole amount due because of said default, the amount claimed to be due at the date of this notice is the sum of five hundred and ninety-three dollars, principal and interest, and the further sum of thirty-five dollars as an attorney's fee, stipulated for in said mortgage, and no suit at law or in equity having been instituted to recover the debt so secured or any part thereof. Now, therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage and in pursuance of the statute, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises therein described, at public auction, to the highest bidder at the front door of Lewis' hall (that being the last place of holding the circuit court) in the village of Boyne City, Charlevoix county, Michigan, on the 6th day of September, 1886, at 11 o'clock in the forenoon. The premises are described in said mortgage as follows: All that certain piece or parcel of land situated in the township of Evangeline, county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan, and described as follows, viz: All the south west quarter (¼), section twenty-eight (28), township thirty-four (34) north of range six (6) west, except seventy-five and one-half acres heretofore sold and conveyed off from the north side of said quarter section above described.

Dated June 10, A. D. 1886.

A Fragment.

The rosy, dimpled fingers of the spring
Yon endless stretch of happy woodland fills
With myriad millions of new-opening leaves;
But when the autumn from the tasseled hills
Shall bear the rustling sheaves,
The few pale wolfs that may be lingering
Will surely perish in the winter's ills.

The warm, full currents of life's crimson tide
In your great city's inter-locking walls
Throb through a million hearts that feel no fear;
But when the frost of life's sad autumn falls
On Hope's wide field turned sere,
The few that be not moldering side by side
Will wait in sorrow till death kindly calls.

Perhaps each waking of the vernal year
A little fairer is than was the last,
Perhaps each following age makes more divine
The mold in which the human soul is cast;
If not, the sum doth shine
On earth in vain—vain is all hope or fear,
The future can but recreate the past.
—Robert Burns Wilson, in Southern Bivouac for April.

LONDON FASHIONS.

Stern Simplicity the Rule in Walking Dresses—A Novel Style—Helmet-shaped Bonnets.

Some of the new dresses are so sternly simple that only a practiced eye appreciates their costliness and merit; others so gay and beautiful that a child would clasp its hands in delight at the sight of them, as the vision of a fairy queen's robe.

For instance a new model for a walking dress which I saw lately at Mme. Riely's illustrates the first style to perfection. Its simplicity is something positively extraordinary. It is made of black Indian cashmere, having lines in it of black embroidery. The underskirt is perfectly plain and rather narrow, with the tiniest little plaiting showing under its edge. This underskirt is almost hidden by the tunic, which has an opening right from the waist to the bottom, just a little to the left, about a finger from the front. Near the waist, where the tunic closes, there are two or three small folds, forming a very slight draping; they look as if the material had been lightly pushed up by a skillful hand and stayed in its place by magic. The bodice has two points at the back, and under the right hand one there are a few more of those tiny folds a little fuller and more numerous. Otherwise the tunic is perfectly plain, and nearly everywhere almost touches the bottom of the underskirt; the bodice is plain, but exquisitely shaped. It is practically impossible to do justice to this dress, which is so profoundly simple, and yet is one of the most beautiful models at present vouchsafed to us.

And now for the contrast. For illustration I will describe a dinner dress, so delicate, so aerial and fine that the very daylight of this drear climate seems to soil it, and it has to be guarded like a precious jewel until the moment comes for its use. It is not a thing of fairyland, as a child would think, for it is real; but it is an exotic, and belongs to an exotic existence—to a life in which beauty and exquisite delicacy are possible in the midst of a black atmosphere and an outer world which is never clean. But it is very nice to wear these things, and never think of the brains or care put into them, or how soon their delicate beauty is gone. This dress, typical of the style I am speaking of, has the front of the skirt made of long plaits of cream-colored French lace of exquisite design and delicate as butterflies' wings. The lace commences quite narrow at the waist, and there is something like a fan shape at the bottom. On each side is a broad panel of crepe de chine embroidered in maize silk. Most lovely is this embroidery material, but more beautiful than itself is the way in which it is shaped to the form. It looks as if it had been smoothed over the hips and had taken the shape; no seam, no fullness is there; yet the shaping is perfect. How this miracle is worked the miracle-worker must know, but I do not. It is like looking at the feats of a clever juggler: one can only say, "Oh, of course there must be some way of doing it—it is not witchcraft;" yet it is amazingly like it! The back of the skirt is made of two sets of folds, one of the filmy cream lace, one of the rich heavy maize silk, which meet in the middle. These fall away from the waist in the perfect line—the absolutely right curve—without the faintest suggestion of cushion or steel or any such horror. And just at the waist the material is lightly lifted—draped is much too positive a word—with that delightful look I have already spoken of, as if the artist had just pushed it up a little to lighten the effect and kept it in its place by a spell or a magic word. Stitches are inconceivable in connection with this light, butterfly sort of draping, for it looks as if a puff of soft air would blow it away as a thistle-down in a bloom. The bottom of the folds of the rich maize silk is fringed, so that it looks almost as if this were a sash put on to the airy dress.

Bonnets are made in a sort of helmet shape now, and the bows placed in front rise flame-like from the head. The flowers which are to be so much worn, stand up on a bonnet as though they grew there, and hold their faces up to the sun as they do in the garden. No longer is a flower laid upon a bonnet. The shapes are very small and lie close at the sides; at the back they are calculated for the hair to be worn high on the head. But a new mode of putting on the strings takes away from the bareness at the back to which we have now become almost accustomed. The strings come from right under the upright bow in front, and pass, side by side down the back of the crown; then they separate of necessity, and being taken around behind the ear to meet in front, lie smoothly on the upturned hair. —London World.

Good Poker Points.

It is certainly an established fact that poker is now the fashionable American game. It is a conceded favorite for various reasons. The limit among gentlemen is light, the sociability, the rapidity, the possible chances of great improvement in the draw, and the probability of a bold play winning with the weaker hand, all lend a charm and fascination to the game that places it foremost in all the card amusements of gentlemen. In addition, it affords to philosophers and close observers unbounded pleasures in the opportunities it offers for critical judgment of the individual characteristics of the players and exposes the latent selfishness of men who, at all other pastimes, can conceal their frailties under a studied, plausible demeanor. There is no place superior to a poker table for the self-conviction of a surly, ill-tempered, rude, or mercenary character. He may blind the world elsewhere, but not here. Again, you will see such an one ungenerously criticise an opponent for his absurd superstition and the next moment this forgetful critic will call for a new deck of cards or ask some other to exchange seats. I would here interpolate a few words of advice to players. Don't kick. Under the most adverse circumstances do not forget that you are (or are presumed to be) a gentleman. If you are beaten acknowledge it gracefully and do not expose the secret part of your nature by ill-tempered or sarcastic remarks or a refusal to show a called hand. Never accept a proposition to play unless you have the money in your pocket to pay for your chips, and when that is lost, unless you have a personal friend at the table whose purse is at your command, quit the game at once, under whatever pretext you choose.

The writer has been a poker-player for years and always holds the player who smiles at his ill-success the most dangerous opponent.

Further, keep cool; hold in reverential respect the hand that has but drawn one card, avoid all show of temper, play only with gentlemen, and the result of your year's amusement will in all probability exhibit a very small balance to either the credit or debit side of the account.—Philadelphia Times.

Ways of Indian Jugglers.

The juggler is perhaps the most singular man to be met in all India. His tricks outvie in neatness of execution and wonder all of the most famous prestidigitateurs of Europe or America. Their paraphernalia consists of an old leather bag, and their dress of a rag across the loins. They generally travel in pairs—one being the musician and the other the performer. The musician's dress is certainly grotesque, and consists of a bright yellow or faded green cloth, wrapped around his body and between his legs in many a fold. Around his waist he slings a drum, and fastened to his chest in such a manner that it reaches his lips is a reed instrument supplied with a variety of keys widely separated, from the squeak of a pig to the melody of a bagpipe, and about as musical as either. Shaking out his bag of dead men's bones, leather straps, conches baskets, garden pots and rubbish, the juggler proceeds to the execution of his tricks. He turns an innocent strap into the most vicious of hissing serpents, and affrights all those standing by; he runs the sword through an empty basket, and human gore gushes out profusely; fire is emitted from his nose and mouth, and, after swallowing a pound of raw cotton, fine thread is drawn from his ears and nose. This is all done by a half-naked man in an open plain. But perhaps the most interesting and oft-described trick which may with justice in this connection be repeated here is the mango trick.

Taking up a garden pot, the juggler hands it round for inspection. He then scrapes up some of the earth and filling the pot places over it a shawl, and blows on the earth, also repeating a prayer. This he continues for a few minutes, and suddenly taking away the shawl shows to the by-standers the sprouting head of a green and tender plant. Again he covers the pot and blows and again uncovers. There is a tree in miniature with shapely leaf and blossom—and again the tree is grown to the height of four feet, with full turned fruit and bark—and then he blows on it, and before the eyes of the spectators the tree has vanished, and the garden pot and earth are there alone.

Dancing girls, too, dance on the green sward and contort their bodies into the letter S and perform other strange feats for the amusement of men and boys—for, as a general rule, the Hindoostan women regard the nautch walla, or professional dancuse, with feelings of lively abhorrence. The nautch walla is a pleasing little woman, and is as graceful as a fawn. Her skirt is shaped like a balloon and her trousers are fuller even than the fullest palgama, though it is neatly fastened above the ankle to show the form of the foot, while her shawl only protects from the sun the head and does not hide her face. —San Francisco Call.

HOUSEHOLD THRIFT.

There is a prevalent idea among men that women are not thrifty. Careful and saving in little things they are confessed to be,—picking up pins, grudging unemployed minutes, given to petty self-denials, counting their sixpences and penurious of their pence. But all this, say the husbands and brothers, is not economy, but fussiness. There is none of that broad view of relative utilities, none of that wise present expenditure for greater future saving which characterizes the business operations of men.

Much of this estimate of woman's thriftlessness is false because based upon an incorrect view of the sphere of her economies; but there is a very substantial element of truth in it. Women are apt to pay too close attention to little things, to cumber themselves with unimportant duties, to fret themselves with little worries, to weary themselves with trivial cares. They do not take a large enough view of their sphere, they thwart their own purposes with needless limitations, they base their economies upon too narrow a foundation.

For example, that is an utterly false notion of thrift which allows it in the slightest degree to endanger health. The mother's health is the home capital, and the moment she suffers it to be overtaxed, she is wastefully drawing upon her principal. Exigencies indeed may occur in which her health must be put in jeopardy,—the illness of husband, or children or parents; or the moral welfare of some member of her family may require that every power be taxed to its utmost, even beyond the limits of personal safety,—but economy never requires a sacrifice like this, but rather forbids it. This is not a mere question of doctor's bills and medicines. Though it never comes to that pass, though the housemother never falls seriously ill, but "manages to keep up," to "drag about her work," she still has defrauded her family of much that money purchased dearly, if at all,—brightness, and merriment, and cheerfulness, the keynote of which must be always struck by the mother; little devices for little comforts, costing nothing, but valuing much and lying only within the mother's power; to subtract these from the daily life of home is to change its character and to lower its tone as essentially as if some great loss of property had rendered necessary a change in the style of living; and to keep these always added to life is only within the mother's power when she is at her best in health and spirits.

A true notion of household thrift therefore involves more than hard work and careful economies. It is indeed hard work that is often most thriftily to be avoided. "The mistress' eye does more work than both her hands," says the old Welsh proverb, and the French have a similar one, "The master's eye fattens the steed." It is the housekeeper's best art to make careful supervision save both time and strength. There is nothing praiseworthy in that "ambition" which impels a woman to do more work than her neighbors; there is no economy in doing one's self what can be as well done by a person of inferior capacity. True thrift demands that the higher faculties be devoted to the higher work, and so teach a servant or a child to do a duty thoroughly well, and to see to it that the duty is done, is a much truer economy than to do it all one's self.

It is not merely of strength and time that one should be economical, but of purpose and interest. If the housemother's plan of life is narrow, her purposes falsely centered, her interests frittered away upon trivialities, then her life runs to waste, however saving of odd moments, of odd pence, of old clothing, and of "remainder victual" she may be. The purpose of a woman's life must reach beyond to-day, this week, the present season, and embrace the whole future of husband and children, the whole sphere in which she moves. The true economy of life regards duty as a whole, not as a succession of separate acts; it makes every labor, from the most drudging to the most refined, every recreation, every effort at self-improvement, every hour of social intercourse, every time of anxious care, all work together to perfect that whole, and make the home-life something great, and strong, and beautiful. For the element of beauty must never be wanting, nor sacrificed to that of utility. What quaint old Andrew Fuller has said of so fine and dainty a thing as lace, may apply to many of woman's acts and duties: "Let it not be condemned for a superfluous wearing, because it doth neither hide nor heat, seeing it doth adorn, costing nothing save a little thread descanted on by art and industry." It is quite enough of many actions, as well as of fabrics and furnishings, that they adorn. Beauty makes life so much the richer, and true household thrift will seek for beauty everywhere. Many a homely thing becomes beautiful if but a little "descanted on" by the housemother's deft fingers, but there are things of beauty which cost heavily in time or money, and yet which amply repay the cost. It is the highest province of household thrift to decide upon values like these, learning truly to discern the real, and seeking to secure it, even though costly, and to detect the unreal and reject it, however cheaply it might be obtained. —Good Housekeeping.

WESTERN.

The summer season at McVicker's Theater, Chicago, was inaugurated last week by the Madison Square Theater Company, of New York, which gave a most delightful representation of Verplanck's sterling comedy, "Our Society." The Chicago papers are profuse in their praise of the work of this peerless dramatic organization, which is so perfect as to defy criticism. The News says: "It is a pleasant and entertaining thing to watch the workings of an intricate yet perfect piece of mechanism—conceived by an ingenious brain, and put together and guided by a skillful hand. One knows that each wheel fits perfectly into its neighbor, and that there is not in the entire machine a cog or screw or bolt that does not have its due effect upon the working of the whole. Some such feeling of confidence must take possession of those who listen to the performances of the company from the Madison Square Theater now playing at McVicker's." The season of this company will continue six weeks longer.

At Oconto, Wis., the Oconto Company's flouring mill, shingle mill, and a large number of cedar posts were burned; loss $70,000.

Captain Francis Jeffry Dickens, a son of the celebrated English novelist, died suddenly, at Moline, Ill., of paralysis of the heart. His age was 41 years.

Three hotels and a church were wrecked by a cyclone at Crookston, Minn. Eight persons were seriously injured in the Germania Hotel, and the proprietor will probably die of his wounds.

At Muscatine, Iowa, fire destroyed the yards and mills of the Muscatine Lumber Company, a saw-mill on Shad Creek, four dwellings on East Hill Bluff, two wagon bridges, and two bridges of the Rock Island Railway, also one on the main line and one on the Wilton line. The loss will be not less than $250,000.

Police Officer Hansen, the eighth victim of the anarchist riots in Chicago on the 4th of May, died at the County Hospital in that city, after a vain effort had been made to save his life by the transfusion of healthy blood into his system.

Estimated improvements to the Duluth (Minn.) dock system, aggregating an outlay of over $2,000,000, are under way.

A scientific expedition from Princeton College will explore the Uintah Mountains in Western Utah and Wyoming.

The semi-centennial anniversary of the admission of Michigan to the Union attracted fifteen thousand citizens of the State to Lansing, where representative men delivered addresses from three stands. A grand barbecue was held at the fair-grounds.

Rev. S. W. Bicknell, of Hampton, W. Va., denounced Miss Emma Clark from the pulpit for personal reflections upon his character. The lady and her brother revenged themselves by administering a caning.

WASHINGTON.

President Cleveland has declined with thanks a wedding present for his wife from the Sultan of Turkey.

Secretary Whitney is having compiled a list of merchant marine vessels which in time of need might be called upon for service as auxiliary cruisers or for transport service.

President Cleveland has accepted the Honorary Presidency of the American Exhibition to take place in London in May, 1887. He will open the exhibition from the White House and start the machinery by telegraph.

It is reported that the President and Mrs. Cleveland contemplate a tour of the great lakes, from Buffalo to Chicago, during the summer.

President Cleveland found in his reception room, the other morning, an old man and his wife, who stated that they had walked from Missouri to shake hands with him.

Mrs. Oscar Folsom, Mrs. Cleveland's mother, confirms the report that the President and his wife will make a tour of the great lakes during the summer.

The Cabinet considered the Canadian fisheries troubles at its last meeting, says a Washington dispatch. Advices from Minister Phelps confirm the press reports that the English Government is not altogether satisfied with the course pursued by the Dominion authorities.

The first official reception of President and Mrs. Cleveland was held at the White House on the evening of the 15th inst., being one of the largest ever held at the Executive Mansion. The diplomatic corps, Congressmen, with their wives, officers of the army and navy, and many distinguished persons residing in Washington were present to pay their respects to the President and his bride.

The Secretary of War has detailed Major John M. Bacon to visit the camp of the Minnesota militia, and Captain Gaines Lawson to perform similar duty among the Illinois brigades at Springfield.

POLITICAL.

Republicans of the Third Missouri District renominated Congressman B. W. Perkins.

A. Easton has been nominated for Congress by the Prohibitionists of the Fifteenth Illinois District.

"Massachusetts is on the ragged edge of another Butler scare," says a Boston dispatch. The announcement in a morning paper that he is in training for the Governorship caused a decided sensation in Boston. "The comments on the streets and at the hotels showed there was more in the movement than Butler's friends are willing to admit. The general impression, however, is that Butler is playing a little game of bluff as a feeler, and if he finds his grip is as strong as formerly he will exert it for another candidate. It is believed that he looks favorably upon the proposed candidacy of Judge Abbott. A rumor, which is being much repeated, is that Butler is ready to back Abbott for Governor by his personal effort on the stump, and has more than half a mind to run for Congress himself at the same time, by way of stirring up the ease more thoroughly. Butler has a residence in two districts, and may run either in the Seventh or Eighth."

The Vermont Republican State Convention nominated Lieutenant Governor Ormsby for Governor, and renominated C. W. Porter, the present Secretary of State; W. H. Dubois, the present Treasurer, and E. H. Powell, the present Auditor, by acclamation. The platform indorses the prohibitory law; the bill regulating the sale of oleomargarine; favors State and national railroad commissions, and expresses sympathy with Gladstone and Parnell. In referring to the disposal of public offices it says:

Whatever may be the case elsewhere, the course of the national administration in reference to the disposal of Federal offices in this State, in committing appointments to party bosses, supplanting faithful officers, not justly chargeable with offensive partisanship, by active and offensive partisans and removing honest, experienced, and respected officers to make place for saloon-keepers, pot-house politicians, and Democratic strikers, has been a most absolute burlesque of civil-service reform, and deserves the condemnation of all who desire clean, efficient, and trustworthy public service.

W. S. Holman has been renominated for Congress in the Fourth Indiana District.

Congressman Hepburn, of the Eighth Iowa District, has been nominated for his fourth term.

THE INDUSTRIAL OUTLOOK.

Within a few weeks past the statement has gained wide currency that the short-hour movement had proved a complete failure, and accompanying details went far to prove it. Investigation into the result of the movement tends to show that the apparent success is not so small as has been asserted. There are good reasons for accepting the following totals of those getting full wages for fewer hours' work daily:

Cities.	Striking for shorter hours.	Reported as successful.
Chicago	80,000	70,000
New York	45,000	23,100
Cincinnati	32,000	25,000
Milwaukee	7,000	.....
Baltimore	9,000	4,000
Boston	4,700	.....
Pittsburgh	4,250	1,450
Detroit	3,000	3,600
St. Louis	2,000	8,700
Washington	1,500	1,200
Others	13,000	.....
Total	198,450	137,050

There were, as previously reported, 150,000 who received shorter hours without striking, and 50,000 who struck for and got them. The falling away has evidently been nearly one-third, as the totals from cities reported are now but sixty-eight per cent. of those given in May.

An agent of the Knights of Labor has induced most of the retail tradesmen at St. Joseph, Mo., to refrain from buying two carloads of boycotted nails from the Cahmet Steel Works at South Chicago.

Before the adjournment of the International Typographical Union, at Pittsburgh, the special committee on the question of the Union joining the Knights of Labor presented a long report, which was adopted. The report, after complimenting the Knights of Labor in the highest terms, and pledging them support, demands, first, that the Knights of Labor will not attempt to dictate the course of action of distinctive trades; second, that they will not cover with the shield of the order any man who has been found unworthy to mingle with the members of the Union as a fellow-craftsman in good standing. The report of the special committee on the use of stereotype plate matter was approved. The report recommends that the executive council endeavor to unionize all firms manufacturing plates, and that all non-union firms be published; that the local unions be required to interdict the use of plates where a reduction of the working force will ensue; newspapers must be prohibited from using news plates manufactured in non-union offices or else be declared unfair; no subordinate union can take any action regarding the use of plates without the consent of the executive council.

The striking tailors in New York agreed to accept the arbitration terms and to return to work.

Organizers of the Knights of Labor have formed an assembly among the servant girls of St. Louis numbering 150 members. It is said that their place of meeting is kept a secret.

The cooks and waiters in the large restaurants at San Francisco struck, the other day, compelling the closing of many eating houses. The posting of certain rules caused the trouble.

In the iron and steel mills at Pittsburgh the men are working overtime, indicating a prosperous condition of the trade. The iron output this year, compared with last year, shows an excess of 203 tons.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Sporting notes: Irish Pat, Corrigan's famous running horse, was dosed by backers of the horse John Sullivan, in order to prevent him from starting in a race at St. Louis. Jack Burke and Pete Nolan fought six hard rounds at Cincinnati, but neither had the best of the fight. John L. Sullivan and Charles Mitchell will fight an eight-round battle with gloves on the Polo grounds, New York, July 5. John Teemer and Jacob Gaudaur engaged in a sculling race at Pullman, Ill., which resulted in an easy victory for Gaudaur. It is claimed that Teemer threw the race.

The city of Vancouver, British Columbia, was nearly destroyed by fire. Aid is solicited, as nearly three thousand persons are homeless.

The Supreme Lodge of the Ancient Order of United Workmen was in session at Minneapolis, Minn., last week. Thirty-one States and Territories were represented. The annual report of the Supreme Master Workman showed the receipts for 1885 to be $331,000; disbursements, $325,349; relief-fund receipts, $65,341; disbursements, $61,559; total number of deaths, 1,284; total beneficiary assessments, $2,580,468; losses paid, $2,566,458.

A dozen lives were lost by the recent terrible fire at Vancouver, B. C. The loss will exceed $1,000,000, upon which there is practically no insurance. Nearly 500 houses were burned. Hundreds of people are camped out. There are meager facilities for the relief of the sufferers. Most of the burned frame buildings will be replaced with brick structures. Contracts for a large hotel and other extensive buildings representing $500,000 were let just before the fire. A dispatch from New Westminster, B. C., gives the following particulars the disaster:

Between 2 and 3 o'clock the brush fires reached the doomed city, and in an hour it was in ashes. One of the first buildings to go was Macarthey's drug store, followed by the office of the Vancouver News. The flames shot across Abbott street with astonishing rapidity, and almost before the people could realize it the whole of the western portion of the city was in a blaze. Those who endeavored to save goods were so wrapped in their object as to appear heedless of the danger they ran, and it was found especially necessary to compel many women to relinquish their efforts to save their effects. In some instances there was only just time to place them on impoverished rafts, which were pushed out from shore beyond the reach of the flames which literally seemed to fill the air. A large number of fugitives collected at the Hastings Mill Company's wharf, but the majority collected at False Creek bridge. Nothing was to be seen from either of these points but a lurid, rolling bank of smoke hanging over the ashes of the city, from which stragglers could be seen occasionally fleeing. The steamer Dunsmuir was at the wharf to receive people, and with several other steamers conveyed a large number over to Moodyville. A thousand men are at work clearing up the debris for the railroad company. Twenty contracts for rebuilding have already been let. Many men lost their all, but are determined to start in again. The property loss falls directly on the pioneer element of the new city.

FOREIGN.

It has been definitely settled that the dissolution of Parliament shall take place June 24. Writs for the new election will be prepared meanwhile, and will be ready for prompt issuance on the day after dissolution, June 25. The elections should be finished by the end of July, and the new Parliament should be ready to assemble by August. If there should be a large Unionist majority, Mr. Gladstone will resign, and Lord Salisbury will then be summoned by the Queen to form a new Cabinet. A hot fight will be made against Mr. Gladstone in his own Midlothian district, hence he believes it will require all his energies in that district. There will probably be some changes in the Parnellite representation, several members having made known their intention not to seek re-election. There is no indication, however, of any weakening in the party discipline. Mr. Gladstone issued an address to the Midlothian electors, making a strong appeal for support in the coming contest and advocating a true union instead of the paper union now existing, and which the Tories seek to continue.

The Comte de Paris will go to England. The unexpelled Orleans Princes will remain in France.

Boiteau, the French author, is dead.

Ludwig, the deposed insane King of Bavaria, committed suicide by drowning himself in Starnberg Lake. The attendant physician lost his life in trying to save the dethroned monarch. His brother has been proclaimed King under the title of Otto I., but as he has been mentally unsound for ten years, his uncle, Prince Luitpold, will remain Regent.

The story comes from Persia that a brother-in-law of the Shah refuses to deliver to Minister Winston the recent firman and railroad contract until an installment of $30,000 is paid him for his trouble in putting the job through without noise or friction.

The former physician of King Ludwig declares that the deceased monarch was not insane. A Vienna correspondent hints that the truth as to the King's condition and death will never be known. The remains were sent to Munich under escort of cavalry.

Louis Laurent Simonin, the French engineer and traveler, is dead.

A dispatch from Paris states that there have been fresh massacres of Christians in Annam.

LATER NEWS IETMS.

The ten-mile bicycle race for the world's championship, at Lynn, Mass., was won by John R. Prince in thirty minutes eight and three-fifths seconds, Neilson second, and Woodside third.

Workmen employed by Peter Herdic in digging a reservoir at Huntington, Pa., discovered an earthen pot filled with coin, believed to amount to several thousand dollars. The finder, the contractor, and the former owner of the land are preparing for a triangular suit over the treasure.

A secret circular of General Master Workman Powderly has been published. It is dated Philadelphia, June 12, and the Knights of Labor are warned against what he considers a plot to pack the Knights' convention, to be held in the month of October, with politicians. Mr. Powderly claims to have discovered a movement on foot to disrupt the order by underhand means.

The Greenback-Labor party of Ohio, in State convention at Mansfield, nominated a ticket with Christopher Evans, of Perry, for Secretary of State. A ratification meeting held in the evening was addressed by Hon. Jesse Harper, of Illinois, and others.

The Ohio Supreme Court has decided that the acts of the State Senate after the desertion by the Democrats of their seats are perfectly legal.

When Mr. Gladstone started from London on his Scotch campaign, fully 10,000 people gathered at the depot to give him godspeed, and when the Premier drove up in his carriage they made frantic efforts to see him, and broke down the barriers which had been provided to keep them back. A great many men and boys climbed to the top of the railway carriages standing in the station, and from that elevation cheered Mr. Gladstone as he passed them. Mr. Gladstone only reached his coach with the greatest difficulty. A squad of policemen surrounded him and by much elbowing succeeded at last in getting him through the cheering masses to the car. The coach window at Mr. Gladstone's seat was open. The crowd, catching sight of the venerable minister through it, cheered vociferously, until the Premier, rising and speaking from the window, said:

Attempts have been made and will be made to divert your attention from the real question at issue. This question is solely whether Ireland shall be trusted to manage her own affairs. Those who deny Ireland this right admit that Canada and other British colonies enjoy such rights. Are we to trust our fellow-subjects in Ireland and govern by love, or are we to adopt the policy of the Government's enemies and introduce into Ireland government by force?

At all the stations along the route the Premier was enthusiastically greeted by enormous crowds, and at Edinburgh 40,000 people lined the streets and wildly cheered the Liberal leader.

The French Senate Committee has rejected by a vote of 6 to 3 all proposals for the expulsion of the princes.

A large number of bills were passed by the Senate on June 17, among them being measures to construct roads to the national cemeteries at Knoxville and Natchez, to grant the Seal rocks to the city of San Francisco, for the transfer of the Baton Rouge barracks to the University of Louisiana, to purchase land for the Indian training school near Salem, Oregon, for a conference at Washington of delegates from the American republics, and for the appointment of an additional Secretary of the Treasury for one year. A vote taken in the House on the question of taking up the Morrison tariff bill resulted in its defeat. Mr. Morrison gave notice that he would renew the motion on Tuesday, June 22. Mr. Morrison voted in a low tone and Mr. Randall in a loud, decisive way. Neither of the gentlemen was applauded. As soon as the result was known the revenue reformers sitting near Mr. Morrison turned toward him inquiringly. He remarked: "We'll try it again next Tuesday," and the House rang with the applause of his followers. The formal announcement was greeted with vociferous cheers from the Republican side. An analysis of the vote shows that of the 140 affirmative votes 136 were Democrats and 4 Republicans. Three of the Republicans are from Minnesota and one from New York. One hundred and twenty-two affirmative votes were cast by Democrats from the South and West, and 14 by Democrats from the Eastern and Middle States. Of the 157 negative votes 122 were cast by Republicans and 35 by Democrats. A bill was introduced in the House providing for the inspection of meats for exportation and prohibiting the importation of adulterated articles of food and drink.

CONGRESSIONAL.

The Work of the Senate and House of Representatives.

During a debate in the Senate on the Northern Pacific forfeiture bill on the 4th inst. Mr. George stated that an area larger than France or Germany had been donated by Congress to corporations between 1860 and 1875. Mr. Sherman remarked that all the stock issued by the Northern Pacific Company would not sell for the $30,000,000 cash put into the road, and that the passage of the pending bill would simply relieve the corporation of the task of tunneling the Cascade range. The House of Representatives passed the Senate bill to legalize the incorporation of trades unions. During the consideration of the legislative, executive and judicial appropriation bill, Messrs. Morrison and Holman engaged in a colloquy which amused the members, and upon Mr. Randall attempting to answer a question propounded by Mr. Morrison the latter gentleman exclaimed: "I was not asking you; you are not an economist up to the standard of the gentleman from Indiana."

A petition from the Chamber of Commerce of New York for an appropriation of $1,000,000 with which to commence the work of permanently deepening the water on Sandy Hook bar was presented in the Senate by Mr. Miller on the 12th inst. The army appropriation bill was passed as it came from the Senate Committee. A bill was passed authorizing the removal of the Southern Ute Indians in Colorado to Utah Territory. In the House of Representatives Mr. Holman's civil service rider to the legislative, executive and judicial appropriation bill was ruled out of order. The only other business accomplished by the House was the passage of several pension bills.

Beyond discussing the Northern Pacific land-forfeiture bill, absolutely nothing was done in the Senate on the 14th inst. The House concurred in the Senate's amendments to the Atlantic and Pacific land-forfeiture bill, and passed a bill prohibiting pool-selling in the District of Columbia. Mr. Hewitt offered a resolution in the House providing for a celebration of the centennial anniversary of the foundation of the Constitutional Government, April 30, 1889. Mr. Warner of Ohio introduced a resolution calling on the Secretary of the Interior for information showing the number, extent, and location of foreign holdings of what were formerly public lands, and how the title to such lands had been acquired by aliens.

The bill forfeiting the unearned lands of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company was passed by the Senate on the 15th. The bill declares forfeited so much of the lands granted to that company as are co-terminous with that part of its main line which extends from Wallula Junction to Portland and that part of the Cascade branch which shall not have been completed at the date of the passage of this bill, and makes the right of way in the Territories subject to taxation. Nothing in the act is to be construed to waive any right of the United States to forfeit any other lands granted to them, for failure, past or future, to comply with the conditions of the grant. In the House of Representatives Mr. Hiscock stated that the aggregate of the appropriation bills is $229,749,313, which will be swelled to $391,028,133. The receipts are estimated at $377,909,000, and the next fiscal year, he said, is certain to show a deficit of $14,000,000 on the most conservative estimate. Mr. Randall explained that the increase this year for pensions is $15,750,000, and the river and harbor bill adds $15,250,000.

The Senate passed the military academy appropriation bill on the 16th inst., and the appropriation committee has now no bills before it for consideration. The Senate rejected the President's nomination of John C. Shoiss, of Michigan, for Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Arizona, and of Abraham Rose for Postmaster of Vinton, Iowa. The House of Representatives passed the legislative appropriation bill and the Senate measure giving the franking privilege to the widow of General Grant. An adverse report has been made on Representative Grosvenor's resolution providing for the restoration of the tariff of 1867 on wool, and also upon the Wilkins resolution declaring against any reduction of the duty on the same article.

The Virtues of Cocaine.

Although the plant has only recently become known, its virtues have long been recognized by the natives in that part of the world in which it grows. It is stated that in 1583 the Indians consumed 100,000 "cestos" of coca, worth $2.50 each in Cuzco, and $4 in Potosi. In 1591 an excise of 5 per cent. was imposed on coca, and in 1746 and 1750 this duty yielded $800 and $1,500 respectively from Caravaya alone. Between 1786 and 1795, the coca traffic was calculated at $1,207,436 in the Peruvian viceroyalty, and including that of Buenos Ayres, $2,641,478. The coca trade is a government monopoly in Bolivia, the state reserving the right of purchasing from the growers, and reselling to the consumers. This right is generally farmed out to the highest bidder. The proximate annual produce of coca in Peru is about fifteen million pounds, the average yield being about eight hundred pounds per acre. More than ten million pounds are produced annually in Bolivia; so that the annual yield of coca throughout South America, including Peru, Bolivia, Ecuador and Pasto, may be estimated at thirty million pounds. It is scarcely pleasant news to learn that the natives who cultivate the coca plant themselves absorb so much of the products of their own production. We have here, doubtless, the cultivation of the costliness of cocaine and the scarcity of the drug. This can hardly be otherwise, it is to be feared, for some time to come when we remember that the reliance upon the extraordinary virtues of the coca leaf among the Peruvian Indians is so strong that in the Huanuco province they believe that if a dying man can taste a leaf placed on his tongue it is a sure sign of his future happiness.—Chambers' Journal.

Lafagan's Logic.

When a young man concludes that he is really of no account in this world I do not care how soon he commences to part his hair in the middle.

I have faith in intelligent, modest religion, but not much in the ostentatious street-corner religion with brass-band accompaniment. If a person can not be redeemed by rational means he or she is hardly worth redeeming.

Most every man has had opportunities to get rich, but there is only now and then one who finds it out before it is everlastingly too late.

Some people are too modest, and others too impudent, to accomplish their best work in this world. I ask for just enough modesty to conceal impertinence.

I hold that a man has a perfect right to make a drunken sot of himself to gratify his ambition, but I do not approve of his dragging down a wife and seven children with him to disgrace.

SURVIVING SOLONS.

A Meeting Replete with Historic Incident and Personal Reminiscence.

Interesting Addresses and Valuable Contributions to State Legislative History.

The attendance at the legislative reunion held at Lansing June 10-11 exceeded all expectations, nearly six hundred members of the Legislature being present, besides many otherwise distingnished men, including Senators Conger and Palmer, Governors Alger, Begole, Jerome, and Felch. The last named, who is President of the Legislative Association and was a member of the first Legislature ever held in the State, called the meeting to order in Representatives' Hall. Governor Alger made an address of welcome. It seemed superfluous to him to extend a welcome. They were all at home again. If one would ask why Michigan was great, let the questioner come here and read the character of the men who have guided the State and he will be answered. To-day everybody belonged to the same party—that is, the reunion party. President Felch, in response to the welcome, made a deeply interesting address on the legislative history of Michigan, which held the closest attention of the audience. He said: "More than fifty years have passed since the State was organized, and you will not wonder that one who participated in its events and whose bosom glowed with the ardor then kindled in every heart looks back with a proud and beating heart to this birthday of our commonwealth. I have watched the progress of our republic, and I feel in my heart that no State in the union has made truer or greater progress or has more reason to be proud of its record." The peculiarities of early legislation were dwelt upon at length, and the gradual change from the crude territorial laws to broader and more popular legislation detailed. The early legislators laid the foundation stones with the vision of the future bright before them. The legislation which has resulted in the State's magnificent educational system was carefully sketched, as well as the judicial, internal improvement, geological survey, and banking systems. "The first fifty years have passed," he said in conclusion. "Its history is written in letters of gold. It is not for us, who have seen all from the beginning to remain until the great future shall be disclosed, but we can read the bright signs of promise that rest upon it, and join in the song of thanksgiving."

The members of Legislatures of the '50s and prior years were seated at the front upon the right of the Speaker. Their numbers were few. Upon the left were seated the members of Legislatures of the '60s. Conspicuous among them were ex-Gov. Jerome and Senator Conger. As the roll-call proceeded each member present arose and answered to his name. Clerk Crossman read the outline of public service of each. The record of Senator Conger was longer than that of any other in the list, including terms in the House and Senate, in constitutional conventions and the National House of Representatives and Senate. A list almost as long was that of ex-Gov. Felch and ex-Senator Ferry.

It was seen after a while that to recapitulate the list of services of each member would take an interminable time, leaving scarcely opportunity for any other business. The names alone were called after that. Clerk Crossman, however, pointed out the record of the senior member present, Townsend E. Gidley, of Grand Haven, aged 82, whereupon the house complimented the old gentleman with a round of applause.

Col. Andrew T. McReynolds, of Grand Rapids, delivered a long address on "Toledo and the Mexican War from a Michigan Standpoint."

At the close of his address Col. McReynolds spoke of the resolution in favor of the Mexican War passed by the Legislature of 1847 with but three negative votes, saying it showed the preponderance of feeling of the people on the war question.

H. B. Lathrop, of Ionia, said he was one of the three that voted against that resolution, but that his vote was not because he opposed war measures, but because of objectionable phrases in the wording of the resolution itself.

R. W. Landon, of Niles, said he was present at the passage of the resolution in question, and was now glad to learn that there really was no opposition to it.

The remark was applauded, the audience being apparently in the mood to stir up debate among the veterans of 1847.

Hon. William P. Wells delivered an eloquent address on "The Legislative Power in a Free Commonwealth." The matter as well as the manner of Mr. Wells' address was such as to win the closest attention of the audience at the close of a wearisome session, and not only to win its attention but to evoke the most frequent and the heartiest applause. It was a signal triumph of the power of intellect and the graces of oratory.

The address of Hon. Byron G. Stout, of Pontiac, upon Agriculture and Stock Breeding, was thoughtful and scholarly. Mr. Stout showed how the march of modern civilization had brought our farmers face to face with the competition of other lands to such an extent that it might not be hazardous to predict that the time was coming when foreign wheat might be sold in the Atlantic ports for less than American wheat could be delivered there. A deduction drawn from this was the desirability of encouraging stock growing, and the illimitable field offered for this industry in the United States.

The address of Hon. Orlando M. Barnes upon the State Capitol was an interesting recital of the legislative battle which resulted in the choice of Lansing. The development from the forest to the present beautiful city and magnificent State House was eloquently sketched. The address closed with a scholarly review of the wisdom of the choice and a study of the influences of modern travel upon legislation and the dispatch of business at the State Capitol.

Probably the address most attentively listened to was that of Hon. D. L. Crossman, for many years Clerk of the House of Representatives. This address recounted incidents of legislative reminiscences. He told the history of the Senatorial contests of 1871, 1875, 1877, 1881, 1883; the culmination of the defeat of Chandler in 1875 was told, and the fluctuating, closely contested match in which the fortunes of John J. Bagley went down in 1870 to 1880. The long struggle of 1883 in which, after eighty-one ballots and roll calls, involving the repetition of 20,000 names and the writing out of not less than 10,000 votes, in which 121 different names were balloted for, resulting in the choice of Thomas W. Palmer, were vividly told. A joke of A. C. Maxwell upon his brother member, Rev. W. H. Brockway, was told amid great laughter. Anecdotes were related of members of different Legislatures.

Volunteer speeches being in order, Representative McNab, of Newaygo, was called out. He began by extolling the pine-clad hills of Newaygo, its babbling brooks and swift-rolling rivers, declaring that while he loved Michigan, the center of his affections was devoted to his own county. He had come to renew old acquaintances and to enjoy himself with the boys, and was not prepared for a speech. Proceeding then to discourse of Detroit, its beautiful river and crystal waters, and the obstinacy of its Representatives, the laughter became so great as to interrupt the speaker, and he sat down, leaving his remarks unfinished.

Ex-Congressman Horr was next called upon, and the rules were suspended because he objected that not being a member he could not speak. He continued, however, in an entertaining vein to contrast a Michigan audience with a Massachusetts one, and to descant upon the appearance of the members before him, declaring that if Michigan had got along for fifty years with such countenances as were before him there was hope that she would continue to survive to the last. He eulogized the labors of the legislators, and described the pleasure that the reunion had given him.

Senator Conger spoke for ten minutes pleasantly of the pride and gratification which this reunion of old friends had afforded him, and related an anecdote of the tendencies of the Senate of '65 to amend the bills of the House, with the result which it had upon a stalwart Representative.

Senator Palmer followed in a brief speech, saying that the happiest half year of his life was passed in the legislative session at Lansing, and recalling incidents of that session.

At the second day's session ex-Governor Blair, one of the four great war Governors, made an address on Michigan in the war. The Governor paid tributes to the memory of General Israel B. Richardson, of Pontiac, and General Woodbury, of Adrian. The Fourth Regiment was also praised as having met every requirement. The Seventh it was that fixed the pontoons at Fredericksburg, a service which the Governor did not which to forget.

"Let me assure you, my friends," the Governor said, in conclusion, "that so well have our soldiers done their great work that never again in our time, nor in that of our children, shall we be menaced by the cruelties of civil war. Too vast indeed is this victory, too far-reaching are its consequences to be properly estimated or too much honored. As said Lincoln at Gettysburg: 'It is not what we say here, but what they did here that will live hereafter.' And so say I!"

Hon. Edwin Willits delivered a lengthy address on "Michigan Schools and Colleges." Mr. Willits reviewed the early school-fund laws, showing how Michigan's were superior to those several neighboring States, and, as a result, how it is that we are so well-founded in this respect to-day. Isaac N. Crary and John D. Pierce have performed a noble work for the schools of the State. The rise of our present school system, from the log school to the University dome, and its statue of Benjamin Franklin in the front yard, was well traced. President Willits paid such a glowing apostrophe to the old log school and its red-cheeked maidens and freckled-faced boys that many ladies were tempted to cry, but instead vociferously applauded.

Ex-Representative Koon made a few remarks on early education, stating that in 1844 two of the three members of the Legislative Committee on Education were too conservative to do much, thinking the country was too new. He was the third member but couldn't do anything alone.

W. L. Bancroft was called to tell something of old-fashioned railroading, but did not respond.

Mr. Enos Goodrich, a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1850, arose and said, referring again to early education, that he, at that time, believed the children belonged to the State, and should be educated at State expense, and that the conservatism spoken of by Mr. Koon was only too manifest.

EX-SENATOR SIMEON R. BILLINGS

told of his first speech and how proud he felt when he got into the press as having given "the eagle's tail a twist!" When he was young he envied Congressmen because they could frank all their mail, using no postage stamps, but simply writing "M. C." in the corner. That feeling has now passed away. [Applause.]

Mr. Enos Goodrich, the member of 1850, again arose, speaking of the uncertainties of life and the liability of a person's being visited by the grim destroyer any time, wherefore he counselled preparation for the end.

J. J. WOODMAN

spoke feelingly of the Legislature of 1861, to whose work is due the stable and successful financial policy of our State. He wished to speak specially of the Chairmen of the respective Finance Committees, J. F. Joy, of the House, and H. P. Baldwin, of the Senate, who, among others, favored not the issuing of bonds and contracting of loans but present payment of expenses. "Pay as you go and do not tax posterity," Mr. Woodman considered the true basis of financial prosperity, and which, as far as he knew, had been inaugurated by his old love, the Legislature of 1861.

Ex-Senator James Birney, of Bay City, returned to the educational question, especially favoring the apprentice system, which, while part of the Prussian system we imitate, seems to be overlooked at present.

Ex-Senator Charles T. Gorham, of Marshall, desired it to be known that the tree under which the two gentlemen alluded to in Mr. Willits' paper as having done a great service for the educational system of the State, sat, is still standing and can be seen any day in Marshall, where it is held as a relic.

The fate of the first bill for a uniform militia was rehearsed, as was also the vicissitudes of early elections, with anecdotes of members.

THE PREMIER'S APPEAL.

Gladstone Issues a Manifesto to the Electors of England and Scotland.

The Issue Plainly Stated, Which Must Be Met in a Manly Way.

Mr. Gladstone has issued the following manifesto to the electors of Midlothian:

GENTLEMEN—In consequence of the defeat of the bill for the better government of Ireland the Ministry advised, and her Majesty was pleased to sanction, the dissolution of Parliament for a decision by the nation of the gravest and likewise the simplest issue that has been submitted to it for half a century. It is only a sense of the gravity of this issue which induces me, at a period of life when Nature cries aloud for repose, to seek, after sitting in thirteen Parliaments, a seat in the fourteenth, and with this view to solicit, for the fifth time, the honor of your confidence.

At the last election I endeavored in my addresses and speeches to impress upon you the fact that a great crisis had arrived in the affairs of Ireland. Weak as the late Government was for ordinary purposes, it had great advantages for dealing with that crisis. A comprehensive measure proceeding from that Government would have received warm and extensive support from within the Liberal party, and would probably have closed the Irish controversy within the present session and have left the Parliament of 1885 free to prosecute the now stagnant work of ordinary legislation, with the multitude of questions it includes. My earnest hope was to support the late Cabinet in such a course of policy. On the 26th of last January the opposite policy of coercion was declared to have been the choice of the Government, the Earl of Carnarvon alone refusing to share in it. The Irish question was thus placed in the foreground, to the exclusion of every other. The hour, as all felt, was come. The only point remaining to determine was the manner in which it was to be dealt with.

In my judgment, the proposal of coercion was not justified by the facts, and was doomed to certain and disgraceful failure. Some method of governing Ireland other than coercion ought, as I thought, to be sought for and to be found. Therefore I viewed without regret the fall of the late Cabinet, and, when summoned by her Majesty to form a new one, I undertook it on the basis of an anti-coercion policy, with the fullest explanation to those whose aid I sought as colleagues when I proposed to examine whether it might not be possible to grant Ireland a domestic legislature and maintain the honor and consolidate the unity of the empire. A government was formed, and the work was at once put in hand.

You will not, gentlemen, fail to understand how and why it is that the affairs of Ireland, and not for the first time, have thrust aside every other subject, and adjourned our hopes of useful and progressive legislation. As a question of the first necessities of social order it forces itself into the van. The late Cabinet, though right in giving it that place, were, as we thought, wrong in their manner of treating it. It was our absolute duty on taking the Government, if we did not adopt their method, to propose another. Thus, gentlemen, it is that this great and simple issue has come upon you and demands your decision. Will you govern Ireland by coercion or will you let Ireland manage her own affairs? To debate in this address this and that detail of the lately defeated bill would only be to disguise this issue, and would be as futile as to discuss the halting, stumbling, ever-shifting, and ever-advancing projects of an intermediate class which have proceeded from the seceding Liberals. There are two clear, positive, and intelligible plans before the world: There is the plan of the Government and there is the plan of Lord Salisbury. Our plan is that Ireland should, under well-considered conditions, transact her own affairs. His plan is to ask Parliament to renew repressive laws and enforce them resolutely for twenty years, by the end of which time he assures us Ireland will be fit to accept any government in the way of local government, on the repeal of the coercion laws, you may wish to give her.

True union is to be tested by the sentiments of the human beings united. Tried by this criterion we have less union between Great Britain and Ireland now than we had under the settlement of 1782. Enfranchised Ireland, gentlemen, asks through her lawful representatives for the revival of her domestic legislature—not, on the face of it, an innovating, but a restorative proposal. She urges with truth that the centralization of parliaments has been the division of the peoples, but she recognized the fact that the union, lawlessly as it was obtained, cannot and ought not to be repealed. She is content to receive her legislature in a form divested of prerogatives which might have impaired her imperial interests and better adapted than the settlement of 1782 to secure to her regular control of her own affairs. She has not rebelled but has welcomed the stipulations for the protection of the minority. To such provisions we have given and shall give careful heed, but I trust Scotland will condemn the attempts so singularly made to import into the controversy a venomous element of religious bigotry. Let her take warning by the deplorable riots in Belfast and other places in the north.

Among the benefits, gentlemen, I anticipate from your acceptance of our policy are these: The consolidation of the united empire and great addition to its strength; the stoppage of the heavy, constant, and demoralizing waste of the public treasure; the abatement and gradual extinction of ignoble feuds in Ireland and that development of her resources which experience shows to be a natural consequence of free and orderly government; the redemption of the honor of Great Britain from the stigma fastened upon her almost from time immemorial in respect to Ireland by the judgment of the whole civilized world; and, lastly, the restoration of Parliament to its dignity and efficiency and the regular progress of the business of the country.

Well, gentlemen, the first question I now put to you is, How shall Ireland be governed? There is another question behind it and involved in it. How are England and Scotland to be governed? You know how, for the last six years especially, the affairs of England and Scotland have been impeded and your Imperial Parliament discredited and disabled. All this happened while the Nationalists were but a small minority of the Irish members without support from so much as a handful of members not Irish. Now they approach ninety, and are entitled to say: "We are speaking the views of the Irish nation." It is impossible to deal with this subject by half measures. They are strong in their numbers, strong in British support, which brought 313 members to vote for their country; strongest of all in the sense of being right. But, gentlemen, we have done our part; the rest remains for you. Electors of the country, may you be enabled to see through and cast away all delusions, refuse evil, and choose good. I have the honor to be, gentlemen, your faithful and grateful servant,

WILLIAM E. GLADSTONE.

SUNDAY LAW IN LOUISIANA.

It Passes Both Branches of the Legislature —Saloon Keepers Will Fight It.

[New Orleans special.]

The State Senate, by a vote of 25 to 6, passed the Sunday law as it came from the House, with a few minor amendments. The law prohibits the opening on Sunday of any place of business whatever, except newspaper and printing offices, book stores, drug stores, apothecary-shops, undertaker-shops, public and private markets, bakeries, livery stables, railroads, whether steam or horse, hotels, dairies, boarding-houses, steamboats and other vessels, warehouses for receiving and forwarding freights, restaurants, telegraph offices, and theaters, or any place of amusement, providing no intoxicating liquors are sold on the premises. The bill will go back to the House, where it will probably meet with little opposition. The law will be vigorously contested before the courts by saloon-keepers of this city and others.

AN EDITOR SHOT.

Dr. Munford, the Chief of the Kansas City Times, Fired Upon by an Enraged Attorney.

The Would-Be Assassin Wounds Two Other Persons, and Is Taken Into Custody.

A sensational shooting affray occurred in a crowded section of Kansas City the other afternoon, in which Dr. Morrison Munford, proprietor of the Kansas City Times, and two other persons were shot by W. A. Carlisle, an attorney. Dr. Munford entered a street-car and was about to take a seat near the door when Carlisle came to the platform of the car, drew a revolver, and spoke to Munford, saying: "You have traduced my wife, and I will kill you." At the same time Carlisle began firing at Munford, who was but three feet distant. A ball struck Munford in the side, glancing from a rib and lodged under the skin just below the breast bone. Carlisle quickly fired again, the ball cutting his intended victim's coat and striking Miss Jennie Streeter, a girl sixteen years of age, who occupied the next seat in the car.

Dr. Munford then stooped forward, trying meanwhile to draw a revolver. Carlisle stepped into the street on the south side and began firing through the window, one ball striking a passenger named John Hale in the face. After firing five shots in rapid succession, Carlisle started to run around the forward car, attached to the other one, and was seized by two officers as Munford stepped down to the pavement on the north side with his revolver drawn and leveled. The latter, who thought he had been fatally wounded, had tried to shoot, but had not been able to free his weapon, the trigger of which was caught in a scabbard which incased it. Munford called to the officers to let Carlisle go and give him a chance, but bystanders quickly interfered and persuaded the Doctor to give up his weapon. He was taken to Dr. Jackson's office in the Times building adjoining, where the bullet in his breast was extracted and his wound dressed, after which he was removed to his home.

Carlisle meanwhile was conducted down Main street, followed by an angry crowd. His action in shooting indiscriminately into the throng aroused the greatest indignation, and threats of violence were made on all sides. At Seventh street the prisoner was put into a carriage and hurried to the police station. Several stones were thrown after it.

Miss Streeter walked to the pavement and sat down. A carriage was called, and she was taken home, where her wound was dressed. The bullet was found to have passed through the fleshy portion of the left breast, and, though painful, is not dangerous. The bullet that struck Hale in the face lodged in his head, and has not yet been found. His life will not be in danger unless erysipelas sets in, which is feared somewhat. Dr. Munford, who remained cool and collected throughout the general excitement over the affair, is resting well, and will soon recover.

Dr. Munford is a native of Kentucky, and is widely known through his position as proprietor of the Times. Mr. Carlisle is a Virginian by birth. He is a relative of John Carlisle, now dead, who was once United States Senator from West Virginia.

A KING DROWNS HIMSELF.

Ludwig, the Insane Ruler of Bavaria, Puts an End to His Miserable Life.

The Heroic Efforts of His Physician to Thwart the Monarch's Purpose.

Ludwig II., who was recently deposed from the Bavarian throne, has committed suicide. He had gone out for a promenade in the park of the Berg Castle, accompanied by Dr. Gudden, his physician, says a cable dispatch from Munich. The king suddenly threw himself into the Starnberg Lake and was drowned. The physician jumped into the water to rescue the King and was also drowned.

The medical commission which examined the late King report that he had ordered the members of the ministerial deputation headed by Count Holstein, who called upon him to procure his consent to a regency, to be flogged until they bled and then have their eyes extracted. Before his death the belief was spreading among the common people of Bavaria that the King's deposition was illegal. The people did not believe he was insane. Precautions had been taken to prevent the populace from rising to restore the King.

The full story of Ludwig's recent eccentricities would be generally regarded as incredible. He had a mania for avoiding the daylight and for turning day into night. He often summoned great musicians to the palace at late hours by post-horses to gratify the royal wish to hear a single air. He frequently had statesmen aroused in the small hours and sent to him to assist him to play a billiard game. He would drive at night in a chariot or on horseback with flying speed, accompanied by mounted torch-bearers, far up into the mountains, in imitation of Burger's "Leonore" and of Goethe's "Erl Koenig."

Once, while engaged in one of these wild night mountain chases, he fell, with his horse, down a deep chasm. He was badly hurt, and his injury aggravated his mental ailment, but his physicians were obliged to approach him disguised as lackeys or as soldiers.

Dr. Mueller and Hubert, the King's steward, had the bodies of Ludwig and Dr. Gudden conveyed to the Berg Castle and placed on beds. Although there was neither any perceptible respiration nor pulse movement in either body, Dr. Mueller and his assistants of the ambulance corps attempted to restore animation in both, and only ceased their efforts at resuscitation at midnight, when life was pronounced extinct in both cases.

King Ludwig's suicide cast a deep gloom over Munich. The people were deeply attached to the King, and evidences are everywhere manifest of the popular sorrow, caused by his tragic death.

MICHIGAN'S JUBILEE.

Celebrating the Fiftieth Anniversary of Her Admission Into the Union.

The Splendid Record of the State Since Its Birth Entertainingly Reviewed.

A correspondent at the State capital furnishes the following account of the semi-centennial exercises held there on the 15th inst.:

The boom of a cannon rang heavily through the city at 7 o'clock a. m. A battery had been stationed in front of the Capitol, and gun followed gun in rapid succession until the national salute had been fired. By 9 o'clock the city was packed with a rapidly increasing crowd, and the streets leading into the city were blocked with farmers' teams. There were many prominent men mixed in with the throng. At 9:30 the handsomely uniformed Cassopolis Band marched down the avenue and swung up toward the Capitol. It was followed a few minutes later by Spross' Knights of Pythias Band, and the crowd stampeded for the Capitol in the wake of the music. The Cassopolis Band halted on the front portico and played selections from the national melodies, while the chorus of one hundred and thirty school children filed down to their position on the steps below. When Governor Alger stepped out on the first landing as presiding officer of that section of the three meetings that were to be conducted simultaneously, the crowd was a solid mass extending from the lower steps nearly across the entire front of the Capitol lawn. At the end of the first number by the children prayer was offered by the Rev. George Taylor, of Lansing, and the chorus followed with "The Red, White, and Blue."

When the song had ended the children retired and their place on the steps was taken by the members of the State Pioneer Society, and Gov. Alger, who remained with head uncovered despite the broiling sun, stepped forward and read his welcoming address from manuscript. He welcomed the great throng gracefully and congratulated it on the present epoch in the history of the State. In fifty years the Commonwealth, he said, had grown from its infancy into the front rank in the States of the Union. Michigan could not be otherwise than great with her great men and women and her grand institutions and resources. There were now men and women in our midst to whose energy and determination was owed in a large measure that which was now enjoyed, and to them was owed a debt of gratitude that could never be repaid. The Governor spoke with intense feeling and earnestness of the gallant Michigan soldiers whose blood had stained every battle-field of the war, and made a scathing allusion to the recent triumphal trip of Jeff Davis through the South. There was no place, he averred, in this country for the secessionist, the nihilist, or the commune. Let children be taught to look up to but one flag, and that the stars and stripes.

At the conclusion of the address the Hon. Witter J. Baxter made a brief address as the representative of the Pioneer Society. The Hon. C. E. Grosvenor then related in a clear, concise manner the most interesting points in the financial history of the State, which, although only fifty years a State, is ont of debt; has vast resources already developed, and public buildings adequate to the wants of many years to come. His address was followed by one on the mineral resources of the State, delivered by Prof. Chas. D. Lawton.

The second section of the meeting, held in Representative Hall, was presided over by the Hon. Henry Chamberlain. The hall was crowded long before the initial number of the programme—a selection from "Trovatore"—was rendered by the Twenty-third Infantry Band. Michigan's semi-centennial hymn, written by D. Bethune Duffield, of Detroit, and set to the music of Kellar's American hymn, was given with superb effect, followed by Judge Cooley's historical address, which was made peculiarly interesting by its reminiscent sketches of Michigan men of great prominence.

Perhaps the most attractive feature of the programme was the singing of Judge Chapman's original ode, "Land of the Lake," by Mme. Clemelli, Mrs. Tilden, Messrs. Slocum and Rice, and the chorus. The music, arranged by Prof. Roney, is of a high order. John Campbell, whose address followed, combined the rare qualities of being historically accurate and yet entertaining in his review of the history of the Michigan judiciary, and the meeting closed with the singing of "The Star-Spangled Banner" by Mme. Clemelli, accompanied by the chorus and the Twenty-third Infantry Band.

In the Senate Chamber the meeting was called to order by the Hon. Henry Frolich. Ex-Gov. Begole, the Hon. O. M. Barnes, and John J. Adams, one of the two surviving members of the first Constitutional Convention, occupied the Speakers' stand with Mr. Frolich. The exercises opened with a selection by the Spross Knights of Pythias Band, followed by a solo by C. V. Sloenm. Ex-Gov. Felch was introduced to the audience as one of the oldest officers and ablest Governors now living in Michigan. His address on the Executive was followed by the solo "Let me like a soldier fall," by Mr. L. P. De Sale. The Hon. J. J. Adams' address on the early legislation of Michigan followed, and the meeting closed with a solo, "Springtime," by Mrs. Tilden and "Michigan, My Michigan," by the Arion Quartet.

At the conclusion of the indoor meetings the full chorus and the three bands formed on the front steps of the Capitol and rendered "My country, 'tis of thee," concluding with a special Michigan verse by Prof. Roney.

In the evening the Senate Chamber and Representative Hall, as well as the corridors, were crowded to their utmost capacity. Addresses were given, one on the Congressional standing of the State, and an able review of the railroad interests of the commonwealth by the Deputy Commissioner of Railroads, Maj. W. C. Ransome. A long and most delightful arrangement of band music and chorus and solo singing occupied almost the entire evening in both halls, and the united throng joined in swelling the chorused doxology.

Thus ended the celebration of fifty years of most populous growth of the State of Michigan

Congressmen Who Object.

Mr. Holman has not figured so prominently as an objector in this Congress, writes a Washington correspondent of the New York Mail and Express. Several, both in this and the forty-eighth Congress, tried to follow his example and gain a similar reputation, but none have succeeded in putting the fine touch upon it that he did. He has exercised a power of nice discrimination, which has prevented his becoming universally hated, as several who have tried to follow in his footsteps without appreciating his motives. Though he has been the cause of many disappointments, and has called forth momentary resentment, he has the entire respect of the house, and is never accused of captiousness. His was an original crusade upon jobs, and he cultivated a new field of fame, which none of his imitators have been able to cultivate. In fact, these imitators have brought "objecting" into disrepute, and that, probably, is the reason he cares less to occupy that position. He has probably not made more objections this session than any other member. As an expert, he is probably disgusted at the failures. An objection from him seldom provoked resentment. He had a genius for the role he undertook. He objected to the passage of a measure when he knew it was improper, or thought it likely to be. Prove to him that it is all right and he does not oppose a bill.

Members have a habit of retaliating upon each other in this matter, and generally a member who is about to ask a favor of the house is careful not to interpose an objection to a similar request by another. Mr. Holman apparently has never been influenced by this consideration, and has seldom been retaliated upon. He has frequently been known to check a bill by his objection and immediately afterward to ask and obtain unanimous consent to take up some measure in which he was interested.

Mr. Weller, in the last house, who was envious of the great objector's fame, succeeded in getting the whole house down on him by objecting indiscriminately. Members chafed so under this persecution that they were thankful when he was not returned.

But Mr. Beach, of New York, who began to show some of these traits last session, stepped right into his place in this congress, and passes as the universal objector. He will object to any and everything, of a private or local character, where his one voice will have any effect. He occupies the first front seat on the Democratic side, right in front of the speaker's desk, and in the line of his eye; and enters his objection when he hears unanimous consent asked, frequently without raising his head. He always smiles immediately afterward and looks satisfied, which makes the disappointed members mad. Sometimes some of the stern old members who are in the habit of having the house respect their requests, will stand and look straight at him for many minutes, with a bitter, cutting sort of a glare, after an occurrence of this sort. He doesn't seem to mind it. It is probable that no request by Mr. Beach for unanimous consent would ever be granted, as too many members are waiting for a chance for retaliation, and the resolution which was introduced by Mr. Weaver the other day, and ruled out on account of its disrespectful wording, is said to have had reference to him in the preamble. Mr. Holman is a very modest man, given very much to blushing, and these things have driven him from the field. He devotes much more time to committee-work this session, and is not watching the house proceedings so closely.

Readers Never Skip a Line.

The President and wife have settled down to be old married folks, but we may expect for some time yet to be told that they take breakfast in the morning, that the bride appears "charmingly attired," and that the president wears his Prince Albert coat buttoned, with an occasional variation by being informed of removals from among the household servants for "offensive partisanship," and making new appointments without consulting our congressional delegation. Newspaper readers think the publicity given to movements of the bride and groom have been scandalous, but they never skip a line in reading the report, not a mother's son or daughter of them.

The People Like the President's Marriage.

The country newspapers afford a pretty accurate guage of the feelings which the great average of plain people entertain with regard to any matter of current public interest, and it is interesting to see how they look at the marriage of the President. "The ceremony in the White House was as simple as those usually taking place in our country and village homes," says a Vermont Republican weekly, and the remark is purely a representative one.—Springfield Republican.

It was lucky for Frank Andrews, head miller in the Pueblo flouring mills, that he was a man of muscle. His coat caught in some machinery gearing and he was on the point of being drawn to his death when he caught a beam and clung to it while he was stripped of coat, vest, and undergarments. His watch was ground to powder, and he himself was badly bruised.

Will A. Aldrich, formerly a compositor in the Sentinel office, but now of the Inter Ocean, Chicago, is visiting relatives and friends in Charlevoix this week.

Miss Ruth Miller lies very low, with death expected at any moment, from a complication of diseases which baffles the skill of a number of the best physicians of this region.

Regular services including Sunday school and Thursday evening prayer meeting are now being held by the Baptist society in Green's hall over F. W. Craine & Co.'s store.

W. S. Johnson, of Sutton's Bay, was in town this week and could not overcome the temptation to eat strawberries and ice cream with the Congregationalists on Monday evening.

With the pinnacles, cresting, gables, and other ornaments erected and covered with bright colored paints, A. D. Cruickshank's house is now one of the most attractive in Charlevoix.

Among the passengers on the Friant Wednesday morning were H. W. Page, of Kalamazoo, Geo. Weaver and Miss Flo Hyland of Reed City, and Dr. H. P. Snyder, of Traverse City.

The ladies of the Baptist church will have a dinner on the 3d, at the store in Dr. Lewis building, near the bridge. Ice cream, strawberries, lemonade, etc., wille be served during the day.

As chairman of the committee of arrangements for the Fourth of July celebration, L. D. Bartholomew proposes to leave nothing undone which will in any manner add to the interest of the day.

The resort hand book for 1886 is an improvement over previous issues in many ways. Secretary Bardeen is a worker for the resort, and through their hand-book he is doing a good thing for Charlevoix.

Frank P. Cook, connected with the reporterial staff of the Grand Rapids Daily Democrat, made us a brief call on Monday. Frank was a fellow compositor in the state printing office at Lansing, five years ago.

The upper rooms of E. H. Green's block is now completed. In addition to the hall, occupied by the Baptists as a place of worship, he has two fine office rooms in front. The whole makes one of the best blocks in Charlevoix.

W. B. Bacon, who has for some months past worked in Charlevoix at odd jobs as a builder, has accepted an engagement as foreman of construction under the contractors for the new state prison at Marquette, to continue about three years, or until completed.

The fish tugs in Lake Michigan are being tied up owing to the scarcity of fish. The fishermen complain of sawdust in the lake, but we are told the main cause is they have used small mesh nets and caught in the past a great many small fish.—Cheboygan Democrat.

It is reported that the Boyne river was never so generous in giving up her speckled beauties as this year. It is a very common occurrence for local sports to bring in from 65 to 72 of the finny tribe in a few hours of an afternoon's sojourn along her banks, some of which have weighed 1½ pounds.

Our esteemed contemporary having advertised with a good deal of apparent satisfaction 6,000 impressions of job work in one week, we would state for those interested that the Journal job press printed 4,625 impressions of work last Friday afternoon and Saturday, in lots of 500 and less, and it don't run by steam, either.

Our deal with the Dr. Bosanko Medicine Co., whose locals have been running in the Journal during the past year, have been very pleasant. Promptly on the last day of each quarter they have remitted a New York draft for the amount due. A firm which deals in this manner must certainly have good goods to back them up.

Mrs. Sullivan, of Beaver Island, had quite an experience for her a few days ago. She is 62 years of age, and has just taken her first ride on the cars. She came to the island by boat 33 years ago, and has never left her home but once since. Her enjoyment of her car journey was somewhat marred by the constant fear she experienced that the cars would blow up and kill her.—Herald.

A correspondent of the Grand Rapids Democrat, writing from East Jordan, says that the new postmaster, F. E. Boosinger, is now well settled in the duties of his office and is generally well liked by the public. The postoffice will be removed about July 1st next to a new building being erected for the purpose on Main street, north of its present site.

The Northern Michigan Line of steamers, consisting of the propellers Lawrence and Champlain, has been transferred by the Seymours to P. J. Klein, of Milwaukee, and Edward Burke, who has been acting as engineer of the Lawrence. The line will be maintained and the boats operated as usual. The purchased price has not been made known as yet. The Champlain and Lawrence were formerly a part of Chamberlain's old Northern Transit Line, which ran between Chicago and Ogdensburg. It was founded when the Welland Canal was a small but important waterway, and boats had to be constructed after certain plans in order to navigate it successfully. Chamberlain hit upon a model for his vessels which was superior to anything ever built. They were excellent carriers, good sea boats, and had a prestige which no other line ever achieved on the lakes. But the new Welland sealed its fate, and it went to pieces.—Cheboygan Democrat.

Death of Mrs. John S. Dixon.

Mrs. Phebe Dixon, wife of John S. Dixon, died Tuesday afternoon, after a short illness, aged 66 years.

Mrs. Dixon was one of the earliest pioneers of Charlevoix, and a notice of her life, as she deserves, must necessarily be deferred till next week.

The funeral services are held at the house to day, at two o'clock, conducted by her pastor, Rev. C. F. Van Anken.

Cure for Piles.

Piles are frequently preceded by a sense of weight in the back, loins and lower part of the abdomen, causing the patient to suppose he has some affection of the kidneys or neighboring organs. At times, symptoms of indigestion are present, flatulency, uneasiness of the stomach, etc. A moisture, like perspiration, producing a very disagreeable itching, after getting warm, is a common attendant. Blind, Bleeding and Itching Piles yield at once to the application of Dr. Bosanko's Pile Remedy, which acts directly upon the parts affected, absorbing the Tumors, allaying the intense itching, and effecting a permanent cure. Price 50 cents. Sold by Geo. W. Crouter. 152

The Great German Doctor.

The remarkable phase in the practice of Dr. Peter W. Schmidt (frequently called Dr. Peter) is, he never asked one to describe their disease, his intuitive perceptions being so strong he can tell any one their trouble without asking a question. His success is phenomenal. His practice enormous. He is sought after by hundreds wherever he goes, because he cures when every physician and remedy has failed. The giving of his great medicine, Golden Seal Bitters, which has made his great success, to the world marks a new era in medicine. Blood, liver, kidney, and stomach disorders yield to this master of disease, and its wonderful cures are regarded as phenomenal, but the germ of faith ever says, "What has been may be again." We say to the sick and discouraged give Golden Seal Bitters a trial. It is all we ask. They will speak for themselves. Sold by Perry Weed and Dr. G. W. Crouter.

BUTTER AND EGGS WANTED

THE KEEPSAKE KISS.

BY NATHAN D. URNER.

Fare thee well, and fare thee sweetly!
And, since we must shortly sever,
Name some keepsake that shall meetly
Symbolize our love forever.
Gaud of gold or costly jewel,
Which, my true-love, shall it be?
"Ah!" she murmurs, "that were cruel,
These would be unworthy thee."

Name it, then, before we sunder—
Gift that ne'er will fade or perish.
Is there naught on earth or under
That for love of me would'st cherish?
Over it to thrill and linger
When my face is far away?
"Yes!" and the uplifted finger
Bids me listen to her say.

"Give me but one sacred kiss, love,
And while on my lips it hovers
Breathe a silent vow by this, love,
Ne'er while heaven the round earth covers
To bestow on other woman
What by right belongs to me;
So, with love intense and human,
Still my heart shall beat for thee."

Angel wife! so much to offer,
For a gift so poor and simple,
When each kiss my soul shall proffer
Mouth, cheek, brow, or charming dimple
Can but breathe its worship goutly—
Love, faith, hope, and truth eterne,
If thy heart but list intensely
To the words that live and burn.

Take, then, with this kiss that settles
On thy lips' imperial blossom
What I pledge between the petals
To thy pure and saintly bosom—
Faithfulness to thee completely,
Ne'er from thy fond heart to stray;
Fare thee well, and fare thee sweetly!
Now, my love, I must away.

THE COLONEL'S STORY.

BY CAPTAIN JAMES MONTFORD.

"No dog was at the threshold, great or small;
No pigeon on the roof—no household creature,
No cat demurely dozing on the wall,
Not one domestic feature.

"The centipede along the threshold crept,
The cobweb hung across its mazy tangle,
And in its winding-sheet the maggot slept,
At every nook and angle."
—Hood.

"The person who passed through the war without meeting adventures which thrilled his blood, or mysteries which chilled it, must have been a very queer individual."

"We all met with adventures enough, Colonel," I replied; "but they flitted past so vaguely that very little is remembered by the great majority. What was noticed has now become historical. Every table groans beneath the weight of that great mass."

"Umph!" said he, sitting down in his chair. "But what is to become of the mass of events which the historians of to-day would swear at, eh?"

"That must furnish entertainment for those who will listen. But I see you have a story; I'm not one of the sneerers, I promise you."

"Well," said the old gentleman, laughingly, "the tale will diminish in the telling, but I will relate it plainly."

"There was an old ruined house upon the plantation of a gentleman named Murray, in Tennessee, which had gained a celebrity for being the harboring place of the spirit of a giant soldier, who was said to have fallen under disgraceful circumstances during the War of Independence.

"The gentleman who owned the place at the date I am speaking of disclaimed all knowledge of the ghastly warrior, and, indeed, scouted the idea altogether.

"The house, which I shall attempt to describe after a moment, had been erected by a gentleman of French descent called Gaston; but whether that was a family name or not I do not know.

"According to the story, he had two sons, and, as very often happens in romances, they both loved a lady, the daughter of a neighboring thane.

"The elder son was unsuccessful in his suit, his brother marrying the lady and bringing her home to his father's house.

"As might naturally be expected, the disappointed suitor became very jealous of his brother's good fortune, and, being of a fiery disposition, his anger rankled into a stern determination to be revenged.

"Both young men were patriotic, and immediately joined the revolutionary forces at the first ringing of the bell of freedom.

"Gaston, as I shall call the elder, concealed his hatred from his brother; but, watching his opportunity, killed him.

"Accounts differ as to the circumstances, but the act was so cautiously carried out that no one suspected Gaston of the crime except his brother's wife, who was probably in possession of knowledge which satisfied her as to the real assassin.

"Soon after his brother's death Gaston returned to the plantation to pass a few weeks with the bereaved family.

"Then it was that his brother's wife accused him distinctly of the crime, and warned him of exposure as soon as his mother, who had become very ill upon receiving news of her son's death, recovered, and was able to sustain this still more terrible disclosure.

"The several narrators whom I have heard relate the legend give a very full account of the scene, and Gaston's uncomfortable position after the accusation.

"However, upon finding that neither threats nor promises could restrain her tongue, he watches his opportunity until he finds her one night in a solitary part of the mansion, when he strangles her neatly, and buries the corpse in the cellar beneath the house.

"There is great excitement the next day, and a strict search is instituted, but without a satisfactory result, and the family at last decide that the young lady has, in a moment of mental disorder, thrown herself into the lake (a very beautiful sheet of water, which I have seen) not far distant from the plantation.

"Soon after, Gaston returns to the army; but his good fortune has deserted him. His guilty conscience preys upon his body and mind, and in a slight skirmish he displays the most unmistakable cowardice.

"As a fitting close to his career he is court-martialed, found guilty of cowardice and treason, and executed by martial law.

"Such is the substance of the story I have heard related several times. The negroes who dwell within a dozen miles of the ruined house firmly believe the legend, with all its embellishments, and no sum of money would bribe them to enter the house after nightfall, and even under the full light of the sun they look upon the place with awe.

"In 1862 I was stationed for the space of three months at a point about half a mile from the Gaston ruin, and passed it regularly several times a week.

"It was a low, weather-beaten structure, entirely dismantled, and overgrown with creeping vegetation, which was fostered by the dampness of its situation; for it had been built in a hollow, but little above the level of the lake, which was about a mile distant.

"It extended back for a considerable distance, but had, in the daytime at least, nothing romantic in its appearance.

"I often wished to pay a visit to the inside, but leisure was wanting for a long time.

"But one afternoon, shortly before sundown, I was returning to my barracks by the road which passed the house, when one of those sudden thunder-storms so common in the country arose.

"I was entirely unprovided for it, and as the huge drops pattered upon my head, while the play of lightning overhead was startling from its intensity, I forced my horse through the thin hedge that fenced the premises.

"The ruin now bore a different aspect. The bright flashes of lightning seemed to burn their way through the walls for an instant, only to be followed by gloom still more terrible.

"I felt a tremor of fear as I dragged the unwilling steed in through the broken walls, and I was not made more comfortable by the groaning of timbers, and falling wood inside.

"Leading the horse into one corner, where he would be protected by the wall from the full force of the storm, I crouched down at his side.

"The storm which followed was terrible; the rain fell in sheets, the thunder was almost deafening, and the wind seemed determined to tear the crime-concealing walls from their foundations.

"My horse was a young animal, and had become very excitable. I found myself liable to be crushed by him at any moment, and was at last forced to leave the shelter which his body promised, and creep away through the darkness to some further corner of the building, out of the reach of his heels.

"The floor was full of pitfalls; but, taking a quick glance at my surroundings by the momentary flashes of lightning, I neared the opposite side, where a portion of the upper floor which still remained would shield me from the storm.

"Suddenly there was a blaze of flame, under which I shrank back appalled.

"It came just in time, however, for in front of me, and yawning before my feet, was a large ragged hole in the broken floor.

"I at the same instant caught a glimpse of a tall figure not more than three feet distant.

"His features became so impressed upon my mind in that instantaneous glance that, had I known him for years, the knowledge would have added nothing to his description.

"A very tall man, with a dark face, exceedingly handsome, but with wild-looking eyes, that curdled the blood in my veins. I shivered with apprehension, and, with a scarcely human cry, the specter, as in that fearful moment I thought it to be, leaped across the chasm and seized me by the throat.

"I struggled with the desperation of madness to release myself; but, whatever his appearance might be, the muscles seemed formed of steel.

"He forced me backward toward the hole; but the instant I was falling the floor gave way, and we fell downward into the gloomy cellar beneath.

* * * * * *

"The storm did not continue long," said the Colonel, after a short silence, "and the horse found his way out of the building and to his quarters.

"When I awoke from my faint I found half a dozen of the boys bending over me.

"I lay upon my back in a pool of water in the cellar of Gaston's house.

"I related my story before I was well out of the place, and from the ill-disguised grins with which it was heard I realized that my veracity was suspected. I never related my difficulties of the night afterward.

"It is my opinion that the tall specter was some adherent of the Southern cause, who had sought shelter there for the same reasons as myself.

"At any rate, it added another legend to the house of Gaston."

THE BATTLE OF SHILOH.

Reunions of army organizations call to mind old associations, and thrill me often with recollections of my experiences during the war. I have noticed since its close the popular impression exists that at Shiloh the entire army was routed, and fell back in the fore part of the day, and that no part of that grand army held the enemy to exceed two hours.

Now, sir, from my standpoint, in common with a part of my brigade, members of the Seventy-first Ohio, Fifty-fifth Illinois, and the Fifty-fourth Ohio; we saw matters in a very different light, and as no historian or General has done us justice for what we did on April 6, I deem it my duty to correct the impression, and let the world know what a mere skirmish line accomplished without reserves or artillery.

Our camp was amid a peach orchard in bloom. We had been there some three weeks, doing fancy band-box duty. As a few straws or leaves accumulated in camp a detail was made to clear it. Hence we had made no preparation for the reception of the enemy. Although the flower of the rebel army lay some twenty miles away, in command of one of their ablest generals, we had no pickets out.

It was quite early on that memorable lovely morning of April 6, 1862, that heavy cannonading was heard far down to the right from our camp. It increased rapidly and seemed to near us. My brigade consisted of the Seventy-first Ohio on the right, the Fifty-fifth Illinois in the center, and the Fifty-fourth Ohio on the left, and was the First Brigade of Sherman's Division. When we took our places at the front our brigade was isolated from the rest of the division, and sent to the extreme left flank to guard a ford on Lick Creek. The remainder of the division was sent to the right. Our position was on the nearest ridge, a little over on the north side. Every part commanded the ford. The creek ran in a northeasterly direction into the Tennessee, and our line was nearly parallel with that river for some miles. A ledge of rocks on the south side rendered it impossible for an army in column to cross except at this ford.

At 9:30 a. m. we could begin to hear musketry, and we were all in line, eager for the fray. A 10 a. m. we were saluted by a twelve-pound battery, on the bluff; we hugged mother earth, but they threw the shot into the tree-tops. Very soon a little past 10 a. m., General Chalmers, at the head of his brigade, passed at the ford and did not attempt to cross, but moved down the creek until the center of his command rested on our left flank, and concentrated his fire upon our line. We had to get out of that, as a "military necessity," or soon they would have saved us the trouble. In that we were outgeneraled.

We moved over to the next ridge north. He moved back and crossed the ford, and ordered a halt in a valley, at some twenty rods distant. Now, reader, our skirmish line was strung out the length of two regiments, the Fifty-fifth Illinois and the Fifty-fourth Ohio, and they covered our front with a full battle line, with a gap on our right, left by the Seventy-first Ohio. Such was the situation in David Stuart's brigade when the ball opened.

David Stuart was acting as Brigadier; Scott, Lieutenant Colonel; Oscar Malmburg was acting Colonel of the Fifty-fifth Illinois; C. F. Thurston Adjutant, and N. P. Sanger Major. I saw our position would allow them to flank us easily. My position in line happened to be in the rear of an oak tree four feet thick. It might have been ordained to grow there before the world began for our benefit. It proved a splendid "minie halter," and several stepped in rear of it to load and deployed to fire. The rebs were partly ambushed by young bushes and dead leaves, the color of their uniforms, so that after the first fire I could see naught but a line of smoke, although the musketry was a solid roar, mingled with peals from the batteries.

I will notice some incidents as I proceed, as they occurred. After a half hour they seemed to fall back, and our company's officers rushed forth and called to us to "Come on, they are retreating." Soon a volley from the second relief sent them back. The enemy was relieved at intervals of half hours all through.

Some of the boys in my company had boasted before they were near the enemy that when they should be in action we would not see them crouching behind logs and stumps, but they would stand out in bold relief. Glancing to my right I saw Sergeant S. D. Crouchbrest. I said, "Stephen, you are a splendid mark." At that instant he fell, and such was the fate of nearly all who did likewise.

As the south wind cleared the smoke, I saw that many brave boys had fallen. One of my shoes was covered by clotted blood. I looked to the rear, and there Mr. Ford lay, his head in reach of my feet, a mass of blood. I said to myself he is surely dead, but he afterward turned up, recovered.

After some two and a half hours of fighting a breeze cleared away the smoke in front, and I saw some eight or ten rebs in a clump of bushes flaunting their colors. It made my blood boil, and I said now is my opportunity. I brought my gun to the side of the tree and fired twelve well-directed rounds at the color-bearer, praying he would take one or more of them to heart, and at last the colors fell to earth.

The battle raged and both parties stood where they did at first. I and nearly all of our men had eighty rounds of balls, and by this time our boys had acquired confidence and felt that we could hold the fort if the good Lord or somebody would bring cartridges, for ours were growing few, and the rebs kept up a bold front. Our water had given out and there was not a cracker in the party. We had left them all in camp for the Johnnies, and I doubt if they thanked us for them.

After six hours of terrible fighting our skirmish line said, "If you come over this line you will come over us dead." I noticed the firing in parts of our line was less. I knew then some were out of cartridges. I had three left. I looked around and found I was alone on the line; all had leaped to the rear. I fired my last ball and followed them, and found them trying to drink a creek dry. I helped them. We then moved up the steep hill, Indian file. Our company cook fell beside a big tree and we left him for dead, but he turned up all right in due time.

When we were half-way up they showered us with balls. On the top of the ridge Colonel Malmburg formed us, a handful of boys, in a hollow square. We all thought we were to be sacrificed to the enemy, but as soon as they saw the square they ceased firing. We remained a short time, until we saw them ranging a battery at us, when Colonel Malmburg moved us slowly toward the landing, getting something to eat on the way, and we finally met the cheering news that General Nelson, of Buell's command, had arrived across the river, and would cross as fast as possible. Cheers rang through the forest.

It was then near five o'clock, and all was quiet in the woods, as all the balance of the army had fallen back hours before. We moved back to the deep ravine that Grant speaks of as the place where the second attempt to turn his flank occurred, and we supported the siege guns on the line a half mile from the landing. This line was established as a military necessity quite early in the day, as the army commenced to fall back, under orders of Webster, Chief of Artillery, and was composed of guns in sections. I say there was no water in this ravine as per General Grant's story.

On Saturday, at 6 p. m., it began to rain, and the rebs made their debut across the run at the same hour, and formed a line. Our folks did not molest them until they opened with some twelve-pounders. Two volleys and then a volley from our entire line silenced them, and we heard no more from our neighbors.

There was no sleep for us that night, as every fifteen minutes our gunboats on the river sent a shell creeping through the tree-tops, while the rain poured in solid sheets, and at daylight it was still raining. At 8 a. m. we were relieved, and near the landing we had the best breakfast I ever ate.

Roll-call told a sad tale; our company left camp Sunday morning with fifty-seven men, and to answer in their place now were but nine. After all was over we were introduced to Stuart as his "immortal line," and all the regiment was drawn up in line before Sherman's headquarters, and received quite a demonstration.

A few days after, part of my brigade marched out in front eight miles to a rebel hospital. As we rested in a valley a flag of truce came over the hill, borne by some dozen rebels, members of the regiment that engaged us on Sunday, the 6th. We soon entered into conversation about the battle, and many questions were asked; in fact, all hatred was forgotten, and it was the most interesting inquiry meeting I ever attended. They asked what kind of guns made a hole in them big enough to throw a rabbit through. They were most eager to know if our men were not all in line on the ridge. They exploited to us that some half hour after the ball opened they urged Chalmers to chase that skirmish line and take it. He paid no attention until they grew desperate, when he said it was simply a Yankee trick; that the deep ravine in our rear was full of Yanks, and we were trying to pull the wool over their eyes and draw them in to charge. They also said Chalmers had orders to take his command to the left flank of the Union army, and wipe out a small brigade at the ford, then to go on to the landing, and destroy all the transport trains, and all the appurtenances of Lincoln's army. He would then have been in the rear, the front would have been taken care of, and they would have had it all in a nutshell.—Scotty, in Chicago Ledger.

Foster, the Medium.

Some years ago, when Foster was giving sittings on Girard street at $5 a sit, he was visited by a friend of mine, a man of intellect and common sense, and yet when he came away he was in a completely dazed condition of mind, not knowing what to think about what he had witnessed. Let me relate one thing that amazed him. He was ushered into a small reception-room and told to write his name on a piece of paper and with his own hands seal it in an envelope. He sat down before the only table in the room and wrote his name—we will assume it to be John Smith—as directed, taking care to so conceal the writing that it could not be seen from above or from any other direction. He placed it in an envelope, sealed it and held it in one hand. The attendant then withdrew. In a few moments Foster entered and eyed his visitor with a piercing glance, as though reading his innermost thoughts. Suddenly extending his right hand, he ejaculated, "How are you, Mr. John Smith?"

The visitor started back in surprise, as he was certain Foster had never seen him before. "How do you know my name?" he wonderingly inquired. In deep tones Foster replied: "It is written in my blood." With that he bared his left arm to the elbow, and seizing the still sealed envelope from Mr. Smith's hand, crumpled it vigorously over the under and tender part of his arm. Over that member spread a glow through which bright crimson lines appeared, and in a few moments, emblazoned on the arm in fiery letters of blood, was the name of "John Smith." The amazed visitor, at Foster's invitation, tried to wash the letters out with water, but the more he rubbed the brighter they became, until he was convinced—which was the fact—that the letters were beneath the skin and were caused by the man's own blood. Wonderful you say, and that is what I said when I first heard of it. But I didn't believe it was supernatural, for the very simple reason that if disembodied spirits are roaming around us they have certainly something better to do than to be writing names on men's arms in order to enable a lazy scoundrel to put a five-dollar note in his swelling purse. Now that I know how the trick was done I am surprised only at its simplicity.

In the first place, Foster has to ascertain his visitor's name. This he did by a simple device. When Mr. Smith sat at the only table in the room he was unaware that beneath the writing pad was what is called "copying paper," an oiled and blackened sheet, which, when placed beneath the paper one is writing upon, conveys the impression to another piece of paper beneath it. The same kind of paper is used in making duplicate copies in type writing. A hard pencil was placed where Mr. Smith would pick it up, and in order to write his name he unconsciously bore down upon the copying paper. The attendant expertly withdrew the copy and carried it to his employer. Now to prepare for the blood act.

Bare your arm to the elbow. In the right hand hold a thin piece of steel, but with a slightly rounded edge that will not cut. As you probably do not possess such an instrument, take a portion of a very stiff visiting or business card, and bearing its edges rather hard upon the under portion of your arm, follow the outlines of any letters you choose. The result will be barely-discernible white lines that soon pass away. Five minutes later, with your hand on a crumpled piece of paper, rub that portion of your arm as vigorously as you can, and you will be surprised when you see the letters you have outlined appearing beneath the skin in the full vividness of your own blood. Now you see what Foster did. He marked the name "John Smith" on his arm, drew down his shirt sleeve, put on his coat, and walked into the reception room. His rubbing the envelope over the arm was simply intended to delude John Smith with the belief that his name was conveyed from the inclosed paper to Foster's blood. Simple, isn't it? Yet it is far more complex than most of the mediumistic tricks. There are endless varieties of the deception.

HOW STRANGE it is that ideas in various parts of the globe are so contradictory! For instance, take the question of girls. In spite of our advancing ideas we have a general conviction that girls should not be put to very hard work. We shield them if we can. In Asia and Africa, on the contrary, in spite of all, we are always hearing of lazy lives of women in those countries, an old belief prevails that they were born to labor. The same is true in many parts of Germany. In Turkestan and on the Tartar steppes the Kirghese sultanas and their daughters, in whose veins flows the blood of long lines of kings, still milk the sheep, cows, and goats, and perform the menial duties of the household. They reverse the order of things. The mother wears silk and the daughter calico; the mother cultivates accomplishments and the daughter does the drudgery; in fact, they really consider the mother entitled to the best of everything! Such is it to be uncivilized. There the mother is at home in the drawing-room and the daughter in the kitchen, and we would look in vain for the fashionable and well-educated girl to scorn her mother. What a blessed state of affairs!

ONE of the most characteristic stories told about Mr. W. E. Forster turns on his whist-playing. Mr. Payn, the novelist, is an enthusiastic whist-player, while Mr. Forster only "joined in" when some one was wanted to make up a rubber. On one occasion they were partners, and Mr. Forster was playing execrably. For a time Mr. Payn kept his temper, as in the circumstances good players find it hard to do; but at last he broke down and looked things unutterable. His partner saw what was wrong, and came to Mr. Payn's rescue. "Say anything you like," he said, genially; "if you think it would relieve you, call me Buckshot!"—St. James' Gazette.

SOME papers are criticising the President because in a recent message he used the phrase "innocuous desuetude." We do not think this is fair. If Mr. Cleveland wants to turn clear back to the hind part of the dictionary and take out a pair of such words it isn't any one's business. There is no proof that he skipped any of the book in hunting them up; doubtless he has studied it all the way through till he came to them. We have ourself explored back in that part of the book to a certain extent and can say that the President might have done much worse. In the comparatively unsettled territorial portions of Webster's dictionary, chiefly used as stock ranges for the elephas Indicus, the chrysochloris capensis, and the thin and hardy pterodactyl, there are words which it would have been much more difficult for a large man like him to have caught and halter broken than "innocuous desuetude," and also ones which would have had a much worse effect on the Senate. Let the President continue his great camp hunt among the fastnesses of the English language undisturbed.

Recognition of Favors.

Gratitude is a grace by far too rarely found. The story of the lepers in a book which reveals not only more of the divine nature, but more of human nature, than any other, represents the usual sad disproportion of gratitude in the world. The lepers were peculiar in the misfortune of leprosy, but not peculiar in the other misfortune of ingratitude. Every feeling grows by expression; hence we should strive to increase our appreciation of favors by every possible acknowledgement of them. Yet a great many favors are habitually accepted by us as a matter of course, and if not entirely unacknowledged, are very carelessly and indifferently received.

A domestic said once, in speaking of a deceased mistress with respect and affection, "It was a pleasure to do anything for her, for whatever it was, great or small, she always had a bright smile, and a hearty 'Thank you.'"

"Why do you suppose Madam B—— has so many friends?" asked a young girl about an aged lady who received a great many visits and tokens of remembrance. "Everybody seems to like her."

"I can give you one reason," answered her aunt; "she is always grateful for every kindness, and shows that she appreciates even the slightest favor,—a flower, the loan of a book, whatever it may be—by a prompt and heartfelt recognition of any attention, any personal thoughtfulness on the part of others."

IF you are a wise man, you will treat the world as the moon treats it. Show only one side of yourself, seldom show yourself too much at a time, and let what you show be calm, cool, and polished. But look at every side of the world.

AN OPIUM EATER'S STORY.

Crawling Over Red-Hot Bars of Iron in a Fearful Frenzy—A Scientific Invention and Its Results.

Cincinnati Times-Star.

"Opium or death!"

This brief sentence was fairly hissed into the ear of a prominent druggist on Vine street by a person who, a few years ago well off, is to-day a hopeless wreck.

One can scarcely realize the sufferings of an opium victim. De Quincey has vividly portrayed it. But who can fitly describe the joy of the rescued victim?

H. C. Wilson, of Loveland, O., formerly with March, Harwood & Co., manufacturing chemists of St. Louis, and of the well-known firm of H. C. Wilson & Co., chemists, formerly of this city, gave our reporter yesterday a bit of thrilling personal experience in this line.

"I have crawled over red hot bars of iron and coals of fire," he said, "in my agony during an opium frenzy. The very thought of my sufferings freezes my blood and chills my bones. I was then eating over 30 grains of opium daily."

"How did you contract the habit?"

"Excessive business cares broke me down and my doctor prescribed opium! That is the way nine-tenths of cases commence. When I determined to stop, however, I found I could not do it.

"You may be surprised to know," he said, "that two-fifths of the slaves of morphine and opium are physicians. Many of these I met. We studied our cases carefully. We found out what the organs were in which the appetite was developed and sustained; that no victim was free from a demoralized condition of these organs; that the hope of a cure depended entirely upon the degree of vigor which could be imparted to them. I have seen patients, while undergoing treatment, compelled to resort to opium again to deaden the horrible pain in those organs. I marvel how I ever escaped."

"Do you mean to say, Mr. Wilson, that you have conquered the habit?"

"Indeed I have."

"Do you object to telling me how?"

"No, sir. Studying the matter with several opium-eating physicians, we became satisfied that the appetite for opium was located in the kidneys and liver. Our next object was to find a specific for restoring those organs to health. The physicians, much against their code, addressed their attention to a certain remedy and became thoroughly convinced on its scientific merits alone that it was the only one that could be relied upon in every case of disordered kidneys and liver. I thereupon began using it and, supplementing it with my own special treatment, finally got fully over the habit. I may say that the most important part of the treatment is to get those organs first into good working condition, for in them the appetite originates and is sustained, and in them over ninety per cent of all other human ailments originate.

"For the last seven years this position has been taken by the proprietors of that remedy, and finally it is becoming an acknowledged scientific truth among the medical profession; many of them, however, do not openly acknowledge it, and yet, knowing they have no other scientific specific, their code not allowing them to use it, they buy it upon the quiet and prescribe it in their own bottles."

"As I said before, the opium and morphine habits can never be cured until the appetite for them is routed out of the kidneys and liver. I have tried everything,—experimented with everything, and as the result of my studies and investigation, I can say I know nothing can accomplish this result but Warner's safe cure."

"Have others tried your treatment?"

"Yes, sir, many; and all who have followed it fully have recovered. Several of them who did not first treat their kidneys and liver for six or eight weeks, as I advised them, completely failed. This form of treatment is always insisted upon for all patients, whether treated by mail or at the Loveland Opium Institute, and supplemented by our special private treatment, it always cures."

Mr. Wilson stands very high wherever known. His experience is only another proof of the wonderful and conceded power of Warner's safe cure over all diseases of the kidneys, liver, and blood, and the diseases caused by derangements of these organs. We may say that it is very flattering to the proprietors of Warner's safe cure that it has received the highest medical indorsement, and, after persistent study, it is admitted by scientists that there is nothing in materia medica for the restoration of these great organs that equals it in power. We take pleasure in publishing the above statements coming from so reliable a source as Mr. Wilson and confirming by personal experience what we have time and again published in our columns. We also extend to the proprietors our hearty congratulations on the results wrought.

One by One They Fade.

It seems that Lucretia Borgia was not a murderess, as the world has always believed, but an amiable woman, a loving wife and a gentle and affectionate mother. Thus the mists of error that shroud the past are being dispersed by the light of modern investigation. We will not be surprised to learn some of these days that Nero was a philanthrophist who founded an orphan asylum.—Boston Courier.

Six things are requisite to create a happy home. Integrity must be the architect, and tidiness the upholsterer. It must be warmed with affection, and lighted up by cheerfulness, and industry must be the ventilator, renewing the atmosphere, and bringing in fresh salubrity day by day; while over all, as a protecting glory and canopy, nothing will suffice except the glory of heaven.

THE propriety and good taste of doing away with abbreviated names among women is fast growing in favor, and the good old fashion of giving the full name is regarded as the correct and dignified thing. Mollie, and Mattie, and Tillie, and Maggie are again Mary, Martha, Matilda, and Margaret—stately names, all of them, and full of significance, whereas their diminutives are silly and meaningless; and women are gradually awakening to the fact that it is far more elegant to reserve these pet names, if they be used at all, for the household, and to sign themselves always in addressing those outside this little circle with the full name they received at the baptismal fount. In this respect our ancestors showed a proper amount of dignity, and it would be well now if the old form of addressing women as Mistress Ann Page, Mistress Catherine Smith, etc., were revived. The present custom of retaining the maiden name as a middle name after marriage, and the use of the husband's Christian name by widows, are both sensible, as they identify the individual with a certain family.

Sharp Pangs Athwart the Forehead,

And in the muscles of the neck and shoulder, usually most violent after nightfall, are among the cheerful manifestations of neuralgia. It is an affection of the nerve intensified by a cold. Repose, bringing with it a cessation of pain, is induced by Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, which is a fine nerve tonic and tranquilizer. It is also a reliable means of checking rheumatism and gout. These maladies have always more or less to do with the kidneys that, when inactive, fail to throw off the impurities which engender them. The Bitters can be relied upon to renew a healthy and purifying action of the renal organs. Besides this, it gives tone to the stomach, liver, and bowels, and enriches the circulation. Appetite and sleep both profit by it, and it is a well-accredited means of fortifying the system against malaria. It hastens the recovery of strength by convalescents, mitigates the infirmities of age, and helps the constitutionally feeble.

A Southern Cure for Spring Fever.

Jest go an' git you a han'ful of dogwood, a han'ful of cherry, and a han'ful of poplar bark. Then git you a little gran'sir graybeard root, and burn nine red corncobs—be shore and get red ones—an' save the ashes, an' beat all them barks an' roots an' ashes up fine. Then go to the blacksmith-shop and git a han'ful of clean cinders, an' git a little piece o' brimstone, an' a little piece o' sulphur, an' a little piece o' saltpeter, an' beat them all up fine. Then mix them two powders together, and take a teaspoonful three times a day for nine days, an' then rest nine days, an' then begin again an' take it nine days; an' do this three times. By that time you'll have it all tuck up, an' you'll be as fat as a hog.—Georgia Farmer, in Atlanta Constitution.

One among the many eminent church dignitaries who have given their public endorsement to the wonderful efficacy of St. Jacobs Oil, in case of rheumatism and other painful ailments, is the Right Reverend Bishop Gilmour, Cleveland, Ohio.

"You c-can't get b-blood out of a turnip," said the stuttering bartender, as he landed a beer mug on the head of a defaulting tramp, "but I b-bel eve I c-can out of a b-beat;" and then he grabbed the offender by the throat.

"You hadn't artichoke me that way," gasped the sufferer; "lettuce part friends."

"Friends n-nothing," yelled the bartender; "I can't stand y-your c-cabbaging. You c-cumber the saloon and make me m-melancholy. D-don't you c-come in here a-g-gain."

"Oh, how you've made my spine ache!" whined the tramp, as he went out into the cold and pitiless world.—Peck's Sun.

Thomas Carlyle,

the great Scotch author, suffered all his life with dyspepsia, which made his life miserable and caused his best and truest friends not a little pain because of his fretfulness. Dyspepsia generally arises from diseases of the liver, and as Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery" cures all diseases of this great gland, it follows that while all cannot be Carlyles, even with dyspepsia, all can be free from the malady, while emulating his virtues.

Lost Faith in Physicians.

There are innumerable instances where cures have been effected by SCOVILL'S SARSAPARILLA, or Blood and Liver Syrup, for all diseases of the blood, when they had been given over by their physicians. It is one of the best remedies ever offered to the public, and as it is prepared with the greatest care as a specific for certain diseases, it is no wonder that it should be more effectual than hastily written and carelessly prepared prescriptions. Take this medicine for all disorders arising from impure blood. It is endorsed by leading professional men.

How's Your Liver?

Is the Oriental salutation, knowing that good health cannot exist without a healthy Liver. When the Liver is torpid the Bowels are sluggish and constipated, the food lies in the stomach undigested, poisoning the blood; frequent headache ensues; a feeling of lassitude, despondency and nervousness indicate how the whole system is deranged. Simmons Liver Regulator has been the means of restoring more people to health and happiness by giving them a healthy Liver than any agency known on earth. It acts with extraordinary power and efficacy.

NEVER BEEN DISAPPOINTED.

As a general family remedy for Dyspepsia, Torpid Liver, Constipation, etc., I hardly ever use anything else, and have never been disappointed in the effect produced. It seems to be almost a perfect cure for all diseases of the Stomach and Bowels.

The March of Prohibition.

The cause of prohibition is marching on so rapidly that a few months seems to have changed the political atmosphere with an interest and importance that challenges our intelligence to account for the remarkable development.

Everybody seems proud of being associated with the prohibition movement, and this is creditable to the intelligence and common sense of the community, and is mostly due to a wide dissemination of the facts and arguments that have awakened conscientious convictions and Christian sentiment, all of which has opened a flood of light on the enormity of the evils that flow from this terrible curse of rum-selling. The people are fast coming to see that votes ought to represent conscience, and that our consciences do not find their incarnation in either of the old parties. And as the rum-seller cares only for votes and political indorsement of the legality of his business, the people can only secure their freedom from the curse of the liquor traffic through political methods, which means through a political party committed to prohibition first, last, and always.

Moral Heroism.

The idea of "throwing away votes!" At the very time your cause is numerically the weakest is the very time that your individual votes count the most. The party that triumphs by securing votes cast for it by voters who considered it a "choice of evils," will fall in disgrace, as individuals must fall who temporarily succeed by false pretenses. The voter who votes against his principles, upon considerations of expediency, involves a force for evil which is sure to return sooner or later, and torture his soul for time and eternity. Prohibition would bring more general prosperity and individual happiness than the success of any or all of the great political or moral questions of the day. The state, the home, the general government, commerce, trade, education—everything would be more secure and prosperous. Let us work, vote and pray for prohibition.—From Demorest's Monthly for July.

Forty editors from Texas recently on a press excursion proved to be all prohibitionists and only three smokers among them. No wonder the Lone Star state is "booming for temperance."

MORTGAGE SALE.

Whereas, default has been made in the payment of the money secured by a mortgage, made and dated the 4th day of December, in the year A. MORTGAGE SALE.—Default has been made in the payment of the interest money secured by a mortgage dated the 25th day of October, 1884, executed by Thomas J. Daily and Laura J. Daily, his wife, to Ellen U. Kirkland, which said mortgage was recorded in the office of the register of deeds of Charlevoix county, Michigan, on the 30th day of October, 1884, in liber 9 of mortgages, on page 456. And the said mortgagee having elected to consider the whole amount due because of said default, the amount claimed to be due at the date of this notice is the sum of five hundred and ninety-three dollars, principal and interest, and the further sum of thirty-five dollars as an attorney's fee, stipulated for in said mortgage, and no suit at law or in equity having been instituted to recover the debt so secured or any part thereof. Now, therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage and in pursuance of the statute, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises therein described, at public auction, to the highest bidder at the front door of Lewis' hall (that being the last place of holding the circuit court) in the village of Boyne City, Charlevoix county, Michigan, on the 24th day of September, 1886, at 11 o'clock in the forenoon. The premises are described in said mortgage as follows: All that certain piece or parcel of land situated in the township of Evangeline, county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan, and described as follows, viz: All the south west quarter (¼), section twenty-eight (28), township thirty-four (34), north of range six (6) west, except seventy-five and one-half acres heretofore sold and conveyed off from the north side of said quarter section above described.

Close of an Eventful Life.

Phebe Pratt Dixon, whose death we briefly announced last week, was born in Lyme, Conn., June 6, 1820. While yet a young lady, she removed to Ohio, and graduated from Oberlin college in 1845. On July 1st, 1846, she married John S. Dixon at Orwell, Ashtabula County, Ohio. From Ohio they removed to Michigan, and in May, 1855, located in Charlevoix, where they have ever since lived.

The trials of the early years in Charlevoix were in many respects different from pioneers in other places, but Mrs. Dixon's perseverence and courage was such as to overcome all obstacles and opposition, and she gave her husband such support and help as to make it possible to remain here and build a home, and raise an intelligent and honorable family.

Her educational and religious training in early life made her capable of taking the lead in all the early efforts to establish schools and churches in Charlevoix, and she was identified with every movement for the betterment of society.

She lived to see the wilderness surrounding her early home transformed into a beautiful and prosperous village, with her own home equal to the best in the comforts of this life.

In her last hours she received all the care and attention that loving hearts could suggest or willing hands accomplish.

The funeral services were held at the family residence last Wednesday afternoon, conducted by Rev. C. F. Van Auken, her pastor, and attended by a large number of relatives and friends.

Mr. Van Auken's text was a portion of the 25th verse of the eleventh chapter of John: "I am the resurrection and the life; he that believeth in me though he were dead, yet shall he live." It was a carefully prepared, argumentative sermon, teaching that man is immortal.

The discourse also contained a brief eulogy of Mrs. Dixon from a christian standpoint. She was a charter member of the Congregational church of Charlevoix, and was one of the oldest and strongest in the faith and in the solid work of the church. Singulary enough she is the first to be taken by death since the organization, though the society now numbers over sixty members. Mr. Van Auken related an incident to show her love for the church, and her willingness to do what she could for its success. When the question of candidates for a recent conference was under discussion, her name was proposed. She replied: "My family needs no at home, but if there is no one else to go, I will go. If anyone will go, I will contribute to their expenses, if necesary."

After Mr. Van Auken had finished his remarks, he called on Hon. Mr. Leach, of Traverse City, for his personal recollections of Mrs. Dixon.

Mr. Leach said he had known Mrs. Dixon for over thirty years. Having previously made the acquaintance of her husband, he called to see them on his first visit to northern Michigan, in October, 1855. They were then living in the log cabin just below the present residence, and only a short distance from the shore of Pine Lake. The solitude of the primeval forest had then scarcely been broken, there being, at that time, probably, not more than three or four families anywhere in the vicinity. He was greatly surprised to find in the midst of so remote and dense a forest, so intelligent and refined a lady as Mrs. Dixon. A college graduate, of thorough mental training, accustomed to refined and cultivated society, she was fitted to grace any circle in which she might be placed.

The story of the persecutions and trials which the family had endured as recounted to Mr. Leach at the time of that visit, was one of thrilling interest and few women could have borne them as courageously as did Mrs. Dixon. Being of a highly nervous and emotional nature, she suffered from them more keenly than many women would have done, but she never shrunk from what she regarded as duty. Duty was always performed without regard to consequences. When she saw what she ought to do, there was no hesitation in regard to the doing of it.

Mrs. Dixon was one of those model wives and mothers who feel deeply their responsibility for the happiness and welfare of husband and children. Not that she forgot or neglected her duty to the church, and society in general, but her home duties always lay near her heart and she performed them with remarkable fidelity and faithfulness.

On Mr. L.'s second visit Mrs. Dixon told with tears of the loss of a little girl that had passed away. The child, she said, was the one bright ray of sunshine that had lighted their forest home. But she bore all with christian resignation and fortitude, and went quietly and lovingly forward in the discharge of the duties and responsibilities of her position. It is no disparagement to the women of northern Michigan to say that hardly one in a thousand among them, probably, could go through such trials and hardships as fell to the lot of Mrs. Dixon, without becoming utterly discouraged and giving up the contest in despair.

As time went on and the country began to fill with settlers, the prospects brightened and there was much to cheer and reward her for past labors. And now, surrounded by loving friends and neighbors, with her life work well done, she has found rest. To weary ones like her there are few words so sweet as rest.

Mr. Leach and wife had come from Traverse City to join the immediate neighbors of the family in sympathizing with those that remain, and in bearing testimony to the high esteem in which they have long held Mrs. Dixon.

The Traverse Herald, whose editor has for years been a personal friend, said of Mrs. Dixon last week: "Mrs. Dixon lived to see their wild home of thirty years ago become one of the most beautiful spots in the whole region, and her family surrounded by all the comforts of civilization, her husband honored by repeated calls to high official positions, her family respected and prosperous, and herself deeply loved by a very large circle of friends throughout the entire region. Her death will be keenly felt by all who knew her, and especially by those who through all these long years have learned so well to appreciate her devotion to principle, her sterling worth, her amiable character, and kind, loving disposition. The sorrowing husband, whose devoted companion and efficient helper she had, through a long and eventful life, proved herself to be, will, with the entire family, have the heartfelt sympathy of very many friends."

Charlevoix as a Summer Resort.

Charlevoix is situated on the high bluffs overlooking Lake Michigan, between Round Lake and Lake Michigan, and on both banks of Pine river. Pine river is half a mile long, and connects Round Lake and Lake Michigan. CHARLEVOIX SUMMER RESORT is south of the main channel between Round and Pine Lakes. CHICAGO SUMMER RESORT is on the upper side of the main channel connecting Round and Pine Lakes.

These resorts share in all the climatic advantages of northern Michigan. The cool refreshing breezes from the lakes are most invigorating. Little or nothing is known of summer's sultry heat, or of the close muggy air of dog days, so debilitating in most places. The nights are cool and so conducive to "balmy sleep, tired nature's sweet restorer." But this locality enjoys some advantages of climate peculiar to itself. Most summer resorts being situated on the shores of the lake, with only the land behind them, are as often subject to land as to lake breezes, and therefore do not escape sultry days. However this is not the case here, situated between Lake Michigan and Pine Lake, with the depression of sand through which Pine river runs, forming a natural air channel, these resorts are never without a fresh breeze from one lake or the other. The cooler breezes from Lake Michigan blow during the daytime, when most needed. These breezes are always purified as well as cooled by contact with large bodies of water. The situation is not unlike that of the famed Newport, lying between the Atlantic and Narragansett Bay. There are no low or marshy lands in the region to taint the air with miasma and breed annoying mosquitoes. A more fortunate combination of those circumstances which tend to make a summer resort desirable can scarcely be imagined. Those who have passed one or more summers in this locality recuperating their strength in its salubrious climate and thus securing a newlease of life are enthusiastic in its praise.

Few localities enjoy such excellent facilities for boating. Through the summer, Pine Lake is usually as placid as a river, while Round Lake, lying like a sparkling gem between the resort and the village, and protected from winds by the encircling hills, is always safe for small row boats.

The whole Charlevoix region is famous for its excellent fishing grounds. Isaak Walton himself would have reveled in his favorite sport on the lakes and along the rivers and streams that are found in this locality. In their season, lake trout, black bass, pickerel, perch and herring abound in the lakes, while the gamy speckled trout, the fisherman's chief delight, make the cold waters of the Jordan and Boyne rivers, as well as the several smaller tributaries of Pine Lake, their favorite haunts. No rivers in the lower peninsula have acquired so famous a reputation for their choice trout as the Jordan and Boyne.

Pine Lake is a beautiful sheet of water 20 miles long. About 5 miles east it divides into two arms: the south arm extending south, and at the finger end receives the famous trout stream Jordan river.

A Warning.

Pain is given for the wise purpose of informing us of the presence of danger and disease. Any little excitement of an unusual nature disturbs the balance of the system, the nervous energies are exhausted, and headache and a hundred other disturbances are the result. Many of the miseries of man and womanhood might be cured and prevented were their approach heeded and resisted, having their origin in derangements of the liver and blood, dyspepsia, jaundice, indigestion, costiveness, and other unwholesome conditions. Evils of a diseased nature find a certain cure by the use of Golden Seal Bitters. In this medicine, nature, aided by art, has produced a rare combination of medicinal properties, wisely adapted to the cure of diseases common to man-kind. The vitalizing principals embodied in Golden Seal Bitters will assuredly cure the broken down or dyspeptic. Sold by Perry Weed and Dr. G. W. Crouter.

Broken Down Invalids.

Probably never in the history of Cough Medicines has any article met success equal to that which has been showered upon Dr. Pete's 25-cent cough cure. Thousands of hopeless cases of coughs, colds, and consumption have yielded to this truly miraculous discovery. For this reason we feel warranted in risking our reputation and money on its merits. Sold by Perry Weed and Dr. G. W. Crouter.

Better Times.

A recent New York letter says: "The general tendency to an increase of manufacturing capacity in every industry in the country is very strong. The production of the country in nearly every branch of trade is heavier than it has heretofore been, and it is safe to say that more capital is being invested in reproductive channels than ever before. This points to the increasing demands for labor."

Charleston (W. Va.) dispatch: At a banquet given by our citizens and the local press to the editors of Ohio, at which were present Governor Foraker and the Hon. C. Grosvenor, member of Congress from Ohio, the latter said: "In Ohio there is more intense feeling against the New England States than there is against the South, owing to the fact that the New England States do not want the South and West to improve, but to hold them back by not legislating in the interest of the two great sections of the country." He characterized this feeling as being "the overeducated provincialism of the East." The gentleman was severe in his speech against the New Englanders.

Washington telegram: Speaker Carlisle does not appear at all cast down by the fate of the tariff bill. He is credited with saying: "Since a majority of the House were inimical to the bill it is better the motion to consider it should have been defeated rather than to have got it before the House and chopped its head off by striking out the enactment clause. Under present circumstances it will remain on the calendar, where it can be taken up at any time the House chooses. I don't look for any action upon it at this session, but I am sincere in my belief that we will not only get it before the House next session but that we will pass it."

Washington telegram: "About one hundred of the Democratic Representatives who voted for the consideration of the Morrison tariff bill held a caucus in the hall of the House. Representative Bragg, of Wisconsin, was chosen chairman, and Representative McRae, of Arkansas, secretary of the conference. Speaker Carlisle urged the members to stand firm in their purpose of tariff reform. Mr. Morrison then moved that the tariff-reform Democrats select one member from each State to constitute a committee which shall consider the advisability of issuing an address to the country explaining the position of that element and report to another conference to be held later in the present month. This motion gave rise to considerable discussion, but was adopted."

A New Orleans dispatch says "the Louisiana House of Representatives, by a vote of 53 to 38, defeated the high liquor license bill, which it was generally thought would be passed. The bill fixed the highest license for the sale of liquor at $15,000 and the lowest at $300. It was advocated by the temperance people and many others, and until the last moment seemed certain of passage, but the liquor men united, made a strong fight, and through the influence of the New Orleans delegation, carried the day. The licenses on the sale of liquor remain unchanged. There is a strong and growing temperance movement in Louisiana which, having carried through the Sunday law, was emboldened to try the high license."

MISCELLANEOUS.

In an affray at Bogota between prison guards and some soldiers, one general, several officers, and thirty privates were killed.

There were 155 failures in the United States and Canada last week, against 209 the previous week. Bradstreet's, in its weekly review of the industrial outlook, says:

Special telegrams report, with an unusual degree of unanimity, only a moderate activity in general commercial and industrial lines. This is conspicuous at Kansas City, where a check to the late heavy movement of merchandise is visible. Exceptions are noted at Chicago, St. Louis and Milwaukee, where there is a fair business, as well as at Minneapolis, St. Paul and Duluth. New York and Boston each record a full average volume of transactions. The approach of the customary midsummer dullness is reported to characterize general trade at most interior points. The domestic money markets, with few exceptions, are unchanged; funds offering being in excess of the demand. The New York stock market continued to exhibit bullish tendencies this week, and prices generally advanced. Bonds are unusually strong. Special wheat crop reports to Bradstreet's continue favorable, the exceptions being in Kansas and Michigan. The plant has been delayed in Northern Minnesota, but the outlook is for a fair crop. The wheat market continues dull and depressed. The first signs of firmness in hog products are observed. Raw wool is from 2c to 3c higher at interior markets. The late London sales, ranging from 5 to 15 per cent. higher, stimulated the improved feeling here. Dry goods distribution for six months will compare favorably with the early half of last year. There is a better tone and a slight advance in some lines of bleached cottons. The next opening of woolen goods is expected to be at higher figures.

The following dispatch has been received from Meshed, via Teheran, giving the latest information in regard to Thomas Stevens and his globe-girdling bicycle:

Stevens went from Meshed to Berjand with the intention of reaching India via Siestan and Beloochistan, but after talking with the Hoshmet-i-Molk, Governor of Ghain and Siestan, concluded that this route was impracticable. He then struck across the desert, forded the Harud River, and reached Furrar, about midway between Herat and Candahar, or ten days' journey from Quetta. Here the Afghans arrested him and brought him back to Herat, and finally back over the Persian frontier to Kariez, from whence he returned to Meshed. He was under arrest nineteen days, but was well treated. The Afghans, by accident, slightly damaged the bicycle, but not sufficiently to render it unridable. He will now wheel back to Astrabad and proceed to India via Constantinople. He will resume his journey from the nearest point possible to that at which he turned back.

By the capsizing of a ferry-boat in the Sazawa River, in Bohemia, twenty-five persons were drowned.

President Grevy, in consonance with the law just passed, has issued a decree for the immediate expulsion of the French princes. The police were ordered to arrest all persons making royalist demonstrations on the occasion of the departure. In consequence of the expulsion, the French ambassador at Vienna has resigned. The male representatives of the Bonaparte and Orleanist families who are affected by the expulsion act are Prince Napoleon (nicknamed Plon-Plon) and his sons, one of whom is Prince Victor, the Count of Paris and his son Louis Philippe, and the Duc d'Aumale. The royalist press of Paris pronounces the passage of the expulsion bill the forerunner of the downfall of the republic. The moderate Republican papers generally criticise the measure as unjust. The opportunist journals urge the Government to discard the demands of the irreconcilables and radicals, and they demand a firmer Republican policy. A Berlin dispatch says that the banishing of the French princes did not cause the slightest commotion in Germany, as they had always been Germany's most bitter enemies. In Russia the banishing of the princes caused consideration exasperation.

LATER NEWS IETMS.

Another of Pasteur's patients, an 11-year-old French girl, has died of hydrophobia.

The expelled Count of Paris has gone to England. The Bonapartists will reside in Switzerland.

The expulsion of the French princes by the republic has caused much uneasiness in Paris. A cable dispatch from that city says:

It is feared that serious trouble may result from the bitter feeling engendered. The better class of people severely condemn the issue of the decree against the heads of the old monarchical and imperial families. They regard this step as an evidence of weakness on the part of the Government, and dread the effect of its confession in this way on the uneasy spirits who are always ready for revolution. They hold, too, that the expulsion of the princes has given undue prominence to them and their political position, will tend to unite the monarchical and imperial interests in a common hostility to the republic, and has over aroused a keen sympathy with the princes among a great number of Frenchmen who would otherwise have remained in seclusion. The widespread influence of this measure is already seen in the immediate disturbance which it has made in diplomatic circles, and in the stand which it has obliged some of the most able statesmen and former friends of the Government to take on the side of the princes. In addition to the resignations which have already been offered to the Government, many more are expected, and the men of culture and social position display an inclination, as a rule, to withdraw from all participation in the affairs of the nation, as at present conducted. This is likely to be a serious blow to the republic, particularly in its intercourse with other countries. This disposition is manifested not only by the representatives of France at foreign courts, including M. Waddington, Ambassador at St. James, by the best class of those who hold offices in France. M. Gornet, a member of the Council of State, and Colonel Belleval, the commander of the Duc de Chartres' old regiment of chasseurs, have resigned. Several of the persons who were arrested yesterday for exhibiting their sympathy with the departing exiles were released at night, it not being thought expedient to hold them, in view of the dangerous temper of the people.

A fire on the farm of William L. Scott, near Erie, Pa., destroyed an immense circular barn at the training track. Three imported stallions were with difficulty rescued.

Gilman, of Adams County, for Superintendent of Public Instruction. A State Central Committee was chosen, which elected John W. Hart, of Rockford, as Chairman, and Chicago was elected as headquarters. A campaign fund of $1,000 was raised, of which Mr. Austin gave $410.

The bill repealing the pre-emption and timber-culture laws passed the Senate, on June 24, by a vote of 34 yeas to 20 nays. The Senate passed the bill providing for the appointment and compensation of a United States District Judge for the Southern District of Alabama, with an amendment offered by Senator Logan (Ill.) which fixes the salaries of all United States District Judges at $5,000 a year, and prohibits nepotism on the part of Federal Judges. The President beat his record by sending in twenty-nine messages vetoing that many special pension bills. The House went into committee of the whole on the sundry civil bill, and adopted, by a vote of 99 to 78, an amendment providing that no money appropriated for the Bureau of Engraving and Printing shall be used in printing United States notes of large denomination in lieu of notes of small denomination canceled or retired.

NATIONAL LAW-MAKERS.

Brief Summary of the Proceedings of Congress.

AN extradition treaty with Japan was ratified by the Senate June 21, as also one for the resurvey of the boundary-line between the United States and Mexico. The Senate passed a bill granting Dearborn Park, in Chicago, to the Public Library, Soldiers' Home, and Academy of Design. In the House of Representatives, Mr. Henley introduced a resolution directing the Attorney General to prosecute all officers of the Union Pacific Railroad Company responsible for issuing collateral trust bonds, guaranteeing interest and paying dividends without the consent of Congress. The naval appropriation bill passed the House. The President sent to Congress fifteen veto messages, three of them being upon private pension bills; the other two were on bills for public buildings at Sioux City, Iowa, and Zanesville, Ohio. In refusing to approve of the act for a public building at Sioux City, he states that the postoffice is leased until 1889, and that occasional sessions of the Federal courts have been held in the county court house without inconveniencing anyone; in disapproving the bill to provide for a public building at Zanesville, Ohio, the President takes the same grounds. In vetoing a pension bill the President suggests the significance of the startling increase in pension legislation and the consequences involved in its continuance. He says: "I am so thoroughly tired of disapproving gifts of public money to individuals who, in my view, have no right or claim to the same, notwithstanding apparent Congressional sanction, that I interpose with a feeling of relief in a case where I find it unnecessary to determine the merits of the application. In speaking of the promiscuous and ill-advised grants of pensions which have lately been presented to me for approval, I have spoken of their 'apparent Congressional sanction' in recognition of the fact that a large proportion of these bills have never been submitted to a majority of either branch of Congress, but are the result of nominal sessions held for the express purpose of their consideration and attended by a small minority of the members of the respective houses of the legislative branch of Government. Thus, in considering these bills I have not felt that I was aided by the deliberate judgment of the Congress, and when I have deemed it my duty to disapprove many of the bills presented, I have hardly regarded my action as a dissent from the conclusions of the people's representatives. I have not been insensible to the suggestion which should influence every citizen, either in private station or official place, to exhibit not only a just but generous appreciation of the services of our country's defenders. In reviewing the pension legislation presented to me many bills have been approved upon the theory that every doubt should be resolved in favor of the proposed beneficiary. I have not, however, been able to entirely divest myself of the idea that the public money appropriated for pensions is the soldiers' fund, which should be devoted to the indemnification of those who, in the defense of the Union and in the nation's service have worthily deserved, and who, in the day of their independence resulting from such suffering, are entitled to the benefactions of their Government. This reflection tends to the bestowal of pensions a kind of sacredness, which invites the adoption of such principles and regulations as will exclude perversion, as well as insure a liberal and generous application of grateful and benevolent designs. Heedlessness and disregard of the principle which underlies the granting of pensions is unfair to the wounded, crippled soldier, who is honored in the just recognition of his Government. Such a man should never find himself side by side on the pension roll with those who have been tempted to attribute their natural ills to which humanity is heir to service in the army. Every relaxation of principle in the granting of pensions invites applications without merit and encourages those who for gain urge honest men to become dishonest. Thus is the demoralizing lesson taught the people that against the public treasury the most questionable expedients are allowable."

THE Senate took up the bill repealing the pre-emption and timber culture laws at its session on June 22, and rejected the Ingalls amendment applying to all lands the Blair amendment prohibiting the acquisition of more than 640 acres of desert land under one ownership. The original amendment was then rejected by a vote of 42 to 3, Senators Blair (N. H.), Dolph (Oregon), and Teller (Col.), voting yea. The President has sent the following nominations to the Senate: David N. Burke, of New York, Consul of the United States at Puerto Cabello; Edward T. Pittman, Receiver of Public Moneys, Lin Sto, Colorado; Samuel L. Gilson, of Pennsylvania, Agent for the Indians at Fort Peck Agency, Montana; John M. Galloway, appraiser of the right of way of the Southern Kansas Railroad Company through Indian Territory. Registers of Land Offices—Pierce H. Ryan, Humboldt, Cal.; W. E. Copeland, Carson City, Nev.; Richard McCleod, Durango, Col.; J. L. Camp, Prescott, Arizona. Postmasters—Fannie D. Porter, El Paso, Tex.; Thomas H. Perrin, Alton, Ill.; James Able, Auburn, Ill.; John J. Ankeny, Minneapolis, Minn.; S. Curtis Symonds, Hudson, Wis.; James E. McDonald, Ligonier, Ind.; Frederick A. Edwards, Webster City, Iowa; Joseph J. Toplif, Longmont, Col. In the House of Representatives Mr. Morrison called up the proposed change of rule making it in order to amend a general pension bill by adding a provision for the imposition of a tax to meet the expenditures required by the bill. A long and hot debate ensued. The debate took a wide range, and although in its opening stages it presented the rare spectacle of the rival leaders of the majority party, Mr. Randall and Mr. Morrison, in apparent accord, they soon fell to belaboring each other in good set terms. Mr. Morrison and General Bragg maintained that the Randall faction, in voting against consideration of the tariff bill, had violated the pledges contained in the "platform" of 1884. Mr. Randall, on the contrary claimed that his course in the House upon the tariff question had been in entire accord with the "spirit" of the aforesaid platform, and resented the criticisms upon his conduct with much warmth. A motion by Mr. Reed to lay Mr. Morrison's motion on the table was defeated, and the motion went over. Nine vetoes of private pension bills were laid before the House, and referred. Several of the President's terse sentences and ironical suggestions were greeted with applause and laughter. Mr. Morrison informed the House that he had concluded for the present not to renew his motion to go into committee of the whole on the tariff bill.

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND sent in seven vetoes of private pension bills to the Senate June 24. The Senate voted to reconsider the vote by which it had passed the bill prohibiting Congressmen from acting as attorneys for land-grant railroads, and the measure was then referred to the Judiciary Committee. In discussing the matter, Mr. Beck said he was himself a lawyer, and would not place any indignity on the profession of the law. When elected to Congress, however, he found that his public duties required all his time—not being possessed of the transcendent abilities that the Senator from New York perhaps possessed. The country believed that the $5,000 a year received by Senators and Representatives in Congress entitled the people to their whole services, and if Senators or Representatives could not live on that compensation they had no right to supplement it by taking fees from corporations whose interests were adverse to those of the people. The entire legislative day in the House was occupied by the Republicans in filibustering to prevent the Democrats from adopting a rule which would result in creating part for the benefit of pensioners the revenues to be derived from a tax on incomes. Messrs. Morrison and Randall have fought shoulder to shoulder in this fight, and only ten Democrats, including Messrs. Townshend and Worthington, of Illinois, aided the Republican opposition. Nothing occurred to break the uninteresting round of roll-calls except an occasional pass between Morrison and members on the Republican side. The latter frequently proposed to improve the time by going on with the appropriation bills or with the Blair pension bill. Randall replied that he would take care of the appropriation bills, and Morrison informed them that there would be no trouble about the pension bill if the Republicans would agree to amend it by providing for a tax to meet the expenditure that would result from its passage. The proceedings were conducted in good temper on both sides, and were ended by the arrival of the fixed hour for adjournment. The Democrats did not have a quorum at any time, and the Sergeant-at-arms was unable to find any of the absentees in the city.

HOT WORDS IN THE HOUSE.

Morrison, Randall, and Bragg Indulge in a Lively Tilt on the Tariff Question.

The Illinois Free-Trader Calls the Pennsylvania Protectionist a Traitor—The Latter Retorts in Kind.

In the National House of Representatives, on Tuesday, June 22, Mr. Morrison called up the proposed change of rule providing that every general pension bill may be amended by the addition of a provision for the imposition of a tax to meet the expenditure required by the bill.

In advocating the proposition, Mr. Morrison argued that its adoption was absolutely necessary unless Congress was prepared to grant pensions and leave the Government without the means to pay them. He referred to the immense sums paid out for pensions since the war and the large amounts necessary for present and future requirements, and said that the gentleman from New York (Mr. Hiscock) and other gentlemen on both sides of the House had predicted that for the next fiscal year there would be a deficit of $14,000,000.

Mr. Reed (Me.) expressed surprise that this rule was proposed to be confined to pensions alone. There was not a practical man in the House who did not know that the proposed rule would be to fasten upon every pension bill some method of taxation which would prove obnoxious to men who might want to vote for the measure. He for one was not willing to enter on such an invidious course.

Mr. Hiscock said that the Democratic party had not redeemed a single pledge it had made, but had stood cowering before the country admitting that it was powerless to lift any burden from the people; that it had spent all the money, and that empty vaults were the fruit of Democratic victory. [Applause on the Republican side.] He wished to emphasize that a Democratic Congress had been in session for six months; that it had accomplished nothing, and that in these last days of the session it stood confessing that it had known, nothing about the receipts of the Government, and was incompetent to carry out any of its promises and pledges. [Applause on Republican side.]

Messrs. Laird (Neb.), Cutcheon, and Burrows (Mich.), and Henderson (Iowa), opposed the change.

Mr. Bragg (Wis.) expressed delight at a reference made by Mr. Reed to the failure of the House to consent to consider revenue bills, saying:

I am delighted because it shows what sort of contempt the Republicans of this House feel for those who have been recreant to their faith and their pledges. While they are received with open arms and approbation for the act they have done they are thoroughly despised for their political defection. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

Continuing, he said that he had seen the gentleman from Iowa (Mr. Henderson) take out the old hobby-horse to be ridden around again and danced about for the benefit of claim agents' newspapers to be circulated among that class of men whose vote the Republicans thought could be bought by a pretense that the Republicans were the soldiers' friends. [Applause on the Democratic side and sneering cries of "Oh! oh!" from the Republicans.]

Mr. Bragg (imitating the Republicans)—Yes, "Oh! oh!" Why was it that when you had a two-thirds majority in this House, when the war was fresh, when men were suffering from wounds everywhere, that you placed a limitation on pensions, and provided that every claim not presented within five years should only commence to draw pension from the date of application? Who did that? Will you answer me? "Oh! oh!" It was the Republican party. "Oh! oh!" Who was it that repealed the arrears limitation and paid the soldiers whose claims were pending from the date of disability? It was the Democratic party? "Oh! oh!"

Continuing, he maintained that there was nothing in the pending proposition looking to a refusal of pensions to soldiers. It did not refuse to grant pensions, but it provided for their payment. When gentlemen sprang into the field and cried out that it was an attack upon the soldiers, they were attempting, under the guise of friendship for the soldier element, to protect the bondholder—to protect those men who, during the war, fattened on the blood of men in the field, and as contractors filled their purses. [Laughter and applause on Democratic side.]

Mr. Randall—I did not intend to indulge in any further discussion of this subject, and I would not except for the language used by the gentleman from Wisconsin. I stand here his peer in every respect, with connection as pure as he can possibly have [applause on Republican side, participated in by the Democrats who followed Mr. Randall's lead previously], and I have courage to maintain them. How is this question? Some years ago we had the same controversy, and I cast my vote then as I cast it on Thursday—from conviction. I resisted anything that tended to free trade in the United States and the lowering of wages to American laborers. [Applause on the Republican side.] I was condemned in some quarters for that vote. I went with the rest of you addressing the Democratic side] to a national convention, where I was told that I would have no Republicans to help me. What was the result of that convention? Does any man here attempt to say that the measure reported to this House by the Committee on Ways and Means is in harmony with the spirit of that convention, or the enunciations of those who took the stump in its behalf? No. I am just to-day where I stood then. I am in favor of a revision of the tariff and the lowering of rates of duty, and a repeal in part of internal taxes, upon which the Ways and Means Committee of this House has denied any one the privilege of a vote. [Applause.] I have only to say to the gentlemen from Wisconsin that he has from me as much contempt as I can well send to him [laughter and applause], and I am ready to discuss with him the propriety of my course.

Mr. Hewitt declared that the measure reported by the Ways and Means Committee was in accordance with the Chicago platform.

Mr. Morrison—The gentleman from Pennsylvania claims that no bill is fair and in the spirit of the Chicago platform that does not present him an opportunity of voting on internal revenue taxes, and again and again he makes his promise as to what he would do; and we are reproached by the other side because at Chicago we pledged ourselves against the repeal of internal taxes and in favor of a revision of the tariff. The gentleman from Pennsylvania had gone out of his way to say that the proposition presented by the Ways and Means Committee was not within the spirit of the Chicago platform. He wished to call attention to the fact that in nearly every paragraph of that platform the Democracy had pledged itself as a party to the reduction of tariff taxes, and had especially declared in favor of the continuance of internal revenue taxes. The war taxes remain substantially as they did at the close of the war, and the party promised reduction. Yet the gentleman from Pennsylvania, notwithstanding the promise of reduction, and his desire to keep faith with the platform, would not vote to consider the bill unless it gave him an opportunity to do that which he had pledged himself not to do. The gentleman knew that the Chicago platform required additions to the free list.

Mr. Randall asked if Mr. Morrison believed that President Cleveland could have been elected if the convention had declared for free raw materials.

Mr. Morrison replied that Mr. Cleveland would have gotten more votes than he did. He had not carried Ohio, and had not carried Pennsylvania by 80,000 votes, and would not have carried them if the tariff on wool had been piled a mile high.

After further debate Mr. Morrison moved the previous question on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. Reed moved as a substitute to lay the resolution on the table. The yeas and nays were ordered and resulted in the defeat of Mr. Reed's substitute—yeas 126, nays 139. Before a vote could be taken on the original motion, Mr. Reed moved an adjournment, and the Republicans, by dilatory tactics, managed to consume the time up to 5 o'clock, when, under the standing order, the House adjourned amid an outburst of applause and derisive laughter from the Republicans.

THE YEAS AND NAYS.

How Congressmen Voted Upon the Proposition to Take Up Mr. Morrison's Revenue Measure.

In the National House of Representatives on Thursday, June 17, Mr. Morrison, of Illinois, moved to go into committee of the whole for the purpose of considering revenue bills. The motion was defeated by a vote of 140 yeas to 157 nays. Following is the vote in detail:

MEN OF NOTE.

Hon. A. G. Curtin, of Pennsylvania.

Andrew G. Curtin, of Pennsylvania, is the only surviving member of the trio of famous war Governors, of whom Wm. Dennison, of Ohio, and Oliver P. Morton, of Indiana, were the other two. He is now sixty-nine years old, having been born in his present home, Bellefonte, Pennsylvania, in 1817. It is a satisfactory comment on any man's abilities and strength of character to know that he can live a long life in the village where he was born and be honored to the last with the best offices within the gift of his fellow citizens. Governor Curtin has grave faults, and always has had, but the fact that he stood by the Union in its hour of need, and was so efficient in the discharge of all the duties of Governor of one of the great Northern States, answers for them all. He was educated for and practiced law. He was made Secretary of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, Superintendent of Public Instruction, and Governor of the State. After the war he was sent as Minister to Russia, and was elected as a member of the convention that made the present Constitution of the State. In 1880 he was nominated by the Democrats of the Twentieth Congressional District of Pennsylvania for Representative. He was elected again in 1882 and 1884. He served as Chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs in the Forty-eighth Congress, and as Speaker Carlisle failed to appoint him to that place in the present Congress, he declined to serve as Chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, which was tendered him.

When it was decided to investigate the strikes by a Congressional committee, he was placed at the head of said committee, and is now serving in that capacity.

MURDER AND LYNCHING.

The Town Marshal of Detroit, Minn., Shot and Killed by a Desperado.

The Assassin Taken from Jail by a Masked Mob and Hanged to a Tree.

[Detroit City (Minn.) special.]

Marshal J. Cowey, of this village, was murdered in cold blood by William Kahlihen, alias Big Red, a gambler and tough. The murderer and another fellow of the same stamp, Frank Bennet, were quarreling and creating a disturbance in front of the Masonic block. The Marshal tried to quiet them, but instead Big Red drew a heavy revolver and fired one shot at Bennett, missing his mark. Mr. Cowey stepped forward, when Big Red fired the second shot at him, hitting him squarely in the breast, the ball passing through his heart and lodging in the back. He died instantly. Big Red was captured and lodged in jail. Cowey was one of the most popular men in Detroit City, and had been Marshal for three years.

Public feeling against the man continued to grow, and as the news of the murder spread from town to town, and from farm to farm, strangers began to come here upon every train and by private conveyances, and the streets were thronged with people early in the evening. The body of the assassin's victim was taken to the depot about 8 o'clock to be forwarded to friends in Rochester, Minn., and was escorted to the station by the Lakeside Band and fire company, the entire populace joining in the sad procession. Soon after groups of men were seen in every locality talking earnestly, and it was evident that the prospect was good for a necktie party. At 10 o'clock the fire-bell struck Kahlihen's death-knell, and at the first tap of the bell fierce yells were heard in the vicinity, and a rush was made for the Court House, in which the murderer was confined. That the mob was well organized and determined, there was no doubt. Battering-rams were used upon the outside doors, and they were brushed away as mere cobwebs. The men, who were masked, entered the jailer's residence, occupied by George W. Taylor, deputy sheriff, seized Mr. Taylor and took the keys from his person, and in a few moments had secured the prisoner. A cry for a rope went up, and the cry was not in vain, for in less than a minute a noose was about his neck and he was being hurried down the street as fast as the wild and furious mob could run. He was taken to a tree, hauled up, and, amid the fiendish yells of the mob, a volley of bullets was fired into his body. Every man who took part in the hanging was masked and disguised, thoroughly armed, and prepared to meet any resistance that might be offered. Kahlihen was generally considered a dangerous man. It is reported that he murdered his wife in St. Croix a few years ago, and that he was wanted in Montana upon one or more charges of murder.

COLONEL RICHARD M. HOE.

Sketch of the Famous Printing-Press Manufacturer.

Colonel Richard M. Hoe, whose death was recently announced, was the senior member of the printing press firm of R. Hoe & Co. The history of the development of the printing press is in part Colonel Hoe's personal history. Colonel Hoe was the son of Robert Hoe, an Englishman of mechanical skill and enterprise, who came to this country just as the present century opened. He made his home in New York City, and started a machine shop in 1803. This is the establishment which has been continuously maintained by himself and his sons until now and which has been known for more than half a century as R. Hoe & Co. Robert Hoe had three sons, Richard March, Robert, Jr., and Peter. The first was born in New York on September 12, 1812. He received a meager common-school education, the advantages of which, small as they were, he enjoyed only until he was fifteen years old. Then his father took him into the workshop, just about the time he turned out his first cylinder press. The boy acquired a thorough knowledge of practical mechanics and developed a noticeable talent for improving little details about a press. He was constantly at work experimenting upon patents which he thought would add speed and ease to the operations of the press. Ten years after he entered his father's shop he invented his double cylinder press, by which nearly twice as many copies of a paper could be worked off in the same time as by his father's invention. Robert Hoe was only 53 years old when he died, and his three sons, at the head of whom was Richard, succeeded him. This change was made in 1846. In the same year Colonel Hoe perfected his famous rotary press, which is the basis of all the better presses. It did its work with such rapidity that it was soon known as the "Lightning." As originally manufactured, it made possible the printing of 10,000 copies an hour. Now every press made on the rotary plan can print from 20,000 to 25,000 copies. The invention made Colonel Hoe famous. It was an even greater stride toward the perfection of the press than that taken by his father in the invention of the cylindrical system. It created a revolution in newspaper printing.

BASE-BALL.

The Champion Chicago Players in the Role of Record-Breakers at Detroit.

The Race for the Pennant in the National League and American Association.

The contest in the National League has settled down to a duel between Detroit and Chicago, with New York and Philadelphia fighting hard for third place, with New York slightly in the lead. The first great battle at Detroit between the champions and the home team was witnessed by 12,000 people, and was won by Chicago. It was a question of record-breaking between the two clubs, Chicago presenting McCormick, who had not lost a game this year, in the pitcher's box, while Detroit had not as yet been beaten on the home grounds. The result was in favor of Chicago, and McCormick has thirteen games won to his credit, none lost. It will be well to watch the play of New York and Philadelphia, as both clubs have improved wonderfully since the early part of the season. Boston, with one of the best teams in the league, cannot play a little bit, losing games right along on the home grounds.

The contest in the American Association is very close, St. Louis and Louisville being tied for first place, with twenty-nine games each, Brooklyn next with twenty-six games won, and Pittsburgh only one game behind. The great interest taken in these games is attested by the immense crowds which attend, showing a large increase over any previous year.

The standing of the clubs up to June 21, is shown by the following schedules:

About 150 Chicagoans visited Detroit to see the opening game at that place between the champions and Detroit. The delegation carried new brooms, labeled "record-breakers," and was headed by Little Willie Hahn, the "mascot" of the Chicago Club, who carried a broom twelve feet long. President Spalding had about forty carriages at the hotel to take the visitors to the grounds, where seats had been secured for them in a body. The Detroiters, of course, largely outnumbered the visitors, and yet the latter held their own with them when it came to making a racket. Every member of the Chicago delegation was furnished with either a pair of wooden cymbals, a duck call, or a "bazoo," the latter a miniature fish-horn capable of producing more noise than one of full size. At every good play made by Chicago, or run scored, the clashing of the cymbals, and the tooting of the duck-calls and bazoos, was simply immense, and when, in the ninth inning, McCormick crossed the home-plate for the winning run, the noise was hideous beyond description. The Detroits, not liking the idea of Chicago having the only mascot, had secured the services of a little fellow named Charlie Gallagher, who was said to be born with a full set of teeth, and was therefore a veritable mascot. The result of the game—5 to 4 in favor of Chicago—has thrown a doubt around the little fellow's title which time alone can remove. What would a ball-player amount to if he was not chock full of superstitious notions.

BASE-BALL VIRTUES.

PHILADELPHIA claims to have discovered a base-ball umpire whose decisions gave satisfaction to both clubs. And yet Barnum sends to London for a $75,000 curiosity.

BALL-PLAYERS in Pittsburgh are talking about the smart young catcher of an amateur club, who was remarkable for catching batsmen out on foul tips, even when the bat didn't seem to strike within three or four inches of the ball. An investigation showed that the catcher had a gum band attached to his glove, and when he desired to foul out a man he would raise the hand with one finger, and when the ball passed under the bat release it. The band would snap against the glove, and all within hearing would hear a supposed foul tip.

DETROIT people will be interested to know that the Rev. Sam Jones pronounces base-ball "the most corrupt thing this side of hell." Even those disgusted with what they consider the childishness of making so serious an affair of what seems to them to be, if not child's play, a mere boy's game, will hardly agree with Jones. They will think that if it is "the most corrupt thing this side of hell" there is a very wide gulf between base-ball and the infernal regions. Our esteemed contemporary, the Baltimore American, on the contrary, thinks base-ball the very school of virtues—"one of the greatest safeguards against some of the immoralities and temptations of youth"—requiring abstinence from liquors and tobacco; regular and early hours; steady practice and severe labor; self-restraint in good fortune or defeat; patience, hopefulness, courage, fortitude; courtesy toward opponents; submission to authority, even when the umpire seems unjust; fair play and the like. It advises Brother Jones, if he wants to know what true courage is, to go and catch behind the bat for a little while.

Although it is quite possible to get some of this discipline and acquire these virtues without joining a base-ball club, it must be admitted that our esteemed contemporary has stated not unfairly the other side of the case. If these virtues could—to use a theological term—only be "imputed" to the spectators, base-ball would rise to the plane of a noble missionary enterprise.—Detroit Free Press.

—The man recently found murdered at Belleville has been identified as Sylvincent Moore of Adrian. Billy Arnold of Adrian is suspected of complicity in the murder, and officers are after him.

—Citizens are thinking of organizing a committee, to be armed with clubs, to deal with the women insulters who every evening pass insulting remarks while ladies pass by on the walks—Kalamazoo Gazette.

—A 9-year-old son of Patrick Cashin, a well-known grocer, while playing on a raft of logs, at East Saginaw, fell in and was drowned. A son of J. D. Wilson, also about 9 years of age, was with young Cashin, and as he is missing it is supposed he was also drowned.

—John Burnett, a farmer 60 years old, shot his wife twice through the head in a fit of jealousy, at York, and then shot Mrs. Jackson, his mother-in-law, in the neck. Mrs. Burnett will die. Mrs. Jackson is dangerously wounded. Burnett is in jail.

—Frederick Fox, of St. Louis, was wounded in the head during the war. The bullet was never removed and worked into his brain, causing him to become insane. He was temporarily placed in jail until he could be sent to Traverse City. He became so violent that it was found necessary to administer chloroform. He was given too much and did not recover. He died early Wednesday morning.

—It is rumored that leading Chicago citizens are moving in favor of establishing a military post at that point, and that General Sheridan favors it; in which case, it is said, Fort Wayne at Detroit will be abandoned. If that should happen, the Government reservation at the fort would make a splendid terminus to the boulevard and give the west end of the town a delightful little park of its own.—Free Press.

Value of the University to the State.

One of the most interesting points in President Angell's address at Lansing on the university was his statement of the cost of the institution to the State. Michigan has appropriated in all a little over $1,000,000. Valuing the buildings, apparatus, land, etc., at $900,000 and the gifts of books and works of art at $400,000, a clear balance of $300,000 is to be credited to the institution. Its chief advantage to the State, however, is incalculable. Saying nothing of the citizens whose education and intellectual power it has added to the forces that aid in building up a community, its renown has made Michigan known and respected, and attracted hither a class of ambitious and intelligent citizens that would not in many cases have come. The enjoyment of privileges offered by the university diverts to the State the footsteps of many a father and mother who desire an education for their children. Citizens with such aims and outlooks greatly enrich the commonwealth in which they take up their abode.—Free Press.

THE CHAMPION VETOIST.

A Washington dispatch, dated June 25th, says that President Cleveland is now the champion vetoist of his country. Not only has he made a larger number of vetoes in a given length of time than any other president, but he has actually made more vetoes in the 15 months he has been in office than any other president ever made in the entire term; yes, even more than any other president ever made in an eight years' stay in that office. The number of vetoes furnished by Mr. Cleveland up to this time is 74. This is more than by any other president even in an eight years' term. President Johnson was supposed to be the boss vetoist in his time, but he only made seventeen vetoes in almost four years' service, against more than double that number by Mr. Cleveland in a little over a year. President Grant made twenty-eight vetoes, but he had eight years in which to do it. Mr. Cleveland, in his fifteen months term in office has made more vetoes than Washington, Adams, Jackson, Madison, Monroe, J. Quincy Adams, Van Buren, Hurrison, Tyler, Polk, Taylor, Fillmore, Pierce, Buchanan, Lincoln, Garfield and Arthur made in their over seventy years in the presidential office, and it is probable that more vetoes will follow.

Honesty is Patrotism.

Mr. Cleveland's messages vetoing the swindling private pension bills have evidently hit some of the congressional brethren on the raw. One luminous individual from the up country rose in his place the other day to observe that he had searched these documents in vain for a single patriotic sentence, and he even dispaired of the republic.

There is a strong suspicion that the day when all manner of thievery could be carried on without question so long as the plunderers professed an undying devotion to the flag has passed by. The Belknaps, Robesons, Shepherds, Babcocks, McDonalds, Joyces, Dorseys and Bradys were all mighty patriots in their generation, and when it came to slinging red, white and blue eloquence they took a back seat for no body, but their crimes found them out after awhile, and such of them as did not go to prison should have done so.

It is inferred from the tone of Mr. Cleveland's messages on the private pension swindles of congress that the fashion now is to be honest—as honest in the presence of a fraud who steals the livery of a United States soldier as in the presence of a round bellied monopolist who is looking for a subsidy for some fat corporation. In times like these honesty is the highest form of patriotism, and dishonesty, no matter whether it folds itself in the American flag or not, is the most contemptible expression of treason.—Traverse Herald.

NOTES AND NEWS.

The republican state convention will be called to meet at Grand Rapids, Sept. 1st.

Some of our republican exchanges are booming B. M. Cutcheon for Senator Conger's place. We are of the opinion that the General will have to dust himself pretty lively if he retains his present place, without attempting to climb up higher.—Eagle.

The president has now vetoed eighty-four pension bills, and, so far as intelligent judgment can determine, has not vetoed a single one that should become law. When it is remembered that to do this with knowledge and justice he has had to examine into the record of over six hundred cases, some idea can be formed of the immense amount of labor which has been thrust upon him by a lazy, reckless, and faithless congress.—Chicago News.

The pension demagogues in congress must be getting a tolerably clear idea by this time of what Mr. Cleveland is there for. His little veto messages reveal the dishonesty of the average legislator as cleverly as much longer ones would. When no old soldier in congress will take the trouble to oppose these "private" raids in the interest of frauds, bounty-jumpers, and deserters it is a glorious thing for the worthy pensioners of the country that there is a President who will defend them against enforced association with such creatures.—Chicago Herald.

The Young Democracy.

"The young democracy who are coming to the support of the party where they secure recognition," is the reply that Chairman Enright of the state committeee made when asked, "Who will carry Michigan this fall? Himself a splendid representative of this class, he knows whereof he speaks. With comparatively a young man in the executive chair, the revived democracy has reorganized the young men of the nation as they have never before been organized. The old time distrust of young men has disappeared in a sensible measure and it is the young men that furnish the working energy and enthusiastic work that carries campaigns nowadays. The accessions to the democracy from the new voters has been very large. They have realized the great power of its underlying principles of fairness to all, the vastness of its political trinity of "free trade, free coinage, and free men" and its opposition to the monopolistic tendencies of the party of political arrogance and aristocracy. Naturally, in a party ruled by these latter forces, as has been republicanism, its bestowal of political emoluments and honors must be upon that class only. The young men of to-day will have none of this. He will swing in where his interests, his ability and tact are recognized. This means that he will be a democrat with fervor and enthusiasm.—Kalamazoo Gazette.

There is a Difference.

The Minneapolis Tribune: "Yes, we are not disposed to deny that in 1884 Mr. Cleveland was elected president and Mr. Blaine was defeated. But the fact remains that Cleveland can now make speeches by the yard and no one will care one swear what lie says, while when Mr. Blaine gets up to speak he has the whole world for an audience, and the press of every civilized nation thinks it necessary to comment upon what he says. There must be some difference between the two men somewhere." There is a difference. The president is not a demagogue and has never been in the habit of making vote-catching speeches by the yard, but his single phrase, "A public office is a public trust," is worth more than Blaine ever uttered or wrote or ever will utter or write, and if it is outlived by any phrases of Blaine it will be "Burn this letter," "A deadhead enterprise," "Let me know what I am to expect," "Cast an anchor to the windward," and other passages from the celebrated Mulligan letters.—Chicago Times.

An Executive Session.

She was the daughter of a senator, and her sweetheart had been to see her every night, since Lent had given time and opportunity. Her father became somewhat alarmed, and this morning he called her into his study.

"Well, papa," she said sweetly, "you sent for me. What is it?"

"My dear daughter," he replied, "I believe Mr. Blank has been to see you every night for some time past?"

"Yes papa."

"And he was here last night?"

"Yes papa."

"Well, daughter, I want to know what occurred between you during your protracted interview in the parlor. I ask it my child, because I have especial reasons for wishing to know?"

"Dear papa," replied the girl with tears in her eyes, "I do not doubt your right to ask what occurred there; but, papa, it was an executive session; and papa, you would not have me divulge the secrets of such a meeting, would you?"

The old man said never a word in reply.—Washington Critic.

Something or Other.

During the last session of the Kansas Legislature some of the members were greatly annoyed by a man who wanted a charter. He didn't seem particular whether it was a charter for a bank, railroad, canal, navigation or manufacturing company, and this led to the inquiry:

"What good would a charter do you, anyhow?"

"Well, you see, I want to go to practicing medicine here, and I have no diploma and can't get one. If I can get a charter for something or other and hang it up in my office, you folks in this state won't know the difference. Please have the clerk fill out with red ink and tie a blue ribbon to it."—Wall Street News.

The Force of Habit.

"The force of habit is a wonderful thing," said the philosophizing passenger who expectorated upon the floor; "now just to show you: I'm a photographer out in the country here a piece, and the other day I was called out to take a negative of a dead man. At my suggestion his relatives propped him up on some chairs so that his position would be somewhere near natural, and then stood back while I took him. After focussing the lens I stepped out, looked to see that everything was all right, said 'now, hold still a moment, please,' and made the exposure. Right there was the first laughter that had been heard in that house for two weeks."—Chicago Herald.

IT PAYS ITS WAY.

Mr. Whitney Says the Administration Does and will do no Junketing.

WASHINGTON, June 15.—The various stories that have been set afloat about proposed junketing trips this summer by the president and members of his cabinet are without foundation in fact. Neither the president nor any member of the administration has any thought of going on any pleasure excursions on a naval vessel. That sort of thing came to a full stop on the fourth day of March, 1885. The president has at all times refused to use government vessels for his private purposes, and will not take a day's sail on any naval vessel as a recreation from his fatiguing duties. There is no more punctillious member of the cabinet in this matter than Secretary Whitney, who was recently falsely reported as about to make a pleasure tour of the lakes on the government steamer Michigan. When asked about the matter Mr. Whitney replied:

"I never heard such a trip proposed until I saw the report in the newspapers. At no time have I planned or contemplated using a government vessel on any other than necessary government business. I have adopted a rule with regard to the use of such vessels from which I shall not deviate. Any public business that a government vessel can be useful in connection with is, in my opinion, a perfectly legtimate use of the boat. For instance, when we went down the bay to welcome the Frenchmen with the statue of liberty the expense of running the ship was properly the government's, for she was upon a legitimate public errand. The official trips of congressional committees, like that to the Hampton school, is also a proper use of a government vessel. If I had a fund for entertaining persons on board on such occasions, that expense might also be a proper one; but I have no appropriation, and no expense for the entertainment of people on board of any government vessel has ever been charged to the government during my administration. I have always personally paid every extra expense incurred by reason of my being on board a naval vessel. The steward keeps an accurate account of everything, and renders me a bill. Thus, when I went down the bay to meet the statue of liberty, I paid every expense except the cost of running the ship, which was properly the government's, and when we took the president from the Grant funeral to the train I bore that extra expense. I have always tried to make clear the distinction between a proper public use of government vessels and their private use, and I am sure that the charge of junketing cannot be laid against this department or any other branch of the administration."—New York Sun.

Japanese Puzzled by a Negro.

"When I was in the country (of Japan), in the interior a foreigner was a curiosity equal to the first Chinaman or Jap seen by us here. On a visit made to the summit of Fuji-yama in the summer of 1871 I went to the famous hot springs at Hakone; at nearly every tea-house our party was as much of an exhibition as the woman with big feet is here. A colored servant, dark as Erebus, whom I had with me, was a phenomenal subject to the innocent Japs. The men and women would come up to him, try to rub the black off with their hands, and be surprised they could not, and laugh over it with the contagious and hilarious glee the people so much enjoy."—Philadelphia Times.

The Friant will run excursions from Harbor Springs and Petoskey to Charlevoix and East Jordan on Saturday, Sunday and Monday, July 3, 4 and 5.

The "dictator" seems to be in bad temper this week. Perhaps he has been quoting too freely from some "irresponsible journal" and got left on the facts.

Harrison Miller returned home from Beaver Island, and his son Charlie Miller, from the north shore, to attend the funeral services of Ruth Miller, on Saturday.

A Northport correspondent says there is a strong probability that the county seat of Lelanaw county will be removed from Leland to Suttons Bay in the near future.

It is wonderful how much solid and interesting reading can be given for one dollar, the price of the Chicago Weekly Herald for one year. Suscriptions received at this office.

The steamer City of Grand Rapids gave an excursion from Traverse City to East Jordan last Sunday, which was well patronized. A large number of the excursionists stopped off at Charlevoix.

The difference between an advertisement in the newspaper and a sign on your store front, is that to see the sign people have to come to your store, while an advertisement in the paper goes to them every week.

Miss Ruth Miller died last Friday morning after a short but very severe illness. Funeral on Saturday, at the family residence, Rev. C. F. Van Anken officiating. Ruth was a bright, buxom lass of seventeen, (just seventeen on the day of her death) fitted by education and personal graces to fill the responsibilities of life in a true womanly manner, and the news of her sudden death falls like a crushing blow on relatives and friends.

The ladies of the Congregational Church at Ironton gave a strawberry and ice cream festival last Friday evening in thier new building. Although it was in a very unfinished condition, the room presented quite a cheerful appearance the windows and tables decorated with flowers. Financially the entertainment was quite a success, thirty dollars being realized. Many expressed sincere regrets at the absence of a speaker. Another entertainment is being worked up for the coming month.

L. E. Allen's pile driver, now at work on Hannah Lay & Co.'s new dock, one week ago to-day beat the record of all pile drivers that was ever in the Grand Traverse region. They drove sixty piles and quit work at 4 o'clock. This is the biggest day's work of the kind on record.—Traverse Journal. This day's work will be better understood when it is stated that the nature of the earth at that place is such that over 6,000 blows were struck with a 2,600 lb. hammer, with 20 feet fall, to accomplish the work.

G. H. Hill, of Cincinnati, owner of the property on the corner of Bridge and Clinton streets, is in town this week, looking after his interests. He purchased of Mr. Eaton the building and lease, now occupied by the Journal and postoffice, and has placed all the property in E. H. Green's hands for sale, except the corner lot on Clinton street which is to be rebuilt for rent. The Bridge street front is platted into lots of 20 feet running west 90 feet to a twelve-foot alley, and are held at $50 a foot front, except the corners, the one on the alley being held at $60 a foot, and the one on Clinton street is not yet for sale at any price. The Clinton street front is held equally high. These are exorbitant prices for Charlevoix, and the holding vacant of so much land in the heart of the village is a positive damage. Men who hold their property up to such a figure should pay taxes for the full amount.

Ironton's New Band.

Ironton's new band held its first concert Saturday evening, the occasion being the return of Mr. W. M. Adams, with his charming bride from New York. The tune chosen was "Le Chivaree," which was played with great unction. The members of the band numbering about two hundred formed a hollow square in front of the "Lake View House" and at a given signal sounded the opening notes of "Chivaree." Some of the chief musicians as nearly as could be ascertained were as follows: Leader, Geo. McMulken; anvil firer, John Folsom; musketry quartette, by unknown parties; chief screamer, E. L. Burdick; sheet iron rattler, E. B. Hodge, W. M. Smith, and other members of the G. A. R. post; saw hammerers, John Garland, Wm. Garland Geo. Winkle; spokesman, E. A. Lewis. After the music had proceeded for fifteen minutes the young couple in whose honor the entertainment was arranged, appeared upon the verandah and Mr. Adams in well chosen words thanked the band for the compliment and heartily expressed their due appreciation of the high order of music afforded. He then invited all into the hotel, where cigars, peanuts, lemonade and cake were served, the band responding with three cheers for Mr. Adams and three cheers and a tiger for Mrs. Adams. After refreshments, by earnest request, a parting salute was played, when Mr. E. A. Lewis stepped from the ranks and expressed the thanks of the band for the cordial manner in which they were received and wished the newly wedded couple health, happiness and prosperity. A gentleman then proposed three cheers for Mr. and Mrs. Adams. So ended a pleasant occasion.

At the evening service, Judge J. M. Rice, of Cadillac, will deliver a lecture. As a lecturer Mr. Rice does not have to be introduced to the Charlevoix people, he is already well known to them.

The sermon at Black's school house at 3 o'clock next Sunday will be delivered by a Charlevoix County boy, Rev. Adam Clark.

Gov. Wolf Orders Trespassing Cattle Off Indian Grazing Lands.

Dallas, Texas, June 25. Yesterday was the last day of grace for trespassing cattle on Indian territory, the 40 days' grace granted by the secretary of the interior having expired. The cattle have all been driven off the Kiowa and Commanche reservations. The remaining trespassing herds are on the territory of Choctaws, Cherokees, Creeks, Seminoles, and Chicasaws. The most of them being concentrated in the dominion of the latter nation. Gov. Wolf sits down upon all purchases made by the Indians subsequent to the order of the secretary of the interior as deliberate and willful fraud upon the Chicasaw people, and declares the same to be unlawful, and therefore null and void.

The governor further says he will hold, confiscated, enough of those cattle to pay $1 per head to the Chickasaw nation, commencing yesterday, June 24, and will expel those remaining by men summoned for the purpose.

"AVE MARIA."

BY A. B BUSBY.

A sound floats up from the valley,
Through the tall pine trees,
And the faintest odor of incense,
Is borne on the breeze;
The leaves of the roses flutter
And fall to the ground,
And lilies are white in the twilight,
As I list to the sound.
It comes from a stately building,
Where the lights gleam dim;
For the saintly nuns are chanting
A vesper hymn.
And "Hail" they cry, sweet Mary,
For His dear sake,
For the shadows all will flee
When the day begins to break.

The white-robed priest at the altar
Intones but a solemn lay,
And softly the voices chorus
The requiem of the day.
In one rings a sound of sorrow,
Another a tone of pain,
And a note brings to us the bygone days
That never can come again.
But the dim, faint light in the chancel
Shows faces so pure and white,
And lips that in prayer are moving
For wisdom, grace, and light.
And "Hail," they cry, sweet Mary,
For His dear sake,
Let the shadows flee away,

But see the purple twilight
Is fading into night,
And the pale moon in the heavens
Gleams with uncertain light;
For the mist lies o'er the valley,
And the place looks drear and lone,
As ever to my ears is wafted
That sad monotone.
Floating through the pine trees
Comes the glimmering light,
Now the sound seems clearer
As the night grows bright.
For still they cry "Hail, Mary,"
For His dear sake
Soon shall the shadows vanish,
Soon shall the morning break.

Through the vale in silence,
To the peaceful lake,
And on its rippling waters
My lonely way I take.
No breath disturbs the quiet,
No sound the solemn night,
Save a faint, low murmur
Near a distant light.
But onward still, and onward
My boat goes on her way,
Till I, too, long for morning
And light of coming day.
For "Hail," they say, the shadows
Soon shall they flee away,
Soon shall the darkness vanish
In the full light of day.

THE MIDNIGHT ASSASSIN.

BY CAPTAIN JAMES MONTFORD.

"In the spring of 1862 I was wounded in the arm, and obtained leave to return home for a few weeks.

"The wound was slight, and a month had scarcely passed ere I was strong as ever, and began to feel that uneasy sensation, I can scarcely call it longing, which comes upon a soldier when far away from the field where victories and defeats are falling to his comrades whom he knows so well.

"Three weeks before my leave of absence expired I left home again and started for the field.

"When I arrived within thirty or forty miles of the point where the command was stationed, I found that the track had been torn up, and that we must remain at the small station until the rails could again be laid.

"While loitering about the little town a chance occurred for the purchase of a horse at a very moderate price, considering the times.

"I struck a bargain with the owner, and resolved to ride through the country to the point where the troops were stationed.

"This would be more pleasant, as I knew a young man, who was about to enlist, intending to go by the train, which was now at a standstill.

"He was a native of Phoneton, the town where we were detained, and was perfectly acquainted with the country surrounding it.

"Immediately after purchasing the horse I hunted him up, and it was soon agreed that we should ride across the country.

"Bright and early the following morning he rode up to the little inn where I was stopping, and in less than thirty minutes we were cantering through the village street in the direction of the camp.

"It was a pleasant day; a storm was impending, but not likely to fall until night.

"I never passed a finer time on horseback; but nothing interesting occurred, and I will hasten on to the story.

"As night approached, and my companion offered no information in regard to our distance from the camp, I began to consider that, as we had ridden at a good rate all day, we must be near our destination.

"'Well, Frank,' said I, 'we are nearly at the end of this journey, are we not?'

"'I guess we are, Colonel,' he replied.

"'Then you are not certain about it?'

"'I thought I was,' he replied, in a puzzled way, and looking about for landmarks.

"'Do you recollect where you are?' I inquired, after a short silence.

"He admitted that he did not, and, although he declared 'he didn't know how he could have made such a mistake,' I realized that we must be seeking a lodging for the night without delay, for the storm had gathered violence, and would soon discharge itself.

"'We must make inquiries at the first house,' I said, and urging the tired horses onward, we kept a sharp lookout for some habitation.

"But this was not met with when desired. We had ravaged the country, and a great many of the houses we passed were untenanted and dismantled.

"As it grew darker and darker, the prospect of remaining outside at the mercy of the storm began to cause some discomfort.

"'There's a house!' shouted Frank at last, and, following his eyes, I saw a light a short distance back from the road.

"It was a small building, unpainted, and did not promise much in the way of entertainment. Nevertheless, any kind of shelter is better than none in a storm, and we rode in through the open gate and dismounted.

"We were saluted by the barking of dogs from the back of the house, and before we had reached the door it was opened and a man appeared.

"We asked the way to our destination, and soon found that we had strayed many miles from the direct road.

"'You'll hardly git thar to-night,' said the man, in harsh accents; and he did not refuse lodgings for ourselves and horses when it was requested.

"We accompanied him to the stable and saw our tired animals introduced to the company of a cow and a pair of oxen, then followed our host back to the house.

"I had taken a strange dislike to the man, and was not made more easy by his uncivil manners and guttural tones.

"The room into which he led us was already occupied by a short, brown woman, the man's wife, and three very dirty children. The children were ordered off to bed by their mother, who, at her husband's suggestion, placed bread, butter, and a plate of cold potatoes upon the table for our delectation.

"I had often eaten worse fare with the relish which is given by sharp hunger, and did not despise the meal; my companion was more dainty, and, while making a pretense of eating, fastened his eyes upon the master of the house.

"The latter would have created suspicion in a saint. He bore the exact description of the ruffian in an old poem I have read:

"A lean-faced writhen knave,
Hawk-nosed and very hollow-eyed,
With mighty furrows in his stormy brows,
Long hair down his shoulders curled;
His chin was bare.

In fact, I could not help sharing, to a certain extent, in my comrade's fear; but we were in for it now, if danger was intended.

"We soon learned that our host was a violent partisan of the South; that he had lost two sons upon the battle-field, and that he would have shouldered arms himself if it hadn't been for the old woman!

"He did not seem to consider us foes, and Frank thought it necessary to express sentiments in favor of the man's principles.

"As we were preparing to retire for the night the door opened and a stout young man entered, shaking the water from his clothes.

"He was a neighbor, apparently, for the master addressed him in a familiar way, and as we followed our hostess from the room, I observed a signal pass between them, followed by glances, menacing, I thought, cast in our direction.

"The apartment into which I was ushered was small, with no furniture except the bed, and without a door.

"My companion was to be in an adjoining room. The woman made an awkward apology for the 'poor place,' as she called it, and ended by saying that 'her sons had once occupied the rooms, and mebbe my friends had killed them.'

"This suggestion came so abruptly that it startled me. It was the first intimation given that our profession was understood.

"I made some commonplace remark, and was left alone, to sleep if I could, which was not at once.

"I heard the family retire; then all was still save the patter of the storm outside. I felt oppressed, as though with the sense of approaching misfortune.

"The form of our ill-looking host was conjured up before my mind, attended by all the villainous circumstances and incidents that an active imagination could furnish.

"At last, after tossing about for hours, I fell asleep. How long I lay unconscious I know not; but when I awoke it was with a start, and my faculties were upon the stretch at once.

"I heard some one in the hall without my room. He came with the stealthy motion of a murderer stealing upon his victim.

"My knavish host was coming to avenge the death of his sons, was the idea that flashed into my heated brain, and stealing from the bed I began to feel about for my weapons.

"They were not where I had placed them. Had the assassins removed the pistols, that they might perpetrate their meditated crime in safety?

"So it seemed, and taking a large, strong-bladed clasp-knife from the pocket of my pantaloons, I stole toward the door, resolved to meet the villains, and take them by surprise.

"I reached the door in the dark, and ere I knew it had stepped outside. Some form was before me. I could hear a stifled breath at my side, and the next instant was grasped by a pair of strong hands.

"My knife was knocked from my hand, and I struggled with the desperation of a madman to prevent the blow which I expected would fall.

"I endeavored to throw my assailant to the floor, but his limbs seemed formed of steel. I dealt and received several blows, and at last we fell, and rolled over and over upon the floor.

"All this occupied but an instant; but I was already becoming winded. My antagonist was too strong.

"Suddenly I made a last desperate effort, and we fell upon the stairs, rolling over until we reached the bottom.

"The fall separated us, and as I staggered to my feet a light appeared, carried in the hand of my host. His wife was looking out upon us through the partially open door of her bedroom.

"'Go on, Colonel,' I cried; 'why do you pause?'

"There's not much more to tell. I had been battling all this time with Frank, the new recruit, and my good host was as innocent of all sinister intentions as the sleepy chickens whose slumbers we disturbed.

"My companion had gone to sleep, oppressed with uneasy thoughts concerning the master of the house, a terrible dream had followed, and still under the influence of the 'ghastly hag who rides our dreams,' he had risen from his bed, only to awake to grapple in the struggle for life which followed.

"We rode away the next morning with better feelings toward our rough but hearty friends of the cabin, and did not trouble them with the suspicion we had formed of their character."

Bill Nye on House-Cleaning.

It is now the season of the year when we begin to spruce up around our premises and put on the airs of spring. A few well-timed remarks upon matters of general interest to housekeepers, coming from one who understands fully what he is talking about, may be beneficial. If they are received in the proper spirit my object will have been attained. All I care for is to furnish all the information I can and do all the good I can. Life is made up of these little acts of kindness, and to be well informed, and then to be able to spread that information around all over the country in such a way as to ameliorate the condition of our race, is a most fortunate thing for the possessor, and a great boon to those who may be the recipients of that information.

A good, durable whitewash may be made by slacking pure lime with salt and a light solution of water. Mix while cold, and stir gently while boiling, so that it will not burn on. Let it stand ten minutes and then carefully skim it. If it does not settle readily drop in the yelk of an egg. Do not put glue in your whitewash in order to make it stick. It is a great mistake to unite glue or baking powder with whitewash that is to be used on the walls or ceiling of a parlor.

A gallon of milk will improve a large quantity of whitewash, but the cream may be taken off before the milk is used. To apply whitewash on a ceiling is not a difficult process, and many people pay a professional when they might do it equally well themselves.

Take a whitewash brush of about the medium height and dip it in the liquid preparation. Next carefully remove the surplus by gently pressing the brush against the side of the pail. You can then stand on the piano and apply the solution to the ceiling, a little at a time. If you do this, however, do not forget and step forward into the works of the piano, or set the pail on the strings while you are at work. After you have been at work for a few moments, and got your sleeves well filled with whitewash, you may empty them back into the pail, thus saving the surplus, which otherwise might be wasted. Care should be used in spattering oil paintings and bric-a-brac on the walls. Some oil paintings look better spattered with whitewash, while others do not. For this reason a keen discrimination is necessary, and every man may not succeed with the brush.

Whitewash may be removed from the eye by the judicious use of muriatic acid, which cuts the lime and purifies the eye itself, removing any animal substance also that may have fallen into the socket, including the eye itself.

Maple sugar may be made by squeezing the juice out of the maple tree and boiling it down to about the consistency of the spring poem. The maple flavor is not injurious to the taste, and does not interfere with the popularity of this justly celebrated depe for the hot pancake. Much maple syrup and sugar grow in Vermont, and I have often wondered what becomes of this healthful beverage. Why maple syrup, made from the juice of the maple tree, should not find its way into the channels of trade is more than I can understand.

A cheap and tasty window curtain may be made of the finest batiste, cut the proper length, and then decorated with painted flowers. Most any lady can readily paint these flowers in any design, or at least a great many seem to think they can. The flowers may be any variety which fancy may dictate, such as corn flowers, daisies, pond lilies, or forget-me-nots, and, if they do not look just right, they may be erased while still green by boiling the curtains in a solution of benzine and turpentine, say two parts of the former to ninety-eight of the latter.

A design to which my attention has been recently called consists of a unique, improvised flower, composed by a young lady who is destined to make her mark some day, unless some one interferes. She has already made her mark in several places, in fact, but these flowers certainly deserve something more than a mere passing notice. They are not copied from the monotonous and tedious uniformity so much affected in nature, but they stand out by themselves and attract the attention at once, because of their bold originality. Instead of copying nature, and thus becoming tiresome, she has constructed a flower that is a cross between a rose cancer and a ginger cooky. It grows on a perpendicular stem that looks like a dark-green hat-rack with buds on it, that remind the enraptured spectator of an aggravated felon on a dark red thumb, just peeping out of a pale green, weather-beaten bandage.

Nothing so bold in conception or so utterly free from conventionality has come within my range of observation for years. The inflammatory condition of the blossom itself, the bold and mathematically perpendicular poise of the stem, and the early stages of eruption visible in the complexion of the bud, challenge the admiration of the philanthropist and the Board of Health.

It stands out as a work of art, alone and safe from imitation. It certainly has never been successfully imitated by nature, and I do not think it ever will be. While nature loves to give us freaks now and then, I may safely say that she will never furnish us with a flower like this, a flower that looks as though it had been nailed on the parent stem with shingle-nails, while the foliage, it would seem, was cut out of sheet-iron and riveted to the curtain by the hand of a master. It is one of those mock-eyed, fragile blossoms of the vale that you could successfully use in beating out a man's brains.

A Little Hard o' Hearing.

Jonathan Chace, the quaint old Rhode Island Quaker—who has a tender side, by the way, for all the victims of Cupid—was taking the subscriptions of his colleagues of the Senate for the wedding present they were to give Gen. Anson McCook, the Secretary of the Senate, at his marriage. He went to Dolph, of Oregon, and said: "We are going to give McCook a wedding present. How much will you subscribe?" Dolph seemed astonished. Finally he said, with some appearance of confusion: "Why, I'll give something, of course, if you want me to, but I'd like a little time to think about it." "Oh, certainly," responded Chace, somewhat miffed, and then he walked off. Then Dolph hurried over to his colleague, Mitchell, of Oregon, and said to him in a puzzled way: "Chace asked me just now to join him in giving a wedding present to his cook. What do you suppose he's driving at? When my cooks get married I don't go around asking other fellows to send them wedding presents." "Oh," laughed Mitchell, who had been in the Senate before, "he meant McCook—Anson McCook, the Secretary, you know. It's the custom, you know, for Senators to give the officers of the Senate presents when they get married." "Oh," said Dolph, breathing freely again, "of course, of course."

It is related that when the first Maine railroad was started, about forty years ago, W. C. Pitman, of Bangor, was a conductor. One rainy morning he started from Waterville, and on arriving at North Belgrade, a flag station, not seeing any flag, ran by the station. Just as the train had passed the red flag was run out for some passengers to get on. Mr. Pitman stopped his train, and asked Stephen Richardson, the station agent, why he did not display the flag before. Mr. Richardson replied: "Be you a-goin' to run your train in rainy weather? I didn't think you would."

If you grasp a rattle-snake firmly about the neck he can not hurt you, says a contemporary paper. To be perfectly safe, it would be well to let some one else do the grasping.

Manual Training in Philadelphia.

A revolution in educational methods has occurred in the city of Philadelphia. The Spring Garden Institute, established long ago by Mr. Charles G. Leland, showed the practicability of hand-training; Mr. Edward T. Steel, President of the Board of Education, for years advocated manual training in a general way; and Mr. James MacAlister, who went from Milwaukee, Wis., in 1883, to accept the superintendency of the schools of the city, writes that he found public opinion fully alive to the importance of manual training being added to the public education, but that nothing had been done to give it organized shape. It is easy to understand how, under his magnetic influence, the movement quickly crystallized. Moved by the persuasive force of his tongue and pen, the "Councils" appropriated money, and the Board of Education organized a manual training school as part of the educational system of the city, as free as any other of the public schools; and it went into operation in September last, with one hundred and thirty pupils—all that could then be accommodated. Its course of instruction is similar to that of the schools of Boston, St. Louis, and Chicago. The school is a high school, with manual exercise constituting a feature of equal importance with the mental exercises. The first observation in regard to this new school made by visitors is that the pupils take more interest in its exercises than is usually taken by pupils in the exercises of schools of that grade. The school meets with the most unqualified approval of the public, and the Board of Education designs to establish three or four more schools of similar character. It is the purpose of the Superintendent and the board to furnish the school with a reference library and a small museum, "illustrating the raw materials and manufactured products of the more important industries of the country, and, to some extent, drawings and models showing the evolution of the fundamental tools and machines."

Another feature of the reorganized educational system of Philadelphia is the School of Industrial Art, which is open to the grammar-school pupils of both sexes, who are admitted once a week for two hours. The course of instruction comprises drawing and design, modeling, wood-carving, and certain exercises in carpentry and joinery, and metal-work.

A third feature is sewing, which is made part of the regular course of instruction in every girls' school above the primary. The work is graded, and forms a system of sequential steps. Thirty-two special sewing instructors are now employed, but it is intended ultimately to have the instruction given by the regular class instructors. A fourth feature is the free kindergarten, which can not be made part, officially, of the public-school establishment, because the legal school age in Pennsylvania is six years. But an association called the Sub-Primary School Society has founded twenty-eight kindergartens, and supports them, with the aid of an appropriation from the School Board, as adjuncts to the regular schools.

Philadelphia has thus the most complete course of manual instruction of any city in the country, consisting of the Kindergarten, the School of Industrial Art for the boys and girls of the grammar schools, and the "Manual Training School" for boys from fourteen to eighteen years of age.

Superintendent MacAlister writes that the conviction obtains among members of the Board of Education of Philadelphia, and is, in his opinion, growing in the public mind generally, that every child should receive manual training; that a complete education implies the training of the hand in connection with the training of the mind, and that this feature must ultimately be incorporated into the public education. He concludes: "I feel encouraged to go forward with the work. The great principles which underlie the system are with me intense convictions, and they mean nothing less than a revolution in education. The new system is the realization of the dream of every great thinker and reformer in education, from Comenius, Locke, and Rousseau to Pestalozzi, Froebel, and Spencer. My conviction and action in connection with this movement are based upon what, in my judgment, should constitute an education designed to prepare a human being for the social conditions of to-day, and not merely for the industrial demands of our time. And this must be realized in the public schools, or they will fail in accomplishing the ends for which they were instituted and maintained."—Charles H. Ham, in Harper's Magazine.

EDUCATION is often valued not for itself, but merely as a stepping stone to wealth. We give it to the young and they take it not so much that they may become through it better, nobler, happier, and more useful men and women, as that they may gain the power of rising from a lower to a higher station, from poverty to mediocrity, or from mediocrity to wealth. Thus the education that fits them only to adorn a humble position happily and contentedly, instead of cultivating ambitious longings, that cherishes health and strength of body and fills the mind with resources for its own activity and power for its own development, without any direct reference to amassing a fortune, is too often neglected for narrower and shallower instruction. Is not the mind more than the purse? Shall we sell the one to fill the other, or shall we rather spend freely of our gold to build up the intellect, to cultivate the taste, to fortify the principles?

THE reason why egotists find the world so ugly is because they only see themselves in it.

HUMOR.

A BALLET-GIRL is something of a philosopher; she believes in gauze and effect.

WHEN a young girl goes to church to exhibit her new sealskin she certainly might be called sack-religious.

WHAT SCIENCE SAYS.

The "Fearful and Wonderful" Mechanism of the Human System Graphically Portrayed.

[In the editorial columns of the New York Analyst, H. Lassing, M. D., editor, writes the following beautiful description of the laboratories of the human system. We think we have never read a finer or more trustworthy one.]

"Man is the greatest of all chemical laboratories. Magnify the smallest cell of the body, and what a factory is spread before the eyes, countless chambers in which are globes of air, masses of solid matter, globules of dying liquid; a flash comes and the whole is consumed and needful heat is carried into every part of the system. Electrical forces also generate and are conveyed to the brain, the muscles and the various nerve centers.

"In another act of a million chambers we see various gases and vapors. By chemical action these are changed and purified in the lungs and the skin. The blood we often say is a great living river. In its current are masses which the air in the lungs did not affect; blocks of chalk; slabs of tartar; pieces of bone-ash, strings of albumen; drops of molasses, and lines of alcohol. How are those waste masses disposed of? Begin where you will in this great stream you must come to the purifying places of the system. Here all is activity and an invisible force reaches out into the stream, seizes and carries this mass of waste into vast trenches, thence into a smaller reservoir, and finally into a larger reservoir, which regularly discharges its contents.

This separation of lime, uric acid, and other waste material from the blood, without robbing it of a particle of the life fluid, passes human comprehension. In health this blood-purifying process is carried on without our knowledge. The organs in which it is done are faithful servants whose work is silent as long as health remains.

"People strangely wait until pain strikes a nerve before they will realize that they have any trouble. They do not know that pain concerns chiefly the exterior, not the interior, of the body. A certain set of nerves connect these blood-purifying organs with the brain. They may not gnaw and bite as does the toothache or a scratch, but they regularly, silently report. When these organs are failing, these nerves indicate it by drawing the blood from the face and cheek, leaving the lip and eye blanched, by sending uric acid poison into the smallest veins, the skin then becoming gray, yellow, or brown. They also prevent the purification of the blood in the lungs, and cause pulmonary difficulties, weariness and pain. Who enjoys perfect health, especially in this land where we burn the candle in one mass? The athlete breaks down in the race; the editor falls at his desk; the merchant succumbs in his counting-room. These events should not have been unexpected for nature long ago hung out her 'lanterns of alarm.' When the 'accident' finally comes, its fatal effect is seen in a hundred forms; either as congestion, chronic weakness, as wrong action, as variable appetite, as head troubles, as palpitation and irregularities of the heart, as premature decay, as dryness and harshness of the skin causing the hair to drop out or turn gray, as apoplexy, as paralysis, as general debility, blood-poisoning, etc.

"Put no faith, then, in the wiseacre who says there is no danger as long as there is no pain. Put no faith in the physician, whoever he may be, who says it is a mere cold or a slight indisposition. He knows little, if any, more than you do about it. He can neither see nor examine these organs, and depends entirely upon experimental tests, that you can make as well as he.

"If the output is discolored or muddy, if it contains albumen, lymph, crystals, sweet or morbid matter, is red with escaped blood, or roily with gravel, mucus, and froth, something is wrong, and disease and death are not far away.

"These organs which we have described thus at length, because they are really the most important ones in the human system, the ones in which a large majority of human ailments originate, and are sustained, are the kidneys. They have not been much discussed in public because it is conceded that the profession has little known power over them. What is wanted for such organs is a simple medicine, which can do no harm to the most delicate but must be of the greatest benefit to the afflicted. Such a remedy, tried and proved by many thousands all over the world, is Warner's safe cure. With those in whom disease is deep-seated, it is the only specific. For those in whom the seeds are sown and the beginning of illness started it is an unfailing reliance. It may be recommended to the well to prevent sickness and to the sick to prevent death. With its aid the great filtering engines of the system keep on in their silent work without interruption; without it they get out of gear, and then disease and death open the door and cross the threshold."

Such writing ought not only to please but to carry conviction that what Editor Lassing, M. D., —so high an authority—says is true, and that his counsel is worthy the attention and heed of all prudent, right-minded people.

An Episode on a Cable Car.

They were sitting on a cable car. It was the dummy. The rain had given the climate a rest for an hour, and they were going home from Mary Anderson.

"Don't," she whispered to him.

"Don't what?"

"Don't press my hand so hard, and take away your arm."

"What do you mean?" he whispered, and glared across her at a man on the other side.

"Fare, please!" said the conductor, and she found she had been squeezing the conductor's hand, and he—well—he humored her.—San Francisco Chronicle.

A Light Loss.

Gray—You are looking very sour this morning, Green.

Green—I'm feeling very bad, very bad, indeed. You see, I forgot myself last night; was out with the boys, and drank too much, and lost——

Gray—Good gracious! You didn't lose your wallet, did you?

Green—No, but I'm afraid I lost my character.

Gray—Pshaw! Don't be downcast about that. It isn't as bad as if you had lost something valuable.—Boston Courier.

Misunderstood.

Benevolent daughter of the house to rural cousin, who is causing some delay by his second plate of soup: "I should like to keep company with you, if I could."

Josiah (blushingly): "Oh, yes—only—er—I am keepin' company now with Almira Higgins, of our place."—Life.

Life seems hardly worth the living to-day to many a tired, unhappy, discouraged woman who is suffering from chronic female weakness for which she has been able to find no relief. But there is a certain cure for all the painful complaints, to which the weaker sex is liable. We refer to Dr. Pierce's "Favorite Prescription," to the virtues of which thousands of women can testify. As a tonic and nervine it is unsurpassed. All druggists.

SHE—"What a man you are to come to a decision? Don't you know your own mind?" He—"No, dear, I don't believe I do; not even by sight."

Important.

When you visit or leave New York City, save baggage, expressage, and $3 carriage hire, and stop at the Grand Union Hotel, opposite Grand Central Depot.

613 rooms, fitted up at a cost of one million dollars, $1 and upwards per day. European plan. Elevator. Restaurant supplied with the best. Horse cars, stages, and elevated railroad to all depots. Families can live better for less money at the Grand Union Hotel than at any other first-class hotel in the city.

Not All Right.

A reporter called upon a prominent citizen and said: "I would like to interview you with regard to the strike."

The prominent citizen frowned, reflected a moment and replied:

"No, sir, no. It is a rule of my life never to be interviewed, but I don't mind telling you privately what I think."

"All right."

"But mind, now, you must promise not to print a word I say nor an idea I advance."

"I promise."

The prominent citizen freely expressed himself. And the reporter, after again promising that he would make no note of the conversation, departed. Early the next morning the prominent citizen seized the paper and eagerly looked for the interview.

"What are you looking for?" his wife asked.

"Nothing," he replied as he threw down the paper. "You can't place any confidence in those confounded reporters."

"Has he printed what you said?"

"No."

"Then it's all right."

"No, it's not all right. Do you reckon I want to talk two hours and then be treated with contempt? He ought to have said I refused to be interviewed, and then to have stated what I said. A reporter is a nuisance."—Arkansaw Traveler.

Men and Women

Who are constantly nervous are, in nineteen cases out of twenty, dyspeptic. The twentieth case will be found, upon investigation, to be that of a person who is troubled with symptoms of indigestion. Thinness, unnatural anxiety, peevishness, buzzing in the ears, a disposition to start on the sudden closing of a door, tremulousness of the hands—more particularly of the right—show that the nerves are weak and unsteady. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters strengthens and quiets the nerves. This effect is a speedy consequence of its invigorating and regulating action upon the organs of digestion and assimilation. It enriches the blood, conquers a chronic tendency to biliousness, relieves sick and nervous headaches, and regulates the bowels without griping them. A more trustworthy defense against fever and ague does not exist, and it subdues a tendency to rheumatism, kidney and bladder derangement. Taken before retiring, it induces sound repose.

The Photographer's Habit.

"The force of habit is a wonderful thing," said the philosophizing passenger who expectorated upon the floor; "now, just to show you. I'm a photographer out in the country here a piece, and the other day I was called out to take a negative of a dead man. At my suggestion his relatives propped him up on some chairs so that his position would be somewhere near natural, and then stood back while I took him. After focusing the lens I stepped out, looked to see that everything was all right, said 'Now, hold still a moment, please,' and made the exposure. Right there was the first laughter that had been heard in that house for two weeks."—Chicago News.

After the most exhaustive practical tests in hospitals and elsewhere, the gold medal and certificate of highest merit were awarded to St. Jacobs Oil, as the best pain-curing remedy, at the Calcutta International Exhibition.

A New Plaster.

A new plaster or artificial fire-proof stone has for its chief constituent the mineral asbestine, a silicate of magnesium. To this is added powdered flint and caustic potash, with sufficient water-glass (silicate of soda) to make it into an adhesive plaster. Sand also is mixed with it before use. No lathing is necessary, as the mixture adheres to any smooth wood or metallic surface.

Work of Observatories.

Progress in astronomy no longer depends upon chance observation, but is now effected by a division of labor and a concentration at certain points upon some one particular object of research. The leading observatories all work at specialties. At Harvard the relative magnitude of the stars receives chief attention; at Princeton, spectroscopy; at Alleghany Observatory, the dark part of the solar spectrum and the effect of the invisible heat rays on the earth; at the National Observatory, positions and orbits of satellites; at Cincinnati, double stars; at Chicago, the surface of Jupiter; and at Albany and Yale, the perfecting of maps of the heavens.

The Press on the Rum Traffic.

Next to the platform, the numerous and effective agencies of the press are the most potent influences to bring to bear on the liquor problem.

And it will be found that there is no power on earth that can keep the people in subjection to the rum power, when we bring the light of reason, through the means of the printed page, to their understanding. The printed page is like the noonday sun, it will scatter the cobwebs of selfish subserviency to the liquor interests and awaken an enlightened conscience, that will not be satisfied until this vile traffic is banished from the land.

The printed page is the silent monitor that enlightens the millionaire in his seclusion, the workman in his shop, the merchant in his mart, the scholar in his study. The father, mother, sister and brother, and all classes and conditions are furnished food for thought. While none are too poor, or too low, for this means to reach them. Therefore let the printed page be scattered broadcast over the country as our most effective weapon to crush this monster evil. Let the inspiration and struggle of our intellect be to attain to higher and broader views as to our duty and obligation, and keep our minds in constant action to thwart the selfishness and duplicity of the rum seller, in his depredations on the best interest of the people. The press has already removed the dust and slime of ignorance, and opened a mountain of light, and taught the people their broad claim to common justice and their right to immunity from this vile poison which so effectually interferes with their inalienable right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness: and we, the people, will also learn to resist the usurpations, fraud and chicanery, that the rum traffic has so long practiced on them through the political influence of degenerated party, and the credulity of their partisans.

We must know our rights and dare to maintain them against the sophistry of both the rum-seller, political tricksters, and the so-called Church Temperance Society, and other organizations, whose principal aim and purpose is to make us believe in the fall of regulating this evil. This last is the most dangerous delusion of all, as their only method consists of a sanction of the crime of rum-selling for a money consideration: a wicked concession to justify the criminal business and make it reputable.

The printed page is the silent monitor that comes with its good influences to vitalize our intellectual energies, like the evening dew on vegetation, which makes no display, no sound, but how effective, how much like the life and vigor it imparts to the flowers and green grass, and which makes all nature bloom and brighten, with color and beauty, to delight the eye and spread the bless[ings] of a glorious harvest for the benefit of humanity. -From Demorest's [Mon]thly for July.

[Cap]ital and Labor.

[Ex]tract lent of John Swinton's [Pa]per [com]ment of the labor unions. [Com]ments on the claim of the [brew]ers that they give employment to [labor] and says: "Think of this, [that] half a million men employ[ed] in buying food, in [manu]facturing it into a poison that [kills] hundreds, wives [wid]ows, children [and] industr[y] as lazy, [dru]nkards skulls, [and] sends [its] work in place [of]"

with tramps and loafers, for the workers to support. If it is true that every person who produces nothing beneficial to society is no better than a pauper, . . then all labor employed making, handling or selling such drinks is labor wasted, and people so employed are paupers and makers of paupers.

"The brewers, distillers, liquor, wine and beer dealers, are among the worst enemies of workingmen; the temperance people are their friends. The former rob them of their health, happiness and life; the latter want to see every man, woman and child, well housed, well clothed and fed. The objects of temperance are the abolition of poverty, crime, disease and premature death."

MORTGAGE SALE.

Whereas, default has been made in the payment of the money secured by a mortgage, made and dated the 4th day of December, in the year A. D. one thousand eight hundred and eighty four, by Nancy Hause to the Pine Lake Iron Company, a corporation created and existing under the laws of the state of Illinois, and doing business in the county of Charlevoix, in the state of Michigan, which mortgage was recorded in the office of the register of deeds of the said county of Charlevoix, in Book 9 of mortgages, at page 516, on the 1st day of January, in the year A. D. one thousand eight hundred and eighty-five, and the said mortgage is now owned by the said Pine Lake Iron Company. And whereas, the said Pine Lake Iron Company, as owner thereof, has exercised and doth now exercise the option to it given in and by said mortgage, and has declared and doth hereby declare the whole amount of principal secured by and mentioned in said mortgage, as well as the interest thereon to be now due and unpaid. And whereas, the amount claimed to be due on said mortgage at the date of this notice is the sum of one hundred and fifty-three dollars and ninety cents ($153.90) principal and interest, and a further sum of fifteen dollars ($15.00) provided by law as an attorney's fee in the foreclosure of said mortgage, which is the whole amount claimed to be due thereon, and no suit or proceeding at law or in chancery having been instituted to recover the debt now remaining secured by the said mortgage or any part thereof, whereby the power of sale contained therein has become operative. D. one thousand eight hundred and eighty-four, and executed by Walter Mauney and Amelia Mauney, his wife, to the Pine Lake Iron Company, a corporation created and existing under the laws of the state of Illinois, and doing business in the county of Charlevoix, in the state of Michigan, which mortgage was recorded in the office of the register of deeds of the said county of Charlevoix, in Liber 8 of mortgages, at page 509, on the 9th day of September, in the year A. THE GLORIOUS FOURTH.

How the Day was Observed in Charlevoix.

Last Saturday was hot, dry, and dusty. But that did not in the least prevent the enthusiasm of Young America rising to the usual high pitch which nothing but a great noise will satisfy.

The people from the surrounding country began to arrive quite early, and the boats brought large numbers of excursionists from up the lake, notwithstanding another celebration was in progress at East Jordan.

The order of exercises was followed substantially as heretofore published.

At ten o'clock the procession formed at the Village Hall, and marched under the direction of Harrison Berdan, marshal of the day, to the opera house. In the procession were young ladies dressed in white, representing each state and territory in the union, led by Uncle Sam and Miss Columbia; also thirteen boys representing the thirteen original colonies of the union.

At the opera house the audience who braved the heat listened to music by the Charlevoix cornet band, prayer by the Rev. J. T. Iddings, reading of the poem, "Paul Revere's Ride," by Prof. Enos, and music by a glee club organized for the occasion. Judge J. M. Rice, of Cadillac, then delivered the oration, speaking substantially as follows:

This anniversary day comes to us with a deeper significance, a broader meaning than can be indicated by the thunder of cannon and the enthusiasm of a gala day of dress parade.

Nations are usually the outgrowth of necessity, their formation is a part of the plan and purpose of Supreme power, advancing humanity to a higher plane. Going back through the intervening years a careful analysis of the tendency of political thought discloses a continued forward movement toward broader and higher conditions.

The declaration of principles which formed the basis around which the heroism of a century ago gathered, was not the result of spasmodic thought, but rather the culmination of events, the import of which the world has not yet fathomed. It was the resultant force of ideas, the marshaling and expression of convictions implanted in the constitution of man, developed by slow processes until they had reached high tide and could no longer be confined.

It was one of the epochs in human history from which sprang a wiser civilization; reaching back into the dim uncertain past, it attacked the divine right of kings; it uncovered the despotic thought of the ages and laid bare the schemes by which tyranny sought to triumph.

Stretching forward into the future it aroused the patriotic impulses of a people groaning under cruel inflictions of arbitrary rule; it kindled the spark of freedom in the hearts of men, which no power could extinguish; it gave promise of securing the divine right of the people to rule and become the preface of political liberty.

The small undisciplined force which opposed its independent front to the soldiery of George the III was not alone the army of the continental congress, but the army of the world; the army of human progress, to whom was committed the outworking of those plans which should demonstrate the political equality of mankind, upon whom was placed the grand responsibility of causing a more rapid growth in national affairs.

The desperate valor with which the men of 1776 withstood the fierce onslaught of superior numbers, better disciplined and better equipped, are familiar historical facts. The glow of their burning homes projects its light into the civilization of to-day and illuminates our firesides. From their desolated hearthstones are springing the fruitage of these riper years. Their achievements in behalf of freedom are not alone our heritage, but their grand results have left their impress upon the world, and while we may justly claim the honor of their heroism we cannot circumscribe within national lines an influence that goes out to bless every land.

The crumbling tombstones which mark their sunken graves are neglected, almost forgotten, but the spirit which inspired their heroic lives impressed upon the genius of our institutions is as fadeless as are the glittering stars of heaven.

It is not my purpose to follow the fortunes of that little Spartan band in resisting the aggressions of European tyranny, in their weary marches and self sacrificing valor; it is enough to know that they formed a phalanx of bravery unsurpassed, that building for their posterity they left a legacy to all mankind, and that wherever despotic power shall seek to crush, the moral influence of their exalted patriotism shall become a shield of defence.

May we not rather briefly outline some of the results produced by their brave defense of liberty, and which are the legitimate outcome of their self-sacrifice as they relate to material, intellectual, and moral progress.

National power cannot be determined by army ranks, else in the view of on-looking nations we should have no standing. An army of 25,000 men is not the index by which foreign countries estimate our power of aggression or resistance, nor does it in any degree indicate the growth which the nineteenth century has witnessed in those resources which make a strong and independent nation. Material progress cannot be rightly measured by apparent military and naval strength. Glancing back a quarter of a century, we were brought to face a war of such magnitude, that, viewing it in the clearer atmosphere of to-day, seems unparalleled. Without army, navy, money, or munitions of war, we found ourselves upon the verge of such a struggle as no other people could have successfully met, and which tested to the utmost our inherent national strength. A half century of peaceful pursuits devoted to building happy homes, fostering diversified industries, and to the unconscious accumulation of resources, produced a material development of which we little dreamed, and which prepared us for the supreme trial when it came. The serene flow of the peaceful years preceding the storm of 1861, largely prepared our nation to take her rightful place as first among the powers of the world.

Content in the development of commercial and agricultural interests, believing that the costly inheritance which we had received baptized in the patriotic blood of the fathers might be enjoyed and transmitted unimpaired, we pursued our way, building beautiful cities, wooing from the bosom of mother earth her hidden treasures, roaring mills and factories, felling forests and gathering bountiful harvests, and thus we laid a foundation of strength and endurance, which in the desperate days of war was like an anchor, and enabled the ship of state to safely outride its fury.

With a material growth, wonderful, almost incomprehensible, we have taken such a position before the world as can only be secured by demonstrated power.

Our first hundred years of national existence has placed us in the front rank among the nations of the earth, in point of wealth, military standing, statesmanship, and such resources as command the respect and admiration of all men.

Our increase in population to sixty millions, the rapid settlement of our vast public domain, the inventive genius of our people creating new and improved appliances and compelling steam and electricity to do a large proportion of our work—these are some of the evidences of our progress, and the results which have come from the unflinching bravery of our revolutionary fathers, their self-sacrifice and heroic devotion to liberty. But national power and permanancy cannot be determined by material progress alone, there are other and still more important factors which enter into the stability of free governments.

The men of the revolution not only had the courage of their convictions, not only possessed the personal bravery to pledge their lives, their fortunes, and their sacred honor to their country's cause, but they also possessed that mental power and equipoise which enabled them to skillfully plan and intelligently direct their war forces to the greatest advantage.

Power is not so much physical as mental. Blind force is of little use either to its possessor or the world; it is force controlled and directed by wise methods that makes men powerful and nations strong. Germany's strength is not so much in her colossal army as in the controlling thought of a Bismarck and his compeers. England's standing is not so dependent upon her magnificent navy, and her war worn veterans as upon the intellectual power of a Gladstone and his associates. The successes which attended the war of the revolution were not so much the result of powerful armies and navies as of the intelligent direction of forces, the advanced thought and unconquerable spirit of independence which animated both the leaders and the rank and file. An important element which entered into the victories which were achieved by the federal over confederate arms, was the broader mental training and the more intelligent application of scientific methods in war of the northern over the southern soldiery.

Rising above the triumphs of physical courage, above the trophies of the battle field, interwoven into their successes, are grander victories than those which crown the hero of the conflict. The history of the revolution cannot be told in the record of its battles, brilliant as they were.

The declaration of independence and the written constitution of the states, evidence a breadth of thought, a knowledge of statesmanship, and a forecast of the needs of a free people which denote higher powers than ever result from the achievements of war.

From such an ancestry, to whose acknowledged bravery was added the still brighter crown of intellectual superiority, we have received our rich inheritance. The march of mind has kept pace with material progress, and in the higher realm of political thought we have been foremost among the nations.

The spread of education has closely followed the advancing tide of emigration; the common school has accompanied the woodsman's axe; colleges and universities have opened their inviting doors to every aspirant; the astronomer has investigated the phenomena of the heavens and unfolded the mysteries of its circling worlds; the philosopher has explored the entire realm of metaphysics; science has ranged the universe in search of truth; and art has exhausted all her resources to formulate results. The years have been heavily ladened with patents of invention, and the opportunities for intellectual culture have been within the reach of all, and have incited our people to highest endeavor, until in all those attainments which enter into intelligent citizenship, we are not surpassed by the older nations of Europe.

The war of the rebellion largely changed the current of thought that in times of peace nations must prepare for war by providing large standing armies, which, while they assume to protect, impoverish the country, and are a constant menace to free government, and introduced the new doctrine that preparation for war is best made by such an administration of affairs as induces the growth of patriotism in the hearts of the people, and that national permanancy depends not so much upon the numerical strength of her army, not so much upon the number of her ironclads, and the expensive armament of her land and naval forces, as upon the deep seated convictions of her sons "that governments of the people, by the people, for the people must not perish from the earth."

There is still a more important factor which enters into national success and permanancy than material growth or even intellectual progress. It is the recognition of the moral in the formation of a government, the recognition of those essential elements that must form the basis, of those fundamental principles of equality and justice which lie underneath every perfect national edifice.

The primary cause which precipitated a conflict between the mother country and her colonies, was a misuse of authority, a denial of equitable rights, which, while bearing oppressively upon them, was none the less unjust to herself.

Nations must protect the rights of their component parts, else the loss which result become their own. The refusal of the British crown to deal justly worked out for her defeat and for her colonies a grand future.

The same denial of equitable right which caused the war of 1776, operating upon the new nation produced an almost equally disastrous result. Issuing triumphantly from the struggles of the revolution, forgetting that history repeats itself, forgetting those fundamental principles stated in the declaration of independence, disregarding those truths which they had declared to the world were self evident, they vainly tried to build a stable government upon a cornerstone of injustice and oppression. The grave mistake they thus made plunged the nation into a contest of such magnitude in later years, that often times the scales were almost evenly balanced between life and death, and with bated breath we awaited the doubtful issue.

To possess the elements of permanancy, governmental policy must include such a progressive statesmanship as shall lead to the elevation of her constituency into higher as well as broader manhood. Our republic came into existence claiming to be the champion of equal rights, asserting the profound conviction of her people that all men were entitled to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. Her appeal to the world was based upon certain inalienable rights, her wisest philosophy recognized that prosperity depended upon maintaining political equality. That future security was conditioned upon a due and proper recognition of divine authority, and a faithful acceptance of the doctrine of the brotherhood of man, and with these principles as a guiding chart she took her place among the nations.

THE INDUSTRIAL OUTLOOK.

The Lake Shore switchmen in the vicinity of Chicago quit work last week because eight non-union men have not been discharged, in accordance with a pledge made to them by Sheriff Hanchett early in May. The strikers derailed a number of freight cars and delayed passenger trains. The police had to resort to their clubs to prevent greater damage. The railroad officials are firm in their determination to fight to the end.

An exciting episode in the Lake Shore Railway switchmen's strike occurred at Chicago. It was a wild chase of a Nickel-Plate engine, literally black with infuriated strikers, and a Milwaukee and St. Paul engine drawing a box-car filled with men down the Lake Shore tracks after two engines drawing two cabooses filled with railroad officials, imported switchmen, policemen, and reporters; and the exchange of pistol-shots for heavy iron coupling-pins, bricks, and lumps of coal. The pistol-shots were fired by Matt Pinkerton and four officers on the platform of the rear caboose, and the iron missiles and coal were hurled from the sloping tender of the Nickel-Plate engine, which was slightly in advance of the Milwaukee one, and running tender first. At Grand Crossing the Lake Shore engines were obliged to come to a stand-still. The pursuing engine was reversed, but not one second too soon, and, as it was, it went crashing into the caboose with sufficient force to throw a number of men from the tender and drive the train forty or fifty feet forward. The instant the collision took place the strikers swarmed out upon the tracks and took possession of the Lake Shore engines and cabooses, and they were then drawn back to Chicago. Four men on the pursuing engine were shot, but none dangerously. A large number of strikers were arrested.

Chicago telegram: "The officials of the Lake Shore Road, being determined to resume business at their freight yards in and about Chicago, terrified the strikers by placing along the track one hundred and twenty-eight special policemen, armed with clubs, revolvers, or Winchester rifles. The crowds were driven from the crossings, the new switchmen were protected in discharging their duties, and the yards were cleared of cars soon after midday, without a shot having been fired."

The nailers' strike at Belleville, Ill., has ended, the Pittsburgh arrangement proving satisfactory to both operators and workmen.

The business failures during the week for the United States were 198 and for Canada 24, as compared with 155 the previous week. Bradstreet's Journal in its weekly summary of the financial and commercial outlook, reports as follows:

"The movement of general merchandise at nearly all prominent distributing centers continues of moderate proportions. New Orleans forms a noteworthy exception, as the manufacturing industries there are busy and the crop prospects favorable. At leading cities there is considerable confidence in the prospect for fall trade—grocery, dry goods, hardware, and dealers in other lines looking ahead to increased demands after the close of the dull season. Bonds are very strong and active. Money is plentiful, call loans averaging 2 per cent. Commercial paper dull and scarce. Exchange is strong, and gold is shipped in limited quantities. Wool is the only staple which has shown any marked advance from the extreme low level of prices generally. It is 2@3 cents higher at sealboard than on June 1. Woolen goods are stronger in consequence, and there has been a noticeable gain in the movement of dry goods generally from both jobbers and agents, in some lines of bleached and brown cottons the advance is from ½ to ¾ cent per yard. There is also some improvement in raw cotton, but on the long list of remaining staples there is no conspicuous gain. Breadstuffs continue low in price. Wheat crop prospects continue favorable; stocks are fair, and shippers are taking with moderation. Sugar continues depressed by influences which have dominated for some time, as does coffee. Tobacco is less active at the West; dark goods are firmly held, but good burleys are weak and lower. Louisville reports that Kentucky's tobacco acreage is larger than previously supposed.

The visible supply of wheat and corn is, respectively, 29,483,665 and 9,458,143 bushels, wheat having decreased since last report 1,425,436 bushels, while corn increased 69,808 bushels.

It allows a drawback or rebate of the full amount of taxes paid on tobacco of every description held by manufacturers or dealers at the time the repeal goes into effect. It also permits, from and after the passage of the act, the manufacture and sale of fruit brandies and wines free of internal revenue taxes. Under the head of silk, silk goods, and leather gloves, the bill embraces the recommendations of Assistant Secretary Fairchild in his letter of June 14, 1886, to the Chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, already published. Wools are divided into three classes, namely: Clothing, combing and carpet wools. In the first and second classes the duty is fixed at 10 cents per pound, and on the third class 4 cents per pound. CONGRESSIONAL.

The Work of the Senate and House of Representatives.

THE Fitz John Porter bill was allowed to reach a vote in the Senate on the 25th of July, although the debate only began at a late hour the previous afternoon. General Logan limited himself to a speech of two or three hours. Senator Conger restrained himself entirely. Senator Teller spoke briefly, as did Senator Blair, and Senator Plumb only talked an hour. Senator Plumb addressed himself wholly to the Democratic Senators. He charged every ex-Confederate openly with voting for the bill on previous occasions because they wanted to reward a Union General who helped them to win the second battle of Bull Run. Mr. Plumb's remarks brought Mr. Butler to his feet, and he resented in the most impassionate manner the charge that he and some of his colleagues had any friendly feeling for a General who they believed betrayed the flag he was fighting under, and he added with a little of the air of the South Carolina code, that if the Senator from Kansas had made his remarks a little more personal and in another place, he (Butler) would have resented them in a different fashion. The bill was passed—yeas 30, nays 17. In the House of Representatives Mr. Bayne, of Pennsylvania, made a bitter attack upon the President for his vetoes of pension bills, twenty of which had just been read. "He was astounded at the vetoes," says the report, "in the whole history of the Republic," he said, "they were without a parallel. Austere and rigorous Andrew Jackson, desirous of asserting his power and making individuality conspicuous, had never monopolized power as the President had done with reference to these pension bills. This man had even had the temerity to sneer at the reports of a committee of this House. He had the temerity to put the seal of his sarcasm on the reports of a committee granting a pension to the widow of some man who had been slain in the service of his country. Who had invested this man with such power that he must assert himself and say to the people of the country: 'I am larger than you all, and I know more about what should become law than the 325 members of the House of Representatives and the seventy-six members of the Senate.' It was a fault of men endowed with brief authority to arrogate knowledge that they did not possess. "He is no better than any other American citizen," said Mr. Bayne, "and he, by G—d, is not the equal of any man who perilled his life and went out to save the Union." [Applause on the Republican side.] Mr. Matson, of Indiana, defended the President, who, he declared, was fair and just and prompted by his conscience. Two men might honestly differ upon a question, and that was all there was in all this talk. All that had been said in the way of abuse of the President was uncalled for. The President was an honest man and the people of the country knew it. [Applause on the Democratic side and in the galleries.] Mr. Peters (Kan.)—We cannot honor the President for an ignorance of his prerogatives. Mr. Matson—He knows his prerogatives, and, knowing them, he has the courage to exercise them. [Applause on the Democratic side and in the galleries.] Mr. Blanchard (La.) thought that there was no need to answer the assault made upon the President. The President could stand the assault made upon him by the gentleman from Pennsylvania or any other man. The country was prepared to applaud the action of the Executive when he pointed out the mistakes which had been made by Congress.

THE sundry civil appropriation bill occupied the exclusive attention of the House, at its session on June 26. The bill was completed in committee of the whole, after which the House adjourned. The Senate was not in session.

THE river and harbor bill, with amendments, was reported to the Senate on the 28th ult. The conference report on the pension appropriation bill was presented to the Senate and agreed to. The House receded from its disagreements. The Senate, by a vote of 33 to 12, decided to insist upon its amendment to the postoffice appropriation giving a subsidy to Pacific Mail steamships. The Senate passed a bill granting a pension of $100 a month to the widow of the late Gen. Stannard of Vermont. A bill authorizing the President to appoint and retire Alfred Pleasonton as Major General was introduced in the Senate. The Senate debated the veto of the Des Moines River land bill without action. Senator Evarts (N. Y.) opposing and Senator Allison (Iowa) favoring the passage of the bill over the veto. President Cleveland sent to the Senate the name of William G. Ewing to be United States District Attorney for the Northern District of Illinois. Mr. Randall introduced his tariff bill in the House. Mr. King, of Louisiana, introduced in the House a resolution condemning the proposal of the French Government to assist the Panama Canal Company by means of a lottery loan as opposed to the Monroe doctrine, and calling on the Secretary of State for all correspondence bearing on the subject. Mr. Gallinger, of New Hampshire, introduced in the House a resolution providing for an inquiry by the Civil-service Reform Committee into the truth of newspaper reports that the Democratic Campaign Committee is soliciting contributions from Democratic Congressmen and others in the employ of the Government. While the sundry civil appropriation bill was under consideration in the House Mr. Laird (Neb.) made a severe attack upon Commissioner Sparks in his administration of the General Land Office. Mr. Cobb (Ind.) defended the Commissioner, declaring that his action was meeting with the condemnation of every land-grabber and speculator in the public lands. Mr. Payson (Ill.) said that he, as a member of the Committee on Public Lands, had advised and counseled Commissioner Sparks to issue the order of April 3, 1885, and he stood by that order to-day. It was said that Sparks was an enthusiast. He was an enthusiast; but his enthusiasm in reference to this question was in favor of the poor man who desired to receive a home from his country. Sparks' order was a notice to land-grabbers that a halt was to be called upon them, and he (Mr. Payson) regretted that owing to the pressure that had been brought by letters written by men steeped in fraud up to their eyes there had not been sufficient backbone on the part of the Secretary of the Interior to keep that order in existence.

THE Senate passed the Des Moines land bill over the President's veto, on the 29th ult., by a vote of 34 to 15. The Senate agreed to conference reports on the army appropriation bill and the bill to amend the Pacific Railroad acts. Mr. Camden (W. Va.) denied a newspaper statement that he had telegraphed from Washington that only six votes were necessary to carry the Senate for Payne, and the Standard Oil Company would pay $50,000 each for them. The Senator said that at the time named he was not in Washington, and that the story was without foundation and absurd. A resolution was adopted appointing Gen. William J. Sewell, Gen. M. T. McMahon, and Capt. John L. Mitchell as managers of the National Homes for Disabled Soldiers. The Senate took up the legislative, executive, and judicial bill, and some amendments reported by the Committee on Appropriations increasing the clerical force of the State Department gave rise to a sharp debate in which Senators Edmunds of Vermont, Ingalls, of Kansas, and Hale of Maine criticised the administration. Senator Cockrell, of Missouri, brought the discussion to a close with the remark that the administration needed no defender in the Senate. The people of the United States would live to bow their knees in everlasting thankfulness to Almighty God that Grover Cleveland had become President of the United States. He was an honest man, a brave man, a true man. He was doing all that any mortal being could do to give the people of the United States an honest, fearless, economical, and constitutional administration. This discussion having closed, the amendments on which it was based were agreed to. The House, in committee of the whole, rejected the motion of Mr. Laird (Neb.) to strike out the clause in the sundry civil bill appropriating $30,000 for protecting the public lands from fraudulent entry. The general deficiency bill was reported to the House. It appropriates $6,862,845. The House agreed to conference reports on the pension and agricultural appropriation bills.

A HATTER in New York asked Charles Matthews once for an order for the theater. He gave it to him, and the next day sent to the hatter an "order" entitling the bearer to a hat. The hatter handed over the hat to the bearer, but ever since has found it more economical to pay for his seats.

THE JOURNAL

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

A CHICAGO citizen talks of transplanting one of the big California trees to his summer residence, near that city. The one he has selected is 300 feet high and ninety-eight feet in circumference. It is estimated that the transportation will cost him $18,000. The weight of the leviathan is about 40,000 pounds.

PROBABLY the smallest newspaper published in the world is that published at Guadalajara, Mexico. It is called El Telegrama, and is a four-page weekly, five by three inches in size, and is a marvel in the way of condensation. The motto of the paper is: "Little straw and much wheat." The price is one cent a copy.

THE aged ex-Treasurer of the United States, General F. E. Spinner, now in his eighty-sixth year, is living at Pablo Beach, Fla. For the last nine months he has occupied a tent facing the ocean. When his strength permits he devotes much of his time to fishing, his favorite sport. He continues to take a lively interest in public affairs, and delights to have a political chat with those who call upon him.

THE pastor of a colored church at Fort Gaines, Ga., succeeded in having the church debt liquidated in a very novel manner. The members had bound themselves under a promise to pay it, and two Sundays ago the pastor informed them that if they did not pay it at once he would turn them out of church for lying. Last Sunday each member of the congregation brought $1.50 and the debt was paid.

DURING one of their recent raids Apache Indians murdered the wife and child of A. L. Peck, a ranchman living near Nogales, A. T. He was away at the time. When he returned the loss made him nearly crazy. He said: "I have a ranch and four or five hundred head of cattle, but I never want to see them again. The Government won't protect me, so I will protect myself. I will kill every Indian in the country." Mounting his horse, he rode off, and has disappeared.

MRS. SCHLUCHTNER, of New York City, has brought suit against her husband, to whom she has been married thirty years, to compel him to allow her money to live on decently. She shows that he is worth perhaps $50,000, and that during the past three years he has bought her but three dresses. This she maintains, with some show of reason, is not quite enough. It is lucky for Mr. Schluchtner that ladies do not sit on the case, for were that the rule he could safely count on a sentence to the penitentiary, with some show of being hanged.

THERE is a touch of the romantic, reaching close to the heroic, in Geronimo's speech to Mrs. George Shippard, a captive. This lady was the wife of one of the victims of an Apache raid, but had been the wife of a former companion of the chief in his younger days. When Geronimo learned who she was, he is reported to have said: "If I had known the man belonged to you I would not have killed him. You can go, but I will continue to kill whites until my wife and child are returned from the far-off country to which whites sent them." Mrs. Shippard has since died from the effects of her captivity.

THE velocity of light is so tremendous that, as the Buffalo Commercial-Advertiser figures it out, "it moves round the earth's surface, a distance of nearly twenty-five thousand miles, in one-eighth part of a second." We reproduce these figures, says the New York Tribune, for the benefit of the messenger-boy of the period. He would do well to cut them out and paste them in his hat. Not that he can ever hope to cope with light in rapidity of movement, but the contemplation of the feat of traveling 25,000 miles in an eighth of a second may stimulate him to break his own record for speed.

A STUDENT at Bowdoin College appears to have been admitted to one of the classes solely on his qualifications as a base-ball player. The college clubs have a rule that the members shall be bona fide students, and the case of the above-mentioned student was investigated. It appears that he was admitted without examination, took history and physiology as his special studies, but seldom appeared in the class-room. Soule (for that is the student's name) testified that he had not been at school for four years before entering Bowdoin, but could not remember the name of his last teacher. President Hyde declared that he could properly be regarded as a college man, and the investigating clubs were forced to accept him as a ball-player.

SPEAKING of Judge Coke of Texas to a Congressman from his State a Washington reporter drew out the following: The Senator lives down on Sixth street, in strict retirement. Nobody is allowed to visit him without first sending up his card. When the recent spell of warm weather was at its height the front door was left open one evening. It happened that two of his political friends from Galveston were in the city and seeking his residence. Seeing Judge Coke through the lighted window they ascended and knocked at his room door. Being asked to enter, the visitors stepped into the room and were about to greet the Senator joyfully, when he said: "Gentlemen, I regret to say that it is a rule of this house that the cards of visitors must always be sent up to me. I have to request that you will observe the custom." "Certainly we will," was the abashed reply, as the visitors backed out of the apartment. They rang the bell, gave the servant girl their cards and waited patiently for her return. They were anxious to humor an old man's eccentricities. The girl reappeared, and the visitors almost fainted when she said: "Senator Coke is not in."

HENRY W. FISCHER, late editor of Anarchist Spies' paper, the Chicago Arbeiter Zeitung, is now an editor of the Sontags Journal of New York. He says that when he was with Spies they kept dynamite in the office. This continued three or four years. Fischer in conversation with a New York reporter said: "Spies, Neebe, Parsons, Rau and Hirschberger, with occasionally some other anarchist, were always experimenting with it. One day all the windows in the back office were blown out by one of the explosions. Neebe lost a thumb by another explosion when he was making an experiment. Spies told me of this when he was in New York last February. Rau and Hirschberger were the men who purchased the arms and ammunition the anarchists were to use when the time came. These arms were sold to the members of the order on easy terms. We had a whole arsenal in the office at one time, but would gradually dispose of the weapons. When I was there nothing definite had been determined upon by the anarchists. I was present at a number of conversations when they would talk of blowing up the Board of Trade and other public buildings and slaughtering the rich men. One day a wild-looking anarchist came in and said to Spies that Phil Armour, the great meat packer, ought to be killed. He insisted that Armour and two or three others should be killed right away, and, after it was done, Potter Palmer, N. K. Fairbank, Long John Wentworth, and the other millionaires would get scared and times would be better. 'If you want to kill anybody for the sake of the cause here's a pistol,' said Spies. The anarchist looked at the weapon, but did not take it. He was one of the howling kind who want anarchy but wanted some one else to bring it about."

A Marriage Mart in Roumania.

A remarkable custom exists among the Roumanians living in the westerly Carpathians. Every year, at the feast of the Apostles Peter and Paul, a market is held on the crest of the Gaina, from 5,000 to 6,000 feet above the level of the sea, and here all the marriageable girls of the entire district assemble with their parents in order to be viewed and claimed. Mothers, aunts, grandmothers, and various other female friends contribute to the dowry, and this completed, it is carried to the market on the Gaina in neatly made trunks, decorated with flowers, and carried by the family's best horses. Cattle, bees, and other household requisites are also added to the dowry. On the Gaina every family that has a marriageable daughter occupies a distinct tent in which the bride-wewers are expected. The bachelors, too, are accompanied by parents or relatives, in whose company they inspect the girls who are eligible. The young men bring the best they possess, and each must particularly come with a girdle of gold or silver. After the brides are chosen the public betrothal takes place, being conducted by a hermit who lives in this lonely spot. The mark of betrothal is not a ring, but a beautifully embroidered handkerchief. The betrothal is in many cases prearranged; but the ceremony must be gone through with all the same. If a girl goes to the market, knowing beforehand that an admirer will be there to claim her, so much the better for her. Still she must take her dowry and occupy her tent and place herself in view like the rest.

CUSTER'S LAST FIGHT.

Chief Gall, Who Commanded the Hostiles, Describes the Terrific Slaughter.

The tenth anniversary of Custer's last fight, which will be a gloomy page in American history, was appropriately celebrated by a few of the survivors of that dreadful June day. A special correspondent telegraphs as follows from the scene of that dark and dreadful tragedy:

Early in the day the great Sioux Chief Gall went over the entire field and described in an intelligent and straightforward manner the exact place in which Custer's command was destroyed. Curley, the Crow scout, who was in reality the only survivor of all who marched into the valley of the Little Big Horn with Custer, was also present, but Gall turned his back on Curley, and said: "He ran away too soon in the fight." Gall is a powerfull, fine-looking specimen of the red race, 46 years old, and weighs over two hundred pounds. He first appeared reticent, and was inclined to act sullen, but when he stood on the spot which formed the last sight of Custer on earth his dark eyes lightened with fire, he became earnestly communicative, and he told all he knew without restraint. His dignified countenance spoke truthfulness, and there is little doubt that the true history of that dreadful day is at last made known. Gall's narrative was as follows:

"We saw the soldiers early in the morning crossing the divide. When Reno and Custer separated we watched them until they came down into the valley. A cry was raised that the white men soldiers were coming, and orders were given for the village to move immediately. Reno swept down so rapidly on the upper end that the Indians were forced to fight. Sitting Bull and I were at the point where Reno attacked. Sitting Bull was big medicine. The women and children were hastily moved down stream where the Cheyennes were camped. The Sioux attacked Reno, and the Cheyennes Custer, and then all became mixed up. The women and children caught the horses for the bucks to mount them; the bucks mounted and charged back Reno, and checked him, and drove him into the timber. The soldiers tied their horses to trees, and came out and fought on foot. As soon as Reno was beaten and driven back across the river, the whole force turned upon Custer and fought him until they destroyed him. Custer did not reach the river, but was met about half a mile up a ravine, now called Reno Creek. They fought the soldiers and beat them back step by step until all were killed." [One of Reno's officers confirms this by saying: "After we were driven back to the hill where the stand was made, there was an interval of over an hour that we had no fighting. This gave us an opportunity to shelter our horses in a ravine and partially intrench ourselves." It was probably during this interval of quiet on Reno's part that the Indians massed on Custer and annihilated him.] "The Indians ran out of ammunition and their arrows they fired from behind their horses. The soldiers got shells stuck in their guns and had to throw them away. They then fought with little guns—[pistols]. The Indians were in couples behind and in front of Custer as he moved up the ridge to take position, and were just as many as the grass. The first two companies, Keogh and Calhoun, dismounted, and fought on foot. They never broke, but retired step by step until forced back to the ridge upon which all finally perished. They were shot down in line where they stood. Keogh's company rallied by company and were all killed in a bunch." [This statement seems borne out by the facts, as thirty-eight bodies of Keogh's troopers were found piled in a heap.] "The warriors directed a special fire against the trooper who held the horses, while the others fought. As soon as a holder was killed, by moving blankets and great shouting the horses were stampeded, which made it impossible for the soldiers to escape. Afterward the soldiers fought desperately and hard, and never surrendered. They fought strong—they fought in line along the ridge. As fast as the men fell the horses were herded and driven toward the squaws and old men, who gathered them up. When Reno attempted to find Custer by throwing out a skirmish line, Custer and all with him were dead. When the skirmishers reached a high point overlooking Custer's field, the Indians were galloping around and over the wounded, dying, and dead, popping bullets and arrows into them. When Reno made his attack at the upper end he killed my two squaws and three children, which made my heart bad. I then fought with the hatchet"—which means, of course, mutilating. "The soldiers ran out of ammunition early in the day. Their supply of cartridges was in the saddle-pockets of their stampeded horses. The Indians then ran up to the soldiers and butchered them with hatchets. A lot of horses ran away and jumped into the river, but were caught by the squaws. Eleven Indians were killed in Reno Creek, and several Indians fell over and died. Only forty-three Indians were killed altogether, but a great many wounded ones came across the river and died in the rushes. Some soldiers got away and ran down a ravine, crossed the river, came back again, and were killed. We had Ogallalas, Minneconjous, Brules, Tetons, Uncpapas, Sioux, Cheyennes, Arapahoes, and Gros Ventres. When the big dust came in the air down the river [meaning Terry and Gibbon], we struck our lodges and went up a creek toward the White Rain Mountains. Big Horn ranges covered with snow. We waited there four days and then went over to Woj Mountains."

This ended Gall's narrative. It brings out many new facts and corrects some others. It has been popularly supposed that Custer entered the river, but such was not the case, as the bodies found on the Little Horn were those of a few stampeded soldiers. There were no ceremonies or exercises gone through with, simply an attempt, which was successful, to correct history.

DEATH OF JUDGE DAVIS.

He Passes Away Peacefully, Surrounded by His Relatives and Friends.

Sketch of His Career as a Jurist, a Statesman, and a Citizen.

Judge David Davis passed peacefully away at his home in Bloomington, Ill., on the morning of Saturday, June 26. An hour or so before his death he talked incoherently for some time. His family and friends in the house were around his bedside and he passed into death as if going to sleep. Judge Davis' physician says the immediate cause of his death was erysipelas, the outcome of a malignant carbuncle, which first appeared April 30, but that diabetes, which must have been insidiously working for two years, was the primary cause, and to it is attributed his rapid decline in flesh a week before the end came. He had been unconscious most of the time. His wife; his only son, George P. Davis, and wife; his only daughter, Mrs. Sarah D. Swayne, and husband; his granddaughter, Alice S. Davis; his niece, Mrs. Fannie Pierpont; his cousin, John M. Walker; and his old friend, Frank D. Orme, of Washington, were present at his death.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

A Short Sketch of Judge Davis' Busy Life.

Judge David Davis was born in Cecil County, Maryland, March 9, 1815. He received a careful education in the best American schools of the early part of the century. He studied law with Judge Bishop in Lennox, Mass., and afterward in the law school at New Haven, Conn., graduating as the first of his class. Judge Davis removed to Bloomington, Ill., in 1836, being then 21 years of age. His home was in that city from that date until his death. He soon gained prominence as a lawyer and local politician. In 1815 he was chosen a member of the lower house of the Illinois Legislature. He was a member of no party, and he soon attracted attention by his conscientious work and his freedom of action on all questions. He was chosen to the Constitutional Convention of 1847, and the next year elected Judge of the Eighth Judicial Circuit of Illinois. He was re-elected to this office in 1853, and again in 1861. His capacity for work and his clearcut decisions soon became proverbial all over the State and beyond its borders. He and Abraham Lincoln became warm friends long before the latter rose to more than local prominence. He became one of Lincoln's most ardent supporters for the Presidency and took an important place in national affairs as adviser of Lincoln after Lincoln's election to that high office. President Lincoln appointed Judge Davis Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States Dec. 8, 1862. After Lincoln's death Judge Davis became administrator of his estate. At the National Convention of the labor reform party held in Columbus, Ohio, Feb. 21, 1872, Judge Davis was nominated for President of the United States, the candidate for Vice President on the same ticket being Joel Parker, of New Jersey. When the Liberal Republicans nominated Horace Greeley for President at the Cincinnati Convention of the same year, Judge Davis, who had been a candidate before the same convention, receiving 92½ votes on the first ballot, withdrew from the field. Judge Davis remained on the Supreme Court bench until 1877, when he resigned to take his seat in the United States Senate, he having been elected to that body by the Independents and Democrats of the Thirtieth General Assembly of Illinois. After the death of President Garfield Judge Davis was chosen President of the Senate, in which position he was virtually Vice President of the United States. Soon after retiring from the Senate in 1883, he was married to a niece of Judge Green, member of Congress from North Carolina. From that time to his demise he resided quietly at his home in Bloomington.

REMINISCENT.

Judge Davis' Early Career—Characteristics of the Citizen and the Judge.

"I have known David Davis since 1848," remarked Hon. Leonard Swett, of Chicago, "at which time he came into public prominence. His first appearance was as a member of the constitutional convention. In the same year he was chosen Circuit Judge of the Eighth Illinois District.

"Judge Davis, Abraham Lincoln, John T. Stewart, John J. Hardin, Stephen T. Logan, Edward D. Baker, Edward Hannigan, Daniel W. Voorhees, Kirby Benedict, Edward Jones, David B. Campbell and myself were the company that administered law in that district. Most of the attorneys would only go through a county or two and then drop out. Lincoln and I accompanied Judge Davis throughout the entire circuit. We would travel on horseback, generally, and would invariably put up at one hostelry.

"Continually thrown in intimate companionship with Lincoln and Davis, I came to know both well. They were antipodal natures, but the closest of friends. Davis was of the most positive, decisive character, taking his positions firmly, and holding to them tenaciously and doggedly. Lincoln was suave and more yielding. Both were princes of geniality and capital story-tellers. Each had a fund of stories that seemed inexhaustible, and never lacked appositeness, nor lost anything of excellence in the telling. In this intimacy, formed in the Eighth Circuit, may be found the foundation of both Lincoln's and Davis' after greatness."

"The strong points in Davis' character, as exhibited in his whole career, public and private, were many. He had the keenest foresight. Away back in 1840 he saw this State as we now see it. To-day he is a very rich man, worth probably $8,000,000. I don't know; no one does. He never made a dollar in trade; never made a trade in which he was not worsted. He did not know how to make a bargain, and seldom if ever tried. He knew good land when he saw it. He made all his money entering land. His present magnificent farm of 1,000 acres in McLean County cost him about $3 an acre.

"I remember once of a case that illustrates him very well. Jesse W. Fell, of Bloomington, was a merchant on the down-grade. Mr. Davis received a note from some Eastern party against Fell, which he was instructed to collect. Fell and Davis were friends. On investigation, Davis found there were no resources, save an eighty-acre piece of ground near Chicago. Fell offered to give up the land for the note. Without a moment's hesitation Davis accepted. When the Eastern party came out he was incensed at losing the note for a worthless piece of swamp. Davis agreed to take the land himself and pay the amount of the note in money. This offer was accepted. That eighty acre tract lies between the city and the stock-yards, and is of incalculable value.

"Davis excelled as a Judge. It was his natural sphere. He was more like John Marshall than any man the country has produced. Of Marshall it is related that he would listen attentively to an argument, catch at once the point, and say: 'That's it. That's the law exactly. Now look up an authority or two.' It was just so with Davis. He took the law as a greyhound takes the scent. He never relied on his knowledge of authorities, and never allowed his legal lore to smother his common-sense perception of equity and justice."

MICHIGAN AFFAIRS.

—Over 150 houses are in course of erection at Owosso.

—Bronson's apple crop promises to be above the average.

—A new jail, costing $5,000, is to be built shortly at Lake City.

—Nashville is troubled with thieves who steal flowers from the graves in the cemetery. They should be taught a lesson if caught.

—A wind and rain storm in Lenawee County leveled buildings and fences, and ruined orchards and crops. Several persons are reported injured.

—The other day a grave at Blissfield, supposed to contain the body of an aged lady buried six years ago, was opened and found to be empty. The authorities hope to ferret out the perpetrators of the robbery.

—It is supposed that Miss Frances Whipple, a well-known milliner of Adrian, who recently disappeared, is the woman who jumped into the whirlpool at Niagara Falls last week, and whose body has hitherto been unidentified.

—A well-known clergyman of this city, a few days since, made a close inspection of the electric light works, and was much interested over the minutiæ of the institution. An hour later he discovered that his watch—a valuable one—had been hopelessly magnetized. The article is worth something for old gold, but it might as well be sold as far as its ever marking the hours again is concerned.—Jackson Patriot.

—A Chicago visitor is struck with "the singular beauty and charms" of Detroit's electric light, says the Free Press. He thinks the city "is justly entitled to stand front and foremost in making herself the most poetry-inspiring city in America" because she spends $110,000 a year "for the sole purpose of surrounding a naturally beautiful city with a halo of soft and mellow light."

—The Trustees of Ann Arbor University have decided to call to their chair of physics Professor H. S. Carhart, of the Northwestern University, at Evanston, Ill. Professor Carhart has held the chair of physics at Evanston for many years, and is Secretary of the faculty. He is, perhaps, the most popular professor there, and his electrical experiments have given him a wide reputation. In Germany he has recently received high honors, and last year was placed at the head of the physical section of the American Association for the Advancement of Science. As the meeting of the association was held at Ann Arbor he seems to have built some fences there, much to the chagrin of many eminent competitors for the place. No one at Evanston dreamed of his departure. Nothing was said about it in the recent meeting of the Board of Trustees of the Northwestern, which authorized him to visit other American colleges to ascertain the latest advances in physical apparatus and make recommendations for extensive purchases.

—General Shakespeare has finished and forwarded to A. D. Worthington, of Hartford, Conn., the history of the old Second Michigan Infantry's battle flag, which he was requested to write for Mrs. Mary A. Livermore's forthcoming book on her experiences during the rebellion. The Second really had two battle flags, being more fortunate than most regiments which participated in the late unpleasantness. The first flag was presented by the ladies of Niles, and was carried until after the battle of Fredericksburg, when, being too tattered for further use, it was sent back to Niles, and afterward forwarded to Lansing, where it is now kept in the Capitol. The second flag was furnished by the Government, and was carried from the battle of Fredericksburg until the close of the war, and is now in the possession of General William Humphrey, of Adrian. General Shakespeare, in his spirited history of those two historic banners, says that this second flag was so cut up with bullets and fragments of bursting shells that there is not enough of it left to inscribe on it the names of the battles in which the regiment participated.—Kalamazoo Telegraph.

The moral effect of those principles of justice and equality thus acknowledged and adopted, coupled with the peaceful years which followed the revolution developed a vigorous physical life, that prepared the nation for her great emergency. They had unconsciously grown a loyalty to country that made possible the grand achievements of our days of blood, they had engrafted into the hearts of our people such a reverence for American citizenship, that all classes were inspired with a firm determination to maintain the integrity of the union of the states, even at the cost of all her material wealth, and the sacrifice of her best blood. They had so woven into the web of our national life a devotion to free institutions, as developed in our brave-hearted wives and mothers the power to freely give their first and best for her protection. And thus to the moral convictions of the fathers, to the patriotism which came from a recognition of the inalienable rights of all men, are chiefly due our free homes, and through their heroism and that of their descendants we have come to possess our land of promise. Strong in valiant hearts, powerful in unlimited resources, unequaled in the advantages offered for mental growth and in the educational training of our people; unsurpassed in broad, progressive statesmanship, and unrivaled in point of moral attitude.

Glancing forward to an unknown future, we have need to remember that the stability and perpetuity of free institutions, rests upon other conditions than such as grow out of material progress. That great possessions and large armies are but instruments, the value of which depends upon their intelligent use.

We have need to keep in mind those great principles of righteousness which form the basis of our government and constitute our security, cherishing with ever increasing care those educational interests which produce in the nation as in the man the power to wisely direct and control material forces, and make them subserve the highest needs of humanity. Maintaining with ever increasing firmness those barriers which oppose the on-rush of evil, and slay the growth of immorality in the world.

We have need to keep abreast of advancing civilization, and in the realm of moral progress to keep ourselves as a nation in accord with the wisest and highest thought of the age, sending our salutation of equal rights and impartial justice to all men everywhere.

We have need to stand in the forefront of every moral reform, ready at all times to become the champion of the downtrodden and the guardians of the oppressed, and prompted by sympathetic hearts reaching out a hand to relieve wherever tyranny dispoils, to uplift wherever despotism degrades, and to grasp in the name of a common brotherhood the outstretched hand of the weak, the helpless and the suffering, realizing the grand ideal which was the inspiration of the fathers, realizing results which shall be compensation for all their heroic sacrifices.

We have need to put ourselves into the current which lead toward a higher life in governmental affairs, giving heed to the lessons of past ages, and seeking such a development of the moral in the individual as that national permanency shall be secured and the great work of reformation shall sweep on toward a more perfect consummation, a more perfect freedom from the withering, blighting curse of sin, upward toward the excellence of Him whose purity is his everlasting crown.

At the close of the oration the Boys' cornet band and the glee club favored the audience with some appropriate music, and the benediction was pronounced.

At one o'clock there was a brief display of the fire engine with our old small hose attached by a "reducer," the new hose not having arrived.

The games which followed during the afternoon created considerable interest, and were witnessed by all who could get near enough to see.

At foot-ball, Montie Lewis and Harrison Bedford chose sides, Montie winning every game.

John Shrier and David Piper were captains in the tug of war and Shrier won.

The firefly shot on Round lake in the evening was a happy substitute for fire works. A large number of boats were provided with lanterns, and in a series of evolutions across and around the lake, presented a most beautiful sight, closing by dividing into two parties in parallel lines and bombarding each other with Roman candles.

Altogether the day was a gratifying success, for which the managers can give themselves abundant credit.

Honest Pension Bills or None.

The change in the rule of the house of representatives proposed by Mr. Morrison on Tuesday was not only proper in itself but in the interest of honest pension legislation. It simply required that if pensions are to be voted they shall be paid, and that the bill granting them shall make provision for raising the revenue necessary to meet the expenditure involved. What could be more reasonable? If the advocates of pension legislation sincerely wish to benefit the soldiers they ought to welcome a rule that would make such legislation effective. "Why vote pensions," they might well ask "unless we authorize the raising of the money required to pay them?"

Mr. Reed declared that if there was anything in the logic presented in favor of the change it was equally applicable to all other subjects of appropriation. So it would be if the fixed charges and ordinary expenses of government were not practically a known sum always taken into consideration in levying the taxes. Any proposition to put our army on a war footing, to suddenly enlarge the navy, or to otherwise authorize an extraordinary expenditure exceeding the ordinary revenues of the government would be accompanied by a proposition to borrow money or to increase taxation. The pending pension legislation proposes an extraordinary increase in expenditure, and it ought to be accompanied by a provision for raising the necessary revenue. Mr. Reed's declaration that the consideration of the question of pensions ought to be separate from all others is nonsense. It cannot be separated from the consideration of how the money with which they are to be paid can be raised.

Not only was Mr. Morrison's amendment right in itself, but it accomplished a most salutary end in exposing the insincerity and demagogy of the republican attitude toward pension legislation. In order to cultivate the soldier vote they are now ready to support extravagant pension laws such as they never thought of passing when they had control of all departments of the government. They know that the democrats must either defeat these schemes or else abandon all hope of reducing the present exorbitant taxes. If they are voted down in congress or vetoed by the president, then the republicans will raise an outcry about democratic hostility to the soldiers. If the majority in the house allowed the bills to pass, and the president signed them, an enormous deficit would thus be created, and the republicans would ring the changes on democratic incompetency and extravagance.

Mr. Morrison avoided this dilemma, and the republicans were furious. They tried in vain to lay his motion on the table, and then filibustered to prevent its adoption. So desperate is their opposition that they yesterday put a stop to all legislation rather than permit the consideration of the rule. They see in it an effective obstacle to the continuance of their double dealing with the soldiers. After the new rule is once adopted, they can vote for no pensions without taking the responsibility of raising the money wherewith they are to be paid. The question will no longer be an abstract one concerning the propriety of pensions, but the practical one, "Are the people willing to submit to a definite increase in taxation to pay such pensions as are proposed?" Mr. Reed sees this, and in an unguarded moment he declared that the object of the amendment is "to saddle on pension bills legislation which would result in the defeat of the bills themselves." What is this but a confession that the republicans who are so eager for pension legislation, rather than assume the responsibility of raising by taxation the requisite money, will vote against their own bills!

Use of the Table-napkin.

The law governing the use of the napkin is thus set forth in Household Words:

The law of the napkin is but vaguely understood. One of our esteemed metropolitan contemporaries informs an eager inquirer that it is bad form to fold the napkin after dinner; that the proper thing is to throw it with negligent disregard on the table beside the plate, as to fold it would be a reflection on the host and imply a familiarity that would not befit an invited guest. But the thoughtful reader will agree with us that this studied disorder is likely to be a good deal more trying to a fastidious hostess than an unstudied replacing of the napkin in good order beside the visitor's plate. The proper thing is to fold the fabric with unostentatious care and lay it on the left side of the plate, far from the liquids, liqueures and coffee, and thus testify to the hostess that her care in preparing the table has been appreciated.

The Origin of Salt.

How did the salt originally get there? After all, when we say that it was produced, as rock-salt, by evaporation of the water in inland seas, we leave unanswered the main problem. How did the brine in solution get into the sea at all in the first place? Well, one might almost as well ask, How did anything come to be upon the earth at any time in any way? How did the sea itself get there? How did this planet swim into existence at all? There was a sapient inquirer, recently deceased, who had a short way out of this difficulty. He held that the sea was only salt because of all the salt rivers that run into it. Considering that the salt rivers are themselves salted by passing through salt regions, or being fed by saline springs, all of which derive their saltness from deposits laid down long ago by evaporation from earlier seas or lake basins, this explanation savors somewhat of circularity. It amounts in effect to saying that the sea is salt because of the large amount of saline matter which it holds in solution. Cheese is also a caseous preparation of milk; the duties of an arch-deacon are to perform archidiaconal functions; and opium puts one to sleep because it possesses a soporific virtue.

Apart from such purely verbal explanations of the saltness of the sea, however, one can only give some such account of the way it came to be "the briny" as the following:

This world was once a haze of fluid light, as the poets and the men of science agree in informing us. As soon as it began to cool down a little, the heavier materials naturally sank toward the center, while the lighter, now represented by the ocean and the atmosphere, floated in a gaseous condition on the outside. But the great envelope of vapor thus produced did not consist merely of the constituents of air and water; many other gases and vapors mingle with them, as they still do to a far less extent in our existing atmosphere. By-and-by, as the cooling and condensing process continued, the water settled down from the condition of steam into one of a liquid at a dull red heat. As it condensed, it carried down with it a great many other substances, held in solution, whose component elements had previously existed in the primitive gaseous atmosphere. Thus the early ocean which covered the whole earth was in all probability not only very salt, but also quite thick with other mineral matters close up to the point of saturation. It was full of lime, and raw flint, and sulphates, and many other miscellaneous bodies. Moreover, it was not only just as salt as at the present day, but even a great deal saltier. For from that time to this evaporation has constantly been going on in certain shallow isolated areas, laying down great beds of gypsum and then of salt, which still remain in the solid condition, while the water has, of course, been correspondingly purified. Cornhill Magazine.

Grafted Varieties of Fruit-Trees.

This opportunity to grow different kinds of fruit on one tree imparts a new and delightful interest to the orchard. The proprietor can always be on the lookout for something new and fine, and the few moments required in grafting or budding make it his. The operation is so simple and easy that he can learn to perform it himself, and there are always plenty of adepts in the rural vicinage to give him his initial lesson. While he will keep the standard kinds for his main supply, he can gratify his taste and eye with some pretty innovations. I know of an apple-tree which bears over a hundred varieties. A branch, for instance, is producing Yellow Bellflowers. At a certain point in its growth where it has the diameter of a man's thumb it may be grafted with the Red Baldwin. When the scion has grown for two or three years its leading shoots can be grafted with the Roxbury Russet, and eventually the terminal bough of this growth with the Early Harvest. Thus may be presented the interesting spectacle of one limb of a tree yielding four very distinct kinds of apples. E. P. Roe, in Harper's Magazine for March.

A Toilet Secret.

Every one knows that the dress which Miss Anderson wears as Galatea was designed by Alma-Tadema, but only recently has the world learned the secret of the toilet which makes it so statuesque. The dress is made of soft crepe, cut something like a large bolster case. It is thoroughly soaked in water, then run through a clothes-wringer, and not disturbed until quite dry. When shaken out it of course appears in long creases, when put on, a girdle is tied about the waist, and the dress is pulled through to the proper length and allowed to fall in its own clinging folds.

To the ladies of Charlevoix and vicinity: I would hereby announce that having opened Dressmaking Parlors on Mason street, third door west of State, I am now fully prepared to do work in all the latest approved styles, from the genuine tailor system of actual measurment, the only perfect system ever invented. All ladies desirous of testing the same and wishing neat and perfect work will please call at their earliest convenience. MRS. P. A. EARL.

The mail which is now carried on the Friant is an experiment by the contractor. It is very much more expensive than the stage route which supplies two intermediate offices, but if the resorters and citizens are sufficiently well pleased with the arangement to help bear the extra expense; it will probably be continued during the season.

Trial of the Fire Engine.

The hose did not arrive in time to give the new fire engine a full test on the Fourth, but did arrive on Tuesday of this week. A test of its capacity was commenced yesterday morning, and continued until noon to-day.

The engine was placed on the dock near Upright & Emrey's warehouse, and when all arrangements were complete the match was applied. In seven minutes the engine was started; in eight minutes there was water through 200 feet of hose. After ten minutes water was thrown about 200 feet from the nozzle. A trial was also made at 500 feet, but we did not get the measurements. One length of hose gave out, showing signs of bursting in several places, and was taken out. At 950 feet from the engine, water was thrown about 150 feet from the nozzle, on the south terrace, near L. E. Allen's residence, the engine yet being on Upright & Emrey's dock, lifting water three feet.

Afterwards a trial was made with two streams, through 200 feet of hose each. At this trial the old hand engine was put alongside for comparison, and a careful observer could see but little difference in the size and force of the streams.

In the trial for height, water was raised about 20 feet above McCabe's flag pole,—an estimated height of about 90 feet.

After dinner, the engine was placed on the south approach to the bridge, and failed to raise water 16 feet. Then it was placed on the Riffenburg Milling Co.'s dock, 5½ feet above the water, and an effort made to throw to the top of the roof, 53 feet from the ground, but with 80 pounds of steam it could not be done. The fires were then put out, and the machine taken back to the engine house.

New packing was put in in several places, and another trial given this morning from the mill company's dock. With 50 pounds of steam water was thrown well on to the roof of the mill, and the roof of the Fountain City House was thoroughly wet.

Then a trial was made at the bridge. With 90 pounds steam pressure, and 120 water pressure, one stream was forced over E. M. Clark's house, through 750 feet of hose.

The ability of the machine to hold steam being questioned, it was kept on the bridge over an hour, and a uniform pressure of 80 to 90 pounds was maintained.

With the trial last night nearly every citizen was dissatisfied. It did not come up to the requirements, but no fault can be found with the work this morning.

Although the hose did not actually burst, numerous blisters could be found, through which fine streams of water escaped.

At time of going to press the council has not accepted it.

A Warning.

Pain is given for the wise purpose of informing us of the presence of danger and disease. Any little excitement of an unusual nature disturbs the balance of the system, the nervous energies are exhausted, and headache and a hundred other disturbances are the result. Many of the miseries of man and womanhood might be cured and prevented were their approach heeded and resisted, having their origin in derangements of the liver and blood, dyspepsia, jaundice, indigestion, costiveness, and other unwholesome conditions. Evils of a diseased nature find a certain cure by the use of Golden Seal Bitters. In this medicine, nature aided by art, has produced a rare combination of medicinal properties, wisely adapted to the cure of diseases common to man-kind. The vitalizing principals embodied in Golden Seal Bitters will assuredly cure the broken down dyspeptics. Sold by Perry Weed and Dr. G. W. Crouter.

Broken Down Invalids.

Old days! sad days! how happy they,
When youth and hope were mine!
When flowers swung bright on every bush,
And fruit on every vine!
When all the meadow-land was fair,
The mountain-tops were gold,
And every bud, with rare delight,
Would rose of hope unfold!

Old dreams! old dreams! how fair you wove
Her colors rich and rare,
Brighter than all the autumn hues
That deck the morning air!
Their magic power I cherish yet,
The tale I love to tell,
Although life's sad reality
I know full well—full well!

Old faces, too, how bright they shine
Thro' memory's mellow haze;
And lovingly look down on me
Thro' long-departed days!
A father's smile, a mother's tear,
A sister's gentle look;
Ah, me! how many a leaf I've turned
In sorrow's open book!

Sweet words of love, they sound again!
An echo from the past!
They cannot die upon the ear—
They will forever last!
The days may wane, and dreams may die,
Those faces still will be
The happy stars that shine on me
From out eternity!

THE COURIER'S RIDE.

BY DANIEL KNIGHT.

It was the night before the battle of Shiloh, and we lay a few miles below Pittsburg Landing. Buell's forces had been gathering, preparatory to joining General Grant, to aid in the battle of Shiloh, then daily expected. In the following details I shall only narrate the part which I acted personally, leaving the army and its movements to the historian.

It was the evening before the battle that a General, unknown to me, belonging to Buell's army, hailed me and asked to what cavalry I belonged, my name, Captain's name, and company, all of which I answered, he noting my answers. He then asked if I would be willing to go with an officer of his staff upon a night ride to Pittsburg Landing.

He said: "I am General Nelson, and prefer a volunteer courier if I can get one, as they are always better men for the work."

I replied that I was willing to undertake the duty when properly detailed and instructed. My answer seemed to please him.

He answered: "As soon as possible go to your quarters, feed your horse, yourself, and the sooner you are ready the better."

This seemed like a strange speech, coming from a stranger whom I had never seen before, but, once having seen, not liable to forget.

He was a large, fleshy, sharp-spoken man, and his words carried authority with them. It was now getting on toward night, and I soon after left the line and went to camp. I had fed my horse, and was making my coffee, when an orderly came and directed me to report at the Captain's tent. Going to headquarters to report, I met General Nelson coming out. I saluted him. He returned the salute, and said:

"Be off as soon as possible, corporal. I left your instructions with your Captain. We were intending to send Lieutenant Milman with you, but he is on the sick list, and perhaps it is just as well. Be careful, but get there as soon as your horse can get you there. There will in all probability be fighting when you get there. But it must not stop you. Go directly to General Grant and deliver your message to him and only to him. If there are any rebel cavalry on this side of the river to intercept you, you must conceal your papers, or destroy them if in danger of being taken. If you destroy the papers and yet succeed in getting through, and the fight is in progress, as I am almost certain it will be before you can possibly get there, say to General Grant that General Nelson's division will be in line with him before the sun goes down."

He then mounted and rode away. I entered the Captain's tent. He and Major Brackett were seated at a small writing table, examining a small military map.

The Captain said: "Dan, you have got yourself into business. General Nelson has just left an order to detail you to go to the Landing with papers for General Grant. It is a dangerous service. You are to take a road some four or five miles south, as there are many sentinels on this, and it would consume too much time to stop and explain who you are to each; hence, it is deemed advisable to take the other road, by which you run the risk of meeting guards of the wrong color. Basil Duke is on this side of the river somewhere. In the event—well, there is no use of giving you directions. Do your best, as we trust you will. You are to start on a very important as well as dangerous mission, and are expected to deliver these papers to General Grant by noon to-morrow. Get there by your own devices. A darky will guide you to the south road, and Sergeant Whitehall and the picket guard will see you safe on your race."

I took the papers, thanked the Captain for the compliment, and as soon as possible was in the saddle.

I found the guard waiting, and a little before 9 p. m. we started out of camp. On arriving at the road the sergeant wanted me to take the negro, but I declined, preferring to chance it alone, and bidding them a cheerful good-by, cantered away.

It was very lonely for the first hour, but gradually the desire to succeed began to take its place, and I felt that I was getting on famously when I discovered to my right a fire. It seemed not to be upon the road, but it was too dark to determine. I pressed forward, watching the fire, and soon saw men about it. That settled the question, and I knew they were a rebel picket. How was I to get by them was the question—a very important question just then. There were too many of them for me to dash by them. My horse wanted to whinny. I had to slap him several times to keep him quiet.

For five or six minutes I sat there watching that camp, when I heard a horse approaching from the same road I had come. I pulled off the road to let it pass, thinking it a Johnny; but when they got opposite me they stopped—two negroes, one on foot, one on horseback—and I heard the following dialogue:

"Now, den, Steve, w'at's ur goin' ter do? Dem's de Secesh, an' ef we lets dem catch us we's no better as dead niggers."

"Well, but we isn't gwine to let dem catch us, sonny; of course, dey would shoot us too quick. But see here, boy; you 'member dat path wat runs down to Missa Jenkins'. Wal, da to——"

"What dat, boy——"

My horse was uneasy; he snuffled, and the remark of the negro in regard to the path was so satisfactory that I rode up to them, cautioning them to keep quiet. I told them that I did not want to interfere with their plans, but that I did want to get around the fire without being seen, and that if they knew of any way, I should be glad to have them show me it.

The old negro, the first speaker, asked, "Is you a Linkum sojer?"

I said I was.

He seemed greatly pleased at this; said the rebels at the fire were "Ole Duke's city sojers;" that he and his son were trying to get to our army at Pittsburg Landing, and that if the rebels caught them they would shoot them without asking a question. And, as I afterward learned, he was right in so saying, as they showed no mercy to negroes trying to reach our lines. He said his boy knew of a path through the woods—a cow-path, starting some distance back, and he thought they could get me through all right.

I assented to following their lead. We turned back, going slow that the boy might find the path, which he soon did—the worst one I ever saw, and I had been all through the Rockies, finding naught to compare with that cow-path in Western Tennessee.

We traveled single file—I in the rear. After three or four miles we came to a stream. We could not see what it was, but I knew by its noise that it was quite a river. The boy said it was ordinarily a small creek, but now was swollen by recent rains. He did not like to cross first, as he could not swim. I was too anxious to proceed to stand upon ceremony, and pushed forward. The stream was not over twenty feet wide, but deep and rapid. I was carried down stream some little distance before effecting a landing. The banks were rough and rocky, and lined by huge piles of driftwood. I finally worked my way out, but the darkies could not be induced to try it.

Getting from the boy directions as best I could, by talking across the stream, as to my route, I found the country a succession of hills, hollows, and a second large creek, which my horse swam readily, but I could not again find the path. Upon the prairies of Iowa the loss of such a path would mean but little, but in this God-forsaken wilderness, without knowing which was north, south, east, or west, nor which way I wanted to go, it meant much. After stopping for a few moments, until I had come to fully realize the predicament I was in, I started forward, giving my horse rein, and letting him pick his way.

In a few minutes he struck the path, and at a little distance farther on we came to a traveled road. I heard dogs barking and other signs of life. It was a considerable distance before I came in sight of a house, but finally could see one, and lights shining through the windows.

Lights shining through a window are of all things most welcome to a lost, tired, hungry night wanderer, when associated with a peaceful welcome. But when those lights have lost their peaceful welcome and assumed a hostile guise, they are of all things most unwelcome.

I was moving cautiously toward this house when I became aware that it stood at some distance to the right of the road, and began to hope to pass unseen, but hardly had that hope dawned when it was destroyed by a voice ringing out upon the night air the unwelcome command:

"Halt!"

I was just opposite the house and answered the challenge by asking who they were.

They answered "Halt and dismount," or they would fire.

I gave my horse the spur, and he bounded nimbly away. But I came near being stopped by two large buckshot hitting me in the thigh. I kept my seat, clinging closely to my horse's neck, and if ever a horse did nobly his very best it was my little black pacer upon this occasion. Shot after shot whistled by my head, and the genuine rebel yell sounding in our rear gave to horse and rider the determination to do the very best in us for dear life. The little horse worked nobly. How his iron-clad hoofs kept time in rapid measure as they struck fire on that rocky mountain road. Occasionally I fired my pistol at my pursuers; but, as I could not see three steps behind me, and it marked the direction for them to shoot, I desisted. I now gave my whole energy to coaxing and petting and praising my horse. I called him by every pet name I had ever given him. I implored him to save me from those yelling devils galloping after me, and the little fellow's feet kept right on like a tireless machine—one, two, three, four—one, two, three, four—one, two, three, four—and repeat, in exact rhythmic rapid time, and the yelling hounds behind followed, shooting into the darkness as they came.

Time passed. I was getting rapidly over the ground. The little black was good mettle, fleet-footed, and his continuous and rapid pace had flung the miles behind us rapidly. How good that one, two, three, four sounded. How it awoke the night echoes in that forest. I almost began to enjoy it.

Nobly, nobly, my little black, and just then I felt him cringe. I knew that he was hit at last; I knew that he soon must fail in that rapid musical four-beats-to-a-measure which had for the last hour been so heroically maintained. I saw that he was beginning to fail. There was a perceptible slowing of the hoof-beats. My heart began to sink. Daylight was streaking the eastern sky. My pursuers were rapidly gaining upon me. I could hear their horses breathe and their feet behind me. They were rapidly riding up. There are a score of them. I was just thinking all is over, I am captured, when a volley of musket balls, passing directly over my head, was poured into them, and I heard the ringing notes of a bugle calling to a charge.

Great God! what a change. There was the old flag. I was in a camp of my friends, and my late pursuers, not already shot dead, were now riding for their lives, as a moment ago was I. The change was too sudden. I fainted in the saddle.

When I again became conscious I was lying on the ground; my horse stood panting a few steps away, and Lieutenant Eddie, believing me badly hurt, was bending over me. As soon as he saw that I was conscious he saluted me, and told me who he was. "Rather a close call, comrade," said he. "We were in the nick of time; are you much hurt?"

I answered that I was but little hurt, a shot or two in the leg, but about tired out—all night in the saddle. "I thought your bugle the sweetest music I ever heard. Did you get any of them?"

"Oh, yes; several lie out there in the road and the boys are after the rest."

The recall was then sounded.

I then got up and walked to my poor horse. A shot had struck him in the hip. He was completely used up.

"Hello, here they come."

This remark indicated the return of the pursuers of the Johnnies who had been giving me my recent twelve-mile chase. They brought sixteen prisoners, some of them quite badly wounded.

The sun was now rising—a foggy morning.

I told my errand to Lieutenant Eddie, and asked him for the horse of some one of the prisoners. He told me to look among them and take my choice. I chose that of the Captain of the squad. He used some bad language when ordered to dismount and deliver up his horse. And now occurs a curious circumstance. The Captain's tongue unloosed, and he began to give us his history. How he was born in Washington County, Pa.; that he had joined the Confederates because he believed them right, and that they would whip us yet.

This roiled Lieutenant Eddie, who also declared himself a native of Washington County, Pa., and I declared myself a Washington County, Pa., man—a trio, meeting under strange circumstances.

First—Myself, Dan Knight, Company C, Fifth Iowa, came running for life from the—— Second—Captain Bob Owens, of Duke's Confederate Cavalry.

Third—Lieutenant Frank Eddie, Company H, Seventh Pennsylvania, my deliverer and Owens' captor.

All natives of the same State. I am glad to say that Owens was the only Washington County man I ever heard of who fought with the Confederacy.

Owens asked if we were going to make him walk. Lieutenant Eddie responded:

"No; we are going to hang you, and save you the trouble of walking."

I took his horse, exchanging his for my own saddle. While doing this, Owens came to me and said:

"They do not intend hanging us. That would be contrary to the rules of war."

I answered, "You do not stand for the rules of war when you get any of our boys. But what made you take such risk to capture me. I am no great catch."

"We wanted the papers you carry," said he.

"Where did you get your information?"

"A negro came into our camp and informed us. He is a spy in the pay of our Colonel."

"Had he a boy with him?"

"No; it was the boy himself. He told us of the old man being with him, and the old coon is down on us. So he had to slip away from him and hurry to us with the news."

I had heard enough. The darkies could not all be trusted. How unwise my telling them of the purpose of my journey. It had come nigh defeating it.

"How far did I ride under your fire?"

After considering a moment he replied, "About twelve miles."

In the pursuit the rebels had lost seven killed, and seventeen prisoners. None of our side had received a scratch but myself.

We could now begin to hear the heavy guns of Pittsburg Landing—the expected battle had begun. It served to remind me of the importance of my mission. Bidding the boys all good-morning I mounted my new horse and rode away in the direction of the battle. First, let me add that I had secured from negro residents in the vicinity of the camp the promise to care well for my wounded horse. I left him standing where he stood when I took the saddle from him, and he looked almost humanly or more at me as I rode away.

Any old cavalry man will understand the swelling heart with which I parted after such tests from that noble horse. Let it be his eulogy that during the whole night he bore me bravely through a trackless wood, ending with a twelve-mile race under constant fire, and to him give due credit for the safe deliverance to General Grant of the message which that day reached him in the nick of time. Here's honor to my noble horse. In parting, if I shed a tear it was a soldier's tear, that did honor to my manhood. I rode away with such emotions as could not be repressed. My eyes were full, my heart throbbing, and to-day, more than twenty-three years ago, I say, "God bless me for that tribute of emotion to a noble horse!"

Once more on the road, and the desire to do—to faithfully accomplish my errand—possessed me.

It was Sunday. The enemy had arranged an attack upon our forces, and were now wheeling into line and concentrating their efforts for the destruction of General Grant's forces. As I rode rapidly forward and thought as to the final result, I could not for a moment feel but the Union would prevail.

Minute by minute I could note the growth of the battle as battery after battery, and regiment after regiment, and battalion after battalion, and division after division became engaged. The volume of the battle grew and grew, and with it my desire to deliver my precious message.

The road was muddy and bad, but I urged forward my horse, now reeking with sweat. I began to meet refugees—negroes so frightened they could not speak—women, children, dogs—all intent upon getting away from the fray.

It was two o'clock p. m. when I arrived upon the river's bank, opposite Pittsburgh Landing. I looked over the scene with varying, strange emotions. That was no Iowa harvest field.

The ferryboat carried me over, and I hurried forward to find General Grant.

Shot and shell were flying over my head—no dinner horn music they.

In a short time I found the General. He stood watching the working of some new batteries engaged in shelling the woods beyond. His face wore a troubled look. When I handed him the papers he tore off the envelope with haste, read a few lines, turned to me and said:

"Did General Nelson send any verbal message?"

I replied, "Yes. He said he would be in line with you to-morrow!"

He sent an orderly at once to repeat that to other commanders.

He then said to me, "You can now go and get rest. I think you must need it."

I rode back to the river just in time to take the boat for Savannah, which we reached just as Nelson's advance came up.

Thus have I tried to detail a day's work for my country—an eventful one.—Chicago Ledger.

Bill Nye on Cyclones.

We were riding along on the bounding train, and some one spoke of the free and democratic way that people in this country got acquainted with each other while traveling. Then we got to talking about railway sociability and railway etiquette, when a young man from East Jasper, who had wildly jumped and grabbed his valise every time the train hesitated, said that it was queer what railway travel would do in the way of throwing people together. He said that in Nebraska once he and a large, corpulent gentleman, both total strangers, were thrown together while trying to jump a washout, and an intimacy sprung up between them that had ripened into open hostility.

From that we got to talking about natural phenomena and storms. I spoke of the cyclone with some feeling and a little bitterness, perhaps, briefly telling my own experience, and making the storm as loud and wet and violent as possible.

Then a gentleman from Kansas named George L. Murdock, an old cattleman, was telling of a cyclone that came across his range two years ago last September. The sky was clear, to begin with, and then all at once, as Mr. Murdock states, a little cloud, no larger than a man's hand, might have been seen. It moved toward the southwest gently, with its hands in its pockets for a few moments, and then Mr. Murdock discovered that it was of a pale-green color, about sixteen hands high, with dark-blue mane and tail. About a mile from where he stood, the cyclone, with great force, swooped down, and, with a muffled roar, swept a quarter-section of land out from under a heavy mortgage without injuring the mortgage in the least. He says that people came for miles the following day to see the mortgage, still on file at the office of the register of deed, and just as good as ever.

Then a gentleman named Bean, of Western Minnesota, a man who went there at an early day, and homesteaded it when his nearest neighbor was fifty miles away, spoke of a cyclone that visited his county before the telegraph or railroad had penetrated that part of the State.

Mr. Bean said it was very clear up to the moment that he noticed a cloud in the northwest no larger than a man's hand. It sauntered down in a southwesterly direction like a cyclone that had all summer to do its chores in. Then it gave two quick snorts and a roar, wiped out of existence all the farm buildings he had, sucked the well dry, soured all the milk in the milk-house, and spread desolation all over that quarter section. But Mr. Bean said that the most remarkable thing he remembered was this: He had dug about a pint of angle-worms that morning, intending to go over to the lake toward evening and catch a few perch. But when the cyclone came it picked up those angle worms and drove them head first through his new grindstone without injuring the worms or impairing the grindstone. He would have had the grindstone photographed, he said, if the angle worms could have been kept still long enough. He said that they were driven just far enough through to hang on the other side like a lambrequin.

The cyclone is certainly a wonderful phenomenon, its movements are so erratic, and in direct violation of all known rules.

Mr. Louis P. Barker of Northern Iowa was also on the car, and he described a cyclone that he saw in the '70s along in September at the close of a hot but clear day. The first intimation that Mr. Barker had of an approaching storm was a small cloud no larger than a man's hand which he discovered moving slowly toward the southwest with a gyratory movement. It then appeared to be a funnel-shaped cloud which passed along near the surface of the ground with its apex now and then lightly touching a barn or a well and pulling it out by the roots. It would then bound lightly into the air and spit on its hands. What he noticed most carefully on the following day was the wonderful evidence of its powerful suction. It sucked a milch cow absolutely dry, pulled all the water out of his cistern, and then went around to the waste-water pipe that led from the bath-room and drew a two-year-old child, who was taking a bath at the time, clear down through the two-inch waste-pipe, a distance of one hundred and fifty feet. He had two inches of the pipe with him and a lock of hair from the child's head.

It is such circumstances as these, coming to us from the mouths of eye-witnesses, that lead us to exclaim: How prolific is nature, and how wonderful are all her works—including poor, weak man! Man, who comes into the world clothed in a little brief authority, perhaps, and nothing else to speak of. He rises up in the morning, prevaricates, and dies. Where are our best liars to-day? Look for them where you will, and you will find that they are passing away. Go into the cemetery and there you will find them mingling with the dust, but striving still to perpetuate their business by marking their tombs with a gentle prevarication, chiseled in enduring stone:

CHAMPION LIAR.

DIED

I have heard it intimated by people who seemed to know what they were talking about, that truth is mighty and will prevail; but I do not see much show for her till the cyclone season is over.

A Partial Judge.

A man applied to the Governor of Dakota for a pardon for a man then serving a term in the penitentiary.

"On what grounds do you ask for a pardon?" inquired the Governor.

"That the Judge who sentenced him was prejudiced."

"That is hardly probable."

"But I can prove it."

"Well, go ahead."

"The man had once traded horses with the Judge, who wanted a very gentle horse. He highly recommended the animal, and said he could warrant it not to kick. The next morning the Judge went out and found it dead."

"Yes, I see."

"The Judge told the man about it, and he went over and looked at the horse, and then he tickled its hind legs with a straw, and turned and said: 'Well, I calculate that hoss is just as gentle as I said he was; I still claim he won't kick a fly. Just bring your children right out and let 'em play with him, Judge.' The Judge chased him out of the barn with a four-tined pitchfork, but didn't catch him. Shortly after he got a whack at him on a trial and sent him up."

"Well," said the Governor, "I think he must have been prejudiced. I'll write out a pardon for your man."—Estelline Bell.

TEA is said to be adulterated with old rubber shoes chopped into small pieces and twisted and colored to resemble the Oriental leaf; there are other adulterations, such as nutgalls, iron filings, granulated wood and many other ingredients more or less harmful, but the fact does not interfere a bit with the customs of society. The "Yum-Yum teas" are still held, and the ladies continue to drink the tongue-loosening tipple to the accompaniment of the latest gossip without its apparently doing them any harm.—Boston Courier.

THE POET.

The orthodox poet and slinger of meter should be a sound sleeper and vigorous eater; join the learning of Paul to the fervor of Peter, know the balancing rhymes and the rhythmical treter
Of lines and sinilax,
Of zephyrs and heifers,
Of infidels and subsids,
Of over-arched bowers of greenery and flowers;
And work on one rhyme for hours upon hours.
Know the whole range of history from Cleveland to Priam, and the thought of all lands from New Brunswick to Siam, and work like a dredge at a dollar per diem, love all lovely objects with no cash to buy 'em;
Such as roses and posies,
And mountains and fountains,
And pictures and fixtures,
And gorgeous pavilions for Laurus and Lillians,
And a large bank deposit far up in the millions.
His lines should be full of nabobs and emirs, of ghouls and khans and Orient dreamers, of cymbals and shawms and victorious steamers, and end in a climax of glory and screamers,
With clashing and slashing!
With roaring and pouring!
With lunging and plunging!
And burst in a chasm of blank protoplasm!
In a gunpowder chaos and dynamite spasm!

CAPT. PAUL BOYTON says that while floating down the Mississippi River a storm drove him ashore. He sought shelter in a deserted cabin on the bank. Entering the cabin with a torch in his hand he discovered a huge rattlesnake. It crawled into a crevice in the floor. On holding his torch before the hole he discovered that it contained a nest of rattlesnakes. He flung his torch among them and fled to the river. The cabin soon sprang up in a blaze behind him.

At the Congregational church last Sunday morning Rev. C. F. Van Anken gave a discourse on consecration, interviewing throughout its length an excellent lesson from national history. The mail which is now carried on the Friant is an experiment by the contractor. It is very much more expensive than the stage route which supplies two intermediate offices, but if the resorters and citizens are sufficiently well pleased with the arrangement to help bear the extra expense; it will probably be continued during the season.

Trial of the Fire Engine.

The hose did not arrive in time to give the new fire engine a full test on the Fourth, but did arrive on Tuesday of this week. A test of its capacity was commenced yesterday morning, and continued until noon to-day.

The engine was placed on the dock near Upright & Emrey's warehouse, and when all arrangements were complete the match was applied. In seven minutes the engine was started; in eight minutes there was water through 200 feet of hose. After ten minutes water was thrown about 200 feet from the nozzle. A trial was also made at 500 feet, but we did not get the measurements. One length of hose gave out, showing signs of bursting in several places, and was taken out. At 950 feet from the engine, water was thrown about 150 feet from the nozzle, on the south terrace, near L. E. Allen's residence, the engine yet being on Upright & Emrey's dock, lifting water three feet.

Afterwards a trial was made with two streams, through 200 feet of hose each. At this trial the old hand engine was put alongside for comparison, and a careful observer could see but little difference in the size and force of the streams.

In the trial for height, water was raised about 20 feet above McCabe's flag pole,—an estimated height of about 90 feet.

After dinner, the engine was placed on the south approach to the bridge, and failed to raise water 16 feet. Then it was placed on the Rifflenburg Milling Co.'s dock, 5½ feet above the water, and an effort made to throw to the top of the roof, 53 feet from the ground, but with 80 pounds of steam it could not be done. The fires were then put out, and the machine taken back to the engine house.

New packing was put in in several places, and another trial given this morning from the mill company's dock. With 50 pounds of steam water was thrown well on to the roof of the mill, and the roof of the Fountain City house was thoroughly wet.

Then a trial was made at the bridge. With 90 pounds steam pressure, and 120 water pressure, one stream was forced over E. M. Clark's house, through 750 feet of hose.

The ability of the machine to hold steam being questioned, it was kept on the bridge over an hour, and a uniform pressure of 80 to 90 pounds was maintained.

With the trial last night nearly every citizen was dissatisfied. It did not come up to the requirements, but no fault can be found with the work this morning.

Although the hose did not actually burst, numerous blisters could be found, through which fine streams of water escaped.

At time of going to press the council has not accepted it.

A Warning.

Pain is given for the wise purpose of informing us of the presence of danger and disease. Any little excitement of an unusual nature disturbs the balance of the system, the nervous energies are exhausted, and headache and a hundred other disturbances are the result. Many of the miseries of man and womanhood might be cured and prevented were their approach heeded and resisted, having their origin in derangements of the liver and blood, dyspepsia, jaundice, indigestion, costiveness, and other unwholesome conditions. Evils of a diseased nature find a certain cure by the use of Golden Seal Bitters. In this medicine, nature, aided by art, has produced a rare combination of medicinal properties, wisely adapted to the cure of diseases common to man-kind. The vitalizing principals embodied in Golden Seal Bitters will assuredly cure the broken down dyspeptic. Sold by Perry Weed and Dr. G. W. Crouter.

Broken Down Invalids.

Probably never in the history of Cough Medicines has any article met success equal to that which has been showered upon Dr. Pete's 25-cent cough cure. Thousands of hopeless cases of coughs, colds, and consumption have yielded to this truly miraculous discovery. For this reason we feel warranted in risking our reputation and money on its merits. Sold by Perry Weed and Dr. G. W. Crouter.

Dr. Pete's Magic Pain Oil is

Good for both internal and external pain.
Good for sprains, black and blue bruises, and swollen joints.
Good for wounds made by knives, scissors, and implements of destruction.
Good for neuralgia's twinges, and rheumatism's terrible torture. Sold by Perry Weed and Dr. G. W. Crouter.

BLACK HAWK'S GRAVE.

The Famous Iowa Indian's Peculiar Burial—Half Above Ground.

Dr. J. F. Snyder has written an article for the Magazine of American History on the Indian chief Black Hawk. He says:

Considering these facts it seems strange that the particulars of his death and burial should have been unknown to Mr. Schoolcraft, and so meagerly recorded by him, when he could so easily have obtained correct information of every circumstance attending the event. The death and burial of Black Hawk, particularly the ceremonies attending the inhumation of so noted a personage of such importance in the history of the Indians, to illustrate their mortuary customs, we would expect to be minutely reported in Mr. Schoolcraft's great work. But he disposes of the famous chief's last days and final interment in the following brief terms (volume 6, page 454): "He was safely conducted to his home on the distant Mississippi, where he lived many years a wiser and a better man. After his death his tribesmen gave to his remains those rites of sepulture which are only bestowed upon the most distinguished men. They buried him in war-dress, in sitting posture, on an eminence, and covered him with a mound of earth." This is all I have found in the great historical work of Mr. Schoolcraft concerning the death and funeral rites of one of the most celebrated of recent Indians. No dates are given, nor is the location of "his home on the distant Mississippi" indicated; nor is there any mention of any ceremonies performed at his grave, or any fact stated to guide us in estimating the magnitude of the "mound of earth."

Capt. Jas. H. Jordan was a trader among the Sacs and Foxes before Black Hawk's death, was present at his burial, and is now residing on the very spot where he died. In reply to my letter of inquiry he writes as follws:

"ELDORA, Iowa, July 15, 1881.

"Black Hawk was buried on the northeast quartor of southeast quarter of section 2, township 70, range 12, Davis County, Iowa, in the northeast part of the county, on the Des Moines River bottom, about ninety rods from where he lived at the time he died, on the north side of the river. I have the ground where he lived for a door yard, it being between my house and the river. The only mound over the grave was made from some puncheons split up and spread over two forked poles thrust into the earth, one at his head and the other at his feet; these were then sodded over with bluegrass, making a ridge about four feet high. A flag staff some twenty feet high, on which was a silk flag, was planted at his head, and it hung there until the wind wore it out. My house and his were only about four rods apart when he died. He was sick only about fourteen days. He was buried right where he sat the year before, when in council with Iowa Indians, and was buried in a suit of military clothes, made to order and given to him, when in Washington City, by General Jackson, with hat, sword, gold epaulets, etc., etc."

From another old settler of that neighborhood, Mr. Isaac Nelson, the following reply was received:

"HICKORY, Iowa, June 24, 1881.—I came to Iowa in the spring of 1836, and was two or three times near Black Hawk's house, but never went in to see him. * * * He was buried in a manner on the top of the ground, but his feet were about sixteen inches in the ground and his head about a foot above the surface. He had on a suit of military clothes; four niee new blankets were wrapped around him, a pillow of feathers was under his head, a plug hat on his head, and an old-fashioned Brussels stock around his neck. You may ask how I saw all of this when he was in his grave. I will try to describe the way in which he was buried, and then you will understand it. A forked post had been planted at his head and one at his feet; a ridge polo was laid in these forks, and then puncheons put over him in the shape of a roof and the earth thrown on, which made a raise of two or three feet above him. The whites had taken out two ends so we could see through. The grave had been inclosed with pickets some eight feet high, planted in the ground with joints broken; but these the whitos had forced apart so that we could easily creep in. His feet were to the east, and his head to the west. At his feet was a shaved oak post with painting on it, and at his head a pole with a nice silk flag. All the grass and weeds were kept out of the inclosure and for some distance around the outside. He had no coffin, but was laid full length upon a board with four fine blankets around him."

Out of a Dire Difficulty.

A father who can sympathize with his children, and amicably decide their differences and make himself their instructor and guide, is as noble as he is useful.

Such a parent lives at Owingsville, Ky. His two sons, both of whom he loves dearly, were in love with the same young lady, who was unable to decide between them.

The father was a thoughtful widower, and he felt deeply for his sons, and in the kindness of his heart he tried to adjust the ill-feelings that naturally resulted from such strained relations. He succeeded. The boys were sent away on business, and then the gay old rascal married the girl himself.

THOUSANDS of Britons in times of famine during the first century after the Norman conquest sold themselves into thralldom. Children were even sold by their parents to escape extreme poverty.

Important.

When you visit or leave New York City, save baggage, expressage, and $3 carriage hire, and stop at the Grand Union Hotel, opposite Grand Central Depot.

613 rooms, fitted up at a cost of one million dollars, $1 and upwards per day. European plan. Elevator. Restaurant supplied with the best. Horse cars, stages, and elevated railroad to all depots. Families can live better for less money at the Grand Union Hotel than at any other first-class hotel in the city.

A Sleepy Old Village.

An odd account is given by the Western Morning News, of Yealmpton, an English village within seven miles of Plymouth, with a population of nearly a thousand:

Newspapers are not delivered till thirty-four hours after they are printed, and the delivery of letters is of a very meager kind. This obliges the inhabitants to resort to all sorts of shifts to obtain "a bit of news." Interesting items are scribbled on pieces of paper by those who travel from Plymouth to Yealmpton, and these are pushed under the doors of leading inhabitants, who communicate the contents to their neighbors. The vicar, who receives £480 pounds a year, has long been practically past active work, and was not particularly active when he had health and strength. Services are conducted in a fashion on Sunday mornings and afternoons, yet they are of such a kind that few beyond the vicar's household attend. The vicar knows so little of his parishoners that quite recently he directed that some clothing should be sent from a local charity to a man whom he had buried four years ago.

An Important Function Stimulated.

The kidneys exercise most important functions, which are so wearisome that they tax to the utmost the strength and endurance of these busy little organs. Every breath, every pulsation of the heart, every movement of a limb, every thought, makes waste and necessitates the development of new atoms. The used up particles in the blood are sifted from it and dissolved in a watery fluid by the kidneys, which then discharge their fluid into the bladder. A train of disasters to the system would follow if those "ashes," so to speak, were not thoroughly strained off and discharged. This is the case when the kidneys become inactive. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, by restoring their activity, not only keeps open a most important outlet for impurities, but prevents diseases of the kidneys themselves, which, when inert, become liable to fall a prey to diabetes, Bright's disease, nephritis, albu-menuria, and other maladies specially incident to them, which, although not specially rapid in their progression, are particularly obstinate and fatal.

We Pause to Hesitate.

When it becomes necessary to call a larger man a liar.

When the assessor asks if there are any dogs concealed under the house.

When an undertaker asks to patronize him as liberally as possiblo.

When the clergyman hints that he would not be averse to eating dinner with us.

When a bore enters our office, puts his feet on the table and expects us to spare his life.

When the butcher asks us if we won't just settle that little matter and be done with it

When we are asked to join a temperance society by a man whose breath smells like free lunch and a brewery.

When we are expected to eat the same old hash three times a day and lay aside the nails and things we find in it.

When our beloved wife expects us to get up and light the fire about three hours before daylight on a cold morning.

Instantly Relieved.

Mrs. Ann Lacour, of New Orleans, La., writes: "I have a son who has been sick for two years: he has been attended by our leading physicians, but all to no purpose. This morning he had his usual spell of coughing, and was so greatly prostrated in consequence that death seemed imminent. We had in the house a bottle of DR. WM. HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS, purchased by my husband, who noticed your advertisement. We administered it and he was instantly relieved."

Is Life Worth Living?

That depends upon the Liver, for if the Liver is inactive the whole system is out of order—the breath is bad, digestion poor, head dull or aching, energy and hopefulness gone, the spirits are depressed, a heavy weight exists after eating, with general despondency and the blues. The Liver is the housekeeper of the health; and a harmless, simple remedy that acts like Nature, does not constipate afterwards or require constant taking, does not interfere with business or pleasure during its use, makes Simmons Liver Regulator a medical perfection.

I have tested its virtues personally, and know that for Dyspepsia, Biliousness and Throbbing Headache, it is the best medicine the world ever saw. Have tried forty other remedies before Simmons Liver Regulator, and none of them gave more than temporary relief, but the Regulator not only relieved but cured.

Tobacco and Self-interest.

BY PRESIDENT JOHN BASCOM, D. D., LL. D.

There are few prevalent and accepted habits, we believe, more at war with a wise self-interest than that of the use of tobacco. We wish to present this relation in the present article, reserving the relation of this habit to spiritual defilement for a later one.

The very positive and unwholesome effects of tobacco on the human body are obvious, aside from all medical testimony on the subject, from the simple fact that it creates an intense, almost ungovernable, appetite. Such an appetite arises—as in the use of opium or of alcohol—from a decisive change in the tissues of the body,—a change of the nature of disease. It is not from a normal, but a very abnormal, condition that this insatiable craving springs. It discloses the unfortunate change which has been wrought in the physical system by tobacco,—a change of which every chewer and smoker has a most humiliating witness within himself. He need not go elsewhere for a proof of the very positive power of tobacco. A whole day's abstinence will be sufficient to assure him at once of the mischief making and tyrannical inmate he has received into the household of his appetites.

Such transformation cannot take place in the delicate human organism without altering the general tone of the body, endangering its health, limiting its capacity of pleasure, and greatly marring its productive power. We may be surprised that so vigorous an agent, and one so alien to nourishment, does no more mischief than it seems to do; but our surprise should be reduced by the fact that the mischief is often very obvious, and, when of a remote and obscure character, is often hidden rather than overcome.

The devils of weakness and disease which possess humanity are legion, and a goodly number of them find entrance by this appetite. No man can afford to reduce, by any indulgence, the tone of his physical system; and when such reduction is following from other causes, he cannot afford to hide it by the sedative effects of tobacco. If a man wishes to know where he is in physical resources, and to handle his physical powers with economy and wisdom, he must not confuse the whole problem by this habit.

A decided reduction of pleasure in a long life is almost sure to follow from this appetite. The appetite, once established, confers comparatively little enjoyment, but is sought as a relief from the discomfort which attends nervous exhaustion, or on denial. The man is driven forward by the inconvenience of abstinence far more than drawn onward by the pleasures of indulgence. The use of tobacco is completely opposed to that peaceful possession of one's appetites by which they bring many gratifications and demands none. The right relation to one's enjoyment is lost, and instead of holding them in easy subjection, he is held in subjection to them. This relation involves a loss of pleasure, just as certainly as of manhood. When the recognized limit of indulgence is reached, the cutting edge of discomfort is partially removed; but if even a brief denial is put, by intention or by accident, on the appetite, it becomes at once restive and clamorous.

Rather, better, and more enjoyable [illegible] who chooses tobacco as his after-dinner indulgence leaves behind him the more delicate appreciation of food, and the more varied and wholesome gratification of fruits which belong to a perfectly healthy appetite. Strong stimulants, in securing their own pleasure, take away the power of a much wider, more discriminating, and more healthful use of the pleasures of the palate. One cannot say positively where the line of highest enjoyment is found; but when one chooses tobacco as his solace, he has slipped into the snare of a seductive, fallen angel, who will drive from him many wiser, better, and more gentle spirits,—who would have sought his permanent delight in many delicate ways.

The schooner America was released from the shore near Cross Village last Friday afternoon and brought to Charlevoix by the tug Williams, where most of her cargo of corn was unloaded. On Saturday evening she was taken to Manitowoc. The corn was bought by Capt. Penfold, E. M. Clark, and the Cross boys, who have since sold most of it to farmers and stock growers around the country.

The Charlevoix Mfg. Co. have just finished from plans by J. T. Kirkpatrick, a fine mantel for S. M. Moore's cottage, which shows up some of the really handsome effects to be produced with our own native timber, and which should be seen to be fully appreciated. The cottage has just been rebuilt and repainted, making it much more roomy inside, and very conspicuous amid its surroundings.

We have already had numerous inquiries regarding the publication of the Daily Resorter this season. The paper was so popular last year that it would be too bad not to have it published this summer. But we have so much to look after that it is doubtful if we can give our whole attention to it, and we would like to have some one else undertake it this season. To any practical newspaper man who will furnish as good a paper as that of last year we will give the use of our office, and all the material for the daily free, and will help him all we can. With this opportunity the right man ought to do well, for the hotel and resorts ought to give a liberal support, as no one thing ever did so much to advertise the attractions of northern Michigan as "The Daily Resorter." If any one takes it he must have the first number out July 26th.—Independent.

Mr. J. S. Smithson and a few others interested, are trying to have the mail from Petoskey brought on the Friant, (as it has been during the past week) and returned on the Faxton and City of Grand Rapids at noon, so as to connect with the afternoon train at Petoskey, instead of waiting for the midnight train. The effect of this arrangement if accomplished, will be to get letters from Charlevoix delivered in Chicago about 24 hours quicker than is now possible, and in other cities it can be delivered at least 12 hours quicker. It is proposed to continue this arrangement during the resort season, and that the extra expense of transportation will be borne by subscription among those most directly benefitted. One of the benefits to accrue to the permanent residents of Charlevoix will be the large additions of gentlemen of means to our transient population who now feel that they cannot go so far away from prompt and direct mail service.

How Coal Made the "Bad Lands."

The "Bad Lands" of Dakota are said to owe their origin to the burning of the coal deposits that once existed there. They are situated principally along the Cheyenne and Grand rivers and the Little Missouri. They are from two or three miles to, say, twenty-five miles in width. In the long ago, the valleys of these streams must have been filled with drift wood. Then followed a period of drift, which buried the accumulation of wood under two or three hundred feet of sediment, sand and gravel. The buried wood in time became coal, the veins being in some instances twenty odd feet in depth. Either from spontaneous combustion or from electricity, fires were started in these veins, and they gradually burned out, restoring in part the old water courses by means of the overflow from the accumulation of water in these newly formed basins. Looking upon them, here you see patches of slag, there great bowlders, showing unmistakable evidences of great heat, and on every hand scoria or burned clay, resembling broken brick. Where the fires were checked by the caving earth and the coal did not burn, mounds two or three hundred feet in height stand.

And according to the Black Diamond, a newspaper devoted to the coal interest, published in Chicago, in parts of Wyoming the same process is now going on; vast fields are undermined by subterranean fires, and the blackened, smoking plain is filled with desolation. Trappers say these fires have been in existence for a long time, and the traditions of the Indians point to the same conclusion.—Scientific American.

Michigan Crop Report, July 1, 1886.

The area of the 1886 wheat crop, as returned by supervisors, is, in the southern four tiers of counties, 1,357,578 acres, and in the northern counties 243,206 acres, a total of 1,600,784 acres. Final corrections, and spring wheat sowings which were not completed at the time the assessment was taken, will probably add 25,000 acres, making the total area of the 1886, wheat harvest, 1,625,784 acres. The average per acre, as estimated by correspondents, is 13 and 68 hundredths bushels, indicating a probable yield in the State of 22,239,686 bushels.

The returns of supervisors, partially corrected, show the area of wheat harvested in 1885 to have been 1,497,470 acres, and the yield, 29,927,543 bushels. The final corrections will increase this area by at least 35,000 acres, and the yield by 700,000 bushels, making the totals about 1,532,470 acres, and 30,627,543 bushels.

The total number of bushels of wheat reported marketed in the 11 months, August—June, is 14,044,903, or about 46 per cent of the crop of 1885. The number of bushels reported marketed in the same months of 1884 and 1885 was 8,468,513, or 33 per cent of the crop of 1884.

The condition of other crops, compared with vitality and growth of average years, is, for the State, as follows: Corn, 92 per cent.; oats, 85; barley, 88; clover, meadows and pastures, 79; timothy, meadows and pastures, 74; and clover sowed this year, 81 per cent. The condition of corn compared with July 1, 1885, is 113. Seven per cent. of the corn planted failed to grow.

The weather is extremely dry. Complaints of the drouth come from every part of the State. At Lansing the rainfall during June amounted to only 2 and 14-hundredths inches, as compared with 4 and 37-hundredths inches, the average for 20 years, as recorded at the State Agricultural College.

Flooring Sam Jones.

Rev. Sam Jones whoops up the boys sometimes and rakes them terribly about their gambling and drinking frolics. "Oh, I've been all along there, boys. I know all about it and I used to go to balls, and dance, too, boys. But when I wanted to get married, when I wanted to settle down with a good wife, I quit drinking and gambling, and I didn't go to a ball-room to get my wife, but I went to a prayer-meeting and I got a good one." He told this in Texas and when he returned to his boarding-house, his landlady, who had heard his remarks, said: "I don't blame you, Brother Jones, but poor Sister Jones, where did she go to get her husband?" They say this is the only time he has been floored since he quit drinking.—Vicksburg Herald.

Democratic Economy.

For the eleven months of the current fiscal year, ending with May, the receipts of the government were eighty millions more than last year, and the expenditures were twenty-four millions less, a net gain to the treasury of thirty-two millions. The total excess of income for this full year over outgo will be nearly eighty millions, against an excess of only forty-eight millions last year, Republican prejudice may wrestle with these facts, but it can not hide from the people that Cleveland's is indeed an administration of reform.—Petoskey Democrat.

The True Way.

There should be but one way to obtain a pension, and that is by the applicant going before a board of surgeons and submitting his claims to an impartial examination, and then if he is entitled to a pension it should be a liberal one. These so-called private pension bills should be vetoed right along.—Cheboygan Democrat.

Two Stories.

"I was really very sick," she said to the guest. The husband at the other end of the table sneered. "Well, you may sneer, but you know I was. I was real, downright sick; but I might die and you wouldn't mind."

"Wouldn't I," said the husband.

It was cruelly ambiguous. It might mean anything. You could not tell whether he meant he would be glad or sorry, or if he was merely chiding her for saying such a thing.

"When you were sick didn't I watch over you and devote all my life to making you comfortable and worrying about you?"

"Well, yes; you seemed to worry a good deal, I'll admit, but—"

"But—what? What are you going to say now? I never met anything so unfeeling and so ungrateful a man."

"Now, look here," he said to the guest, "I want to explain. I don't want to say anything harsh or unkind about her. She's been a pretty good wife, as wives go, you know, but she is nothing if not artistic. She has an eye for color. My boy, if you ever marry, don't marry a woman who has taste and an eye for color."

"Don't mind him," broke in the wife. "He's talking nonsense."

"I was sick once. I dislocated my shoulder, and I couldn't move. That was where she had me. I could eat and drink and do everything but get up or move. No sooner did she get me fairly down on a lounge than she wheeled the lounge out into the lightest place in the house, and for a week she kept trying all sorts of coverlets, and tidies, and hangings, and blankets on me, just to see what colors suited my complexion and the room best. She wouldn't let any of my friends see me unless I was covered up in pink silk or blue satin or embroidered bazook, or some other unpronounceable, unintelligibly named stuff."

"That is an awful, fearful, wicked story!"

"Now, my dear, you know it isn't. You know perfectly well I could not resist. I couldn't move."

"I didn't do anything of the kind."

"I won't tell him, my dear, about that sickness of yours."

"What sickness?"

"Well, when you got those new—never mind, I won't give you away."

"You can't give me away. I'm not afraid."

"Well, you remember when you bought a dozen new and elegant—well, I may as well say it—night-caps."

"You just hold your tongue. I'm ashamed of you."

"Those night-caps. You know quite well you were taken sick and received all your lady friends in bed for twelve days."

"You horrible slanderer!"

"Each day in a new night-cap, and you went out on the thirteenth."

Then she threw an orange at his head and he stopped.—San Francisco Chronicle.

A Hint From a Dowager.

There has been a great deal of gossip in the newspapers about the extravagant dressing among the ladies in Washington society this winter, writes a correspondent of the Philadelphia Press. Objection is made that the gowns are cut entirely too low in the neck, and that the display of fine busts and shapely arms is much more lavish than fashion requires. I attended a reception at the residence of a senator, last week, which is said to have been one of the swellest affairs of the season. Cabinet officers, foreign ministers, senators, a sprinkling of representatives, and the leaders of fashionable society were present. In all about seven hundred invitations were issued. I had heard so much from a few scrawny women of the indelicate evening attire of certain grand dames that I made it my business to hunt the offenders down. My patient search met with poor reward. There was only one lady in the party against whose costume the most fastidious of the well-made women of Washington could offer an objection. This young lady's white silk dress was cut altogether too low for comfort, but the unprejudiced observer of her exquisitely-formed arms and the perfect proportions of her beautiful figure could not blame the natural vanity that prompted their possessor to pose in classic attitudes.

At the residence of Secretary Whitney the other evening the costume of the wife of a person attached to one of the foreign legations attracted much attention. The dress, I am told, was of pink satin, cut low, displaying the arms and bosom. The cottage has just been rebuilt and repainted, making it much more roomy inside, and very conspicuous amid its surroundings.

We have already had numerous inquiries regarding the publication of the Daily Resorter this season. The paper was so popular last year that it would be too bad not to have it published this summer. But we have so much to look after that it is doubtful if we can give our whole attention to it, and we would like to have some one else undertake it this season. To any practical newspaper man who will furnish as good a paper as that of last year we will give the use of our office, and all the material for the daily free, and will help him all we can. With this opportunity the right man ought to do well, for the hotel and resorts ought to give a liberal support, as no one thing ever did so much to advertise the attractions of northern Michigan as "The Daily Resorter." If any one takes it he must have the first number out July 26th.—Independent.

Mr. J. S. Smithson and a few others interested, are trying to have the mail from Petoskey brought on the Friant, (as it has been during the past week) and returned on the Faxton and City of Grand Rapids at noon, so as to connect with the afternoon train at Petoskey, instead of waiting for the midnight train. The effect of this arrangement if accomplished, will be to get letters from Charlevoix delivered in Chicago about 24 hours quicker than is now possible, and in other cities it can be delivered at least 12 hours quicker. It is proposed to continue this arrangement during the resort season, and that the extra expense of transportation will be borne by subscription among those most directly benefitted. One of the benefits to accrue to the permanent residents of Charlevoix will be the large additions of gentlemen of means to our transient population who now feel that they cannot go so far away from prompt and direct mail service.

How Coal Made the "Bad Lands."

The "Bad Lands" of Dakota are said to owe their origin to the burning of the coal deposits that once existed there. They are situated principally along the Cheyenne and Grand rivers and the Little Missouri. They are from two or three miles to, say, twenty-five miles in width. In the long ago, the valleys of these streams must have been filled with drift wood. Then followed a period of drift, which buried the accumulation of wood under two or three hundred feet of sediment, sand and gravel. The buried wood in time became coal, the veins being in some instances twenty odd feet in depth. Either from spontaneous combustion or from electricity, fires were started in these veins, and they gradually burned out, restoring in part the old water courses by means of the overflow from the accumulation of water in these newly formed basins. Looking upon them, here you see patches of slag, there great bowlders, showing unmistakable evidences of great heat, and on every hand scoria or burned clay, resembling broken brick. Where the fires were checked by the caving earth and the coal did not burn, mounds two or three hundred feet in height stand.

And according to the Black Diamond, a newspaper devoted to the coal interest, published in Chicago, in parts of Wyoming the same process is now going on; vast fields are undermined by subterranean fires, and the blackened, smoking plain is filled with desolation. Trappers say these fires have been in existence for a long time, and the traditions of the Indians point to the same conclusion.—Scientific American.

Michigan Crop Report, July 1, 1886.

The area of the 1886 wheat crop, as returned by supervisors, is, in the southern four tiers of counties, 1,357,578 acres, and in the northern counties 243,206 acres, a total of 1,600,784 acres. Final corrections, and spring wheat sowings which were not completed at the time the assessment was taken, will probably add 25,000 acres, making the total area of the 1886, wheat harvest, 1,625,784 acres. The average per acre, as estimated by correspondents, is 13 and 68 hundredths bushels, indicating a probable yield in the State of 22,239,686 bushels.

The returns of supervisors, partially corrected, show the area of wheat harvested in 1885 to have been 1,497,470 acres, and the yield, 29,927,543 bushels. The final corrections will increase this area by at least 35,000 acres, and the yield by 700,000 bushels, making the totals about 1,532,470 acres, and 30,627,543 bushels.

The total number of bushels of wheat reported marketed in the 11 months, August—June, is 14,044,903, or about 46 per cent of the crop of 1885. The number of bushels reported marketed in the same months of 1884 and 1885 was 8,468,513, or 33 per cent of the crop of 1884.

The condition of other crops, compared with vitality and growth of average years, is, for the State, as follows: Corn, 92 per cent.; oats, 85; barley, 88; clover, meadows and pastures, 79; timothy, meadows and pastures, 74; and clover sowed this year, 81 per cent. The condition of corn compared with July 1, 1885, is 113. Seven per cent. of the corn planted failed to grow.

The weather is extremely dry. Complaints of the drouth come from every part of the State. At Lansing the rainfall during June amounted to only 2 and 14-hundredths inches, as compared with 4 and 37-hundredths inches, the average for 20 years, as recorded at the State Agricultural College.

Flooring Sam Jones.

Rev. Sam Jones whoops up the boys sometimes and rakes them terribly about their gambling and drinking frolics. "Oh, I've been all along there, boys. I know all about it and I used to go to balls, and dance, too, boys. But when I wanted to get married, when I wanted to settle down with a good wife, I quit drinking and gambling, and I didn't go to a ball-room to get my wife, but I went to a prayer-meeting and I got a good one." He told this in Texas and when he returned to his boarding-house, his landlady, who had heard his remarks, said: "I don't blame you, Brother Jones, but poor Sister Jones, where did she go to get her husband?" They say this is the only time he has been floored since he quit drinking.—Vicksburg Herald.

Democratic Economy.

For the eleven months of the current fiscal year, ending with May, the receipts of the government were eighty millions more than last year, and the expenditures were twenty-four millions less, a net gain to the treasury of thirty-two millions. The total excess of income for this full year over outgo will be nearly eighty millions, against an excess of only forty-eight millions last year, Republican prejudice may wrestle with these facts, but it can not hide from the people that Cleveland's is indeed an administration of reform.—Petoskey Democrat.

The True Way.

There should be but one way to obtain a pension, and that is by the applicant going before a board of surgeons and submitting his claims to an impartial examination, and then if he is entitled to a pension it should be a liberal one. These so-called private pension bills should be vetoed right along.—Cheboygan Democrat.

Two Stories.

"I was really very sick," she said to the guest. The husband at the other end of the table sneered. "Well, you may sneer, but you know I was. I was real, downright sick; but I might die and you wouldn't mind."

"Wouldn't I," said the husband.

It was cruelly ambiguous. It might mean anything. You could not tell whether he meant he would be glad or sorry, or if he was merely chiding her for saying such a thing.

"When you were sick didn't I watch over you and devote all my life to making you comfortable and worrying about you?"

"Well, yes; you seemed to worry a good deal, I'll admit, but—"

"But— what? What are you going to say now? I never met anything so unfeeling and so ungrateful a man."

"Now, look here," he said to the guest, "I want to explain. I don't want to say anything harsh or unkind about her. She's been a pretty good wife, as wives go, you know, but she is nothing if not artistic. She has an eye for color. My boy, if you ever marry, don't marry a woman who has taste and an eye for color."

"Don't mind him," broke in the wife. "He's talking nonsense."

"I was sick once. I dislocated my shoulder, and I couldn't move. That was where she had me. I could eat and drink and do everything but get up or move. No sooner did she get me fairly down on a lounge than she wheeled the lounge out into the lightest place in the house, and for a week she kept trying all sorts of coverlets, and tidies, and hangings, and blankets on me, just to see what colors suited my complexion and the room best. She wouldn't let any of my friends see me unless I was covered up in pink silk or blue satin or embroidered bazook, or some other unpronounceable, unintelligibly named stuff."

"That is an awful, fearful, wicked story!"

"Now, my dear, you know it isn't. You know perfectly well I could not resist. I couldn't move."

"I didn't do anything of the kind."

"I won't tell him, my dear, about that sickness of yours."

"What sickness?"

"Well, when you got those new—never mind, I won't give you away."

"You can't give me away. I'm not afraid."

"Well, you remember when you bought a dozen new and elegant—well, I may as well say it—night-caps."

"You just hold your tongue. I'm ashamed of you."

"Those night-caps. You know quite well you were taken sick and received all your lady friends in bed for twelve days."

"You horrible slanderer!"

"Each day in a new night-cap, and you went out on the thirteenth."

Then she threw an orange at his head and he stopped.—San Francisco Chronicle.

A Hint From a Dowager.

There has been a great deal of gossip in the newspapers about the extravagant dressing among the ladies in Washington society this winter, writes a correspondent of the Philadelphia Press. The decision applies only to the three classes named, and not to clerks and other employes.

In its weekly review of the industrial outlook, Bradstreet's Journal reports trade as seasonably quiet and without special feature; concurs in mentioning a very hopeful feeling among merchants as to the outlook for the autumn. The tone of the dry goods market is encouraging, all advances in cotton goods having been well maintained and stocks being light. The pig-iron market is unchanged as to price. Mill irons are dull. Steel rails are strong at the low prices quoted, and the mills are full of orders. The interest in wool has receded from the Central Western States to Montana, Wyoming, and Utah, where prices are held above a parity with those ruling at Eastern markets. The clip east of the Mississippi has been cleared up, bought more largely by speculators than by manufacturers, prices having risen from one to three cents per pound within ten days. Wheat prospects, aside from Wisconsin and Minnesota, are for a fair harvest. Estimates vary from 435,000,000 to 465,000,000 bushels. The foreign wheat prospects are less favorable, particularly in India. Reports of stocks of wheat east of the Rocky Mountains, July 1, aggregate 35,000,000 bushels, against 63,000,000 three months ago, and on the Pacific coast 6,000,000 bushels, against 10,000,000 April 1. Lard has been materially advanced by speculators. The July cotton report shows that heavy rains have injured the growing crop, so that the condition may be classed as fair only, against good one year ago.

A crank assaulted Gen. Roca, Presi-dent of the Argentine Republic, while on his way to the House of Congress to read his opening address, felling him to the ground with a stone. The invitation was accompanied by a solid gold Grand Army of the Republic badge, to be worn by the President in case he attends. A bill was introduced authorizing the Secretary of War to have published additional volumes of "The War of the Rebellion" sufficient to supply all Grand Army posts. The resolution for open executive sessions was made the special order for Wednesday, December 8, thus practically disposing of it at the present session. The Senate passed the bill to establish a forest reservation on the headwaters of the Missouri River and on the headwaters of Clark's Fork of the Columbia River. CONGRESSIONAL.

The Work of the Senate and House of Representatives.

THE Committee on Pensions presented a report to the Senate on the 3d inst., recommending the passage over the President's veto of the bill granting a pension to Mary A. Nottage. The report condemns the President for his vetoes of private pension bills, asserting that he acts upon lack of information; that some of his messages are expressed in unjust and unexampled style; and that derision of the committee's labors "can originate only in a wise and noble nature which is misled, or in one that, if informed, sadly needs reconstruction or recreation." The President sent to the Senate his veto of the bill for the relief of Martin L. Bundy. In the veto message the President says: "The claimant, who was a Quartermaster, after the settlement of his accounts was found to be indebted to the Government. Thereupon he put in a claim for forage more than sufficient to offset his indebtedness. There is no suggestion that he had or used any horses, and if he did and failed to make a claim for forage at the time he settled his accounts, then he presents a case of incredible ignorance of his rights or a wonderful lack of that disposition to gain every possible advantage which is usually found among those who deal with the Government." The claim is not allowed on the ground that it would set a precedent which could hardly be ignored, and which, if followed, would furnish another means of attack upon the Treasury quite as effective as many which are now in operation. The Senate, in considering the river and harbor appropriation bill, approved of an item of $1,000,000 toward a thirty-foot channel at the Sandy Hook entrance to New York. The House of Representatives passed a bill appropriating $76,000 to pay damages on account of the overflow of the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers. When the general deficiency bill was under consideration by the House of Representatives on the 5th inst., Mr. Springer stated that the decrease in Federal expenditures during the fiscal year just closed was $22,500,000, according to statements by Treasury officials. An amendment to the general deficiency bill, offered by Mr. Cannon (Ill.), appropriating $22,000 to refund taxes illegally collected from railroad companies on account of alien bond and stockholders, was adopted. A resolution was introduced in the House by Mr. Springer calling on the President for copies of all correspondence between the Government and the Republic of Nicaragua, since 1876, in relation to the construction of an interoceanic canal by way of Lake Nicaragua. The Senate was not in session.

MR. INGALLS, at the request of the Social Purity Alliance of the District of Columbia, introduced three bills in the Senate on the 6th inst. for the protection of women and children in the District. A very large number of petitions gotten up and signed through the exertions of the Knights of Labor, praying for the passage of the bills forfeiting railroad land-grants, were presented. A bill was introduced by Mr. Cockrell to regulate the pay of army and navy officers who refuse or neglect to provide for their families. The Senate spent some time in discussing an item of $150,000 in the river and harbor bill for the purchase of the Sturgeon Bay Ship Canal, but reached no conclusion. The President nominated Fitz John Porter to be a Colonel on the retired list of the army, in accordance with the terms of the act recently passed for his relief. The House, in committee of the whole, reached the end of the general deficiency bill, and reported it back to the House. The President transmitted to the House messages announcing his disapproval of twenty private pension bills. In vetoing the bill granting a pension to Francis Deming, who claims that he contracted blindness, the result of rheumatism incurred in the service, the President says that there seems to be no testimony showing the soldier's condition from the time of his discharge to 1880 a period of fifteen years. The President continues: "I am satisfied that a fair examination of the facts in this case justifies the statement that the bill under consideration can rest only upon the grounds that aid should be furnished to this ex-soldier because he served in the army, and because, a long time thereafter, he became blind, disabled, and dependent. None of us is entitled to credit for extreme tenderness and consideration for those who fought their country's battles; these are sentiments common to all good citizens. They lead to the most benevolent care on the part of the Government and deeds of charity and mercy in private life. The blatant and noisy self-assertion of those who, from motives that may well be suspected, declare themselves above all others the friends of the soldier, can not discredit nor belittle the calm, steady, and affectionate regard of a grateful nation. Legislation has been at the present session of Congress perfected which considerably increases the rate of pension in certain cases. Appropriations have also been made of large sums for the support of national homes where sick, disabled, or needy soldiers are cared for, and within a few days a liberal sum has been appropriated for the enlargement and increased accommodation and convenience of these institutions. All this is no more than should be done. But with all this, and with the blunders of special acts which have been pushed, granting pensions in cases where, for my part, I am willing to confess that sympathy rather than judgment has often led to the discovery of a relation between injury or death and the military service, I am constrained by a sense of public duty to interpose against establishing a principle and setting a precedent which must result in unregulated, partial and unjust gifts of public money under the pretext of indemnifying those who suffered in their means of support as an incident of military service."

IN considering the river and harbor bill, on the 7th inst., the Senate adopted an item appropriating $150,000 to make the Sturgeon Bay Canal free of toll to commerce. A Presidential veto was sent to the Senate of the bill authorizing the construction of railroads through the Indian reservation in Northern Montana. The Speaker laid before the House of Representatives twenty-one pension veto messages from the President. Mr. Jackson, of Pennsylvania, attacked the veto policy of the Executive, who, he said, was not actuated by regard for the worth and merit of private pension bills. Mr. Bragg (Wis.) said that there seemed to be an idea in the House that it was the duty of the President to abdicate his office in favor of a majority of the Committee on Invalid Pensions. Whenever, in the exercise of his constitutional prerogatives, he examined legislation to see whether or not it was provident and wise, it was charged that he had perpetrated an outrage on the American people. He (Mr. Bragg) was glad to find that at last there was a man in the executive chair who had the nerve and courage to place his hand upon legislation when he thought it improper, whether it were pension or railroad legislation. Congress had gone altogether too far in the way of pension legislation. Before the House went further in pensioning the dead-wood of the army it should make some provision for the men who went to the front in 1861. Mr. Browne (Indiana) criticised the action of the President, and invoked God's mercy on a man who had the heart to veto a bill for the relief of the widow of a man who died in the line of duty to his country. His Excellency belonged to that class of men who, during the war, were afraid of nothing but danger. Mr. Cannon (Ill.) read in the vetoes the story that while Cleveland was President there would be no further pension legislation. There were great questions in this country calling for the attention of the executive, yet the President brushed them all aside, and appeared anxious to cater to nobody except that little solid knot that came from the solid South. There he stood, looking through a gimlet-hole with a magnifying glass, hunting for excuses and heaping derision upon the heads of the poor men who lost their health in the service of the country. He assured the gentlemen on the Democratic side that they would have to defend the President's actions before November.

Mr. Matson (Ind.) showed that nearly all the pension legislation of importance had been enacted by Democrats, and that nearly all of these bills had been vetoed by a Republican Commissioner of Pensions years ago.

A FAVORITE project with Peter the Great seems likely to be carried out at last, the Russian authorities having resolved to commence work this year on a canal between the White Sea and the Baltic Sea.

SOME RESULTS OF A PROTECTIVE TARIFF.

The American laborer must be a singularly ungrateful creature and very hard to please. For years we have been laying the whole country under a tax and interrupting commerce with other nations and de[ny]ing [him] s of the natural advantages [of] climates for the professed and [sole] purpose of helping the American laborer. And here is the insatiable fellow striking all over the country for higher wages. Here are cotton spinners who are "protected" by a duty of 70 per cent. striking against the munificent and princely wage of 75 cents a day. Shoemakers and [oth]ers are "protected" by a duty of 35 per cent. are actually crying out for more than $1.10 a day. Coal miners, who have a duty of 20 per cent., object to protection at $1 a day. Workers in lumber mills are protected by a tax of $2 a thousand feet, are avaricious enough to demand more than $1.50 a day and fewer than thirteen hours. In spite of our [pro]tective system and only American system of protection to the laborer, which has done so much to build up happy homes and all the rest of it, there are 50,000 wage workers striking against low wages and oppression. Strange, isn't it?

John Roach, for years and years the typical American protectionist, recently said: "If I were twenty years younger I would build my ships at Pensacola and buy my iron at Birmingham, Ala., and defy John Bull." If Mr. Roach is telling the truth, and there is every reason to believe that he is, here is something worth thinking about. It simply means that iron can be made just as cheaply in Alabama as it can in England. If that is so, why are we taxing every pound of iron brought from abroad and increasing the price, to a corresponding degree, of all the iron we use at home? Why should farmers pay any more for their nails, implements, wire and horseshoes than the cost of the Alabama iron in free and easy competition with the iron of other countries?

Every once in a while somebody who has a special interest in keeping up the war tariff taxation sends out a circular showing how much cheaper commodities are now than they were twenty-tive years ago, before the splendid taxation scheme was thought of. The decrease in cost, it is said, is solely the work of the tariff. If the people are wise, therefore, they will support the system that has made it so much cheaper for them to live. All this has about as much to do with the matter as the wind that blew in 1876. The simple fact remains that we are paying a great deal more for these articles than people are paying in Europe. In other words, we are paying a good deal more for them than we would without a tariff. As long as that is so, all this talk about things being cheaper than they were in 1860 is the greatest nonsense ever uttered.

The last man in the world to favor a protective tariff should be a farmer. Most Western farmers understand this as well as anybody. The tariff cuts the farmer on both sides and doesn't do him the slightest benefit imaginable. It increases the cost of ninety-nine-hundredths of all he has to buy. It makes him pay more for his clothing, lumber, nails, carpets, crockery, hardware, tools, implements and harness. It increases the cost of the transportation of his products to the consumers, and it lessens the demand for his products from abroad.

It is easy enough to say these things; how are we going to prove them? Well, let's look at it in a common-sense way just for a minute. You can buy in England for $12 the suit of clothes which costs you here $22 to $25. You can buy there for $3 the boots that cost you $6 here. You can buy for $15 the sewing machine that costs you $30 here. You can buy for $4 the blankets that cost you $8 to $10 here. You can buy for $12 the set of dishes that cost you $20 here. You can buy for $1 the hat that costs you $3 here. I get these figures from English price lists, and every traveler abroad will confirm them without a moment's hesitation. The only reason in the world why we cannot buy these things as cheaply here as in England is because the tariff steps in and adds to the original cost of these and hundreds of other articles. So much for that.

It costs more to get farmers' produce to market than it ought to, because it costs a great deal more to build a railroad here than it would if it were not for the tariff. It costs $5,000 a mile more to lay track in this country than it cost in Canada to lay the Canadian Pacific track, for the simple reason that rails were admitted free of duty for that road. When we stop to consider that besides rails, all the other materials of railroad construction—spikes, bars, lumber, tools, sheet-iron, wheels, etc., cost a good deal more than they would without a tariff, it is easy enough to see this point. Of course, if it costs more to build the road the transportation charges must be proportionately heavier. And the farmer pays them.

It is also easy enough to see that if we will not trade with other nations other nations will not trade with us. If we won't buy their goods they won't buy ours. As the tariff is designed to prevent our buying abroad, it has the other effect also. Consequently it cuts off a large part of the demand for our farm products that would naturally come to us, since we are the great agricultural country of the world. And that means lower prices for what farmers have to sell.

It is a very plain case for farmers. They are getting the worst of this tariff business at both ends of the line. And we offer a chromo to any one who will show that they are getting the slightest benefit in return for all they suffer.—The Freeman.

How the American Farmer Is Protected.

Extract from an address by Mr. George J. Brine, of the Chicago Board of Trade, before the Evanston Free Trade Club:

"It can be stated as an almost self-evident truth, and one not disputed by any political economist of repute, that the surplus of any commodity determines and fixes the price of the whole. Now, if we take wheat, as one of the most important of the farmer's productions, as an example, we necessarily find that whenever he grows more than enough to supply the home market the surplus must seek a consumer elsewhere. In seeking that market he of necessity goes upon the same basis that every other seller goes to it—that of competition for buyers. The American wheat goes to Liverpool, we will say. What does it meet there? Simply an open, free market, in which the wheat-growers of the world are competing. There the Western farmer finds not only the native grown grain of Great Britain, but that from the valley of the Danube, from the plains of Russia, from the shores of the Nile, from remote India, and the island continent of Australia as well, all of them alike asking a buyer. Where, I ask you, are then the sheltering and fostering tariff laws of this country. Of what avail are they to him in that market, and in the face of those competitors? Where now is the boasted protection his country's laws were made to give against the "pauper labor of the old world?" There he is, confronted on the one hand by the servile labor of Egypt and on the other by the wretched and beggarly toiler of India, whose daily wage is but three pence. There he stands, haggling and bargaining in such company as this for a buyer for his produce. Surely he has a right to call, if anyone has, for protection from such a fate as this. But where are the vaunted tariff laws, and their fostering, protecting care? Three thousand miles behind him—back in New England and the Middle States—protecting his happy countrymen against the "pauper labor of Europe." Has he not stood by those countrymen in the past? Has he not, during all the years of their existence, been regularly and systematically and burdensomely assessed to support them and their unprofitable industries? Has he not, during all those years, produced for them their bread, and furnished it to them at a price determined by world-wide competition? And yet it seems there are those who say in the face of these overwhelming and unanswerable facts that the farmer is protected and benefited by our tariff laws; that these laws create for him a domestic market for his products. Out upon such false reasoning and such unjust treatment of our agricultural population. You have made for him a restricted and a high-priced market as a buyer, while you condemn him to an unrestricted and a competition-ridden market as a seller. You make him support the skilled labor of your workshops against the skilled labor of other countries, while you compel him to meet in the simple and unskilled labor of his calling the common laborers of the world. The one contends only against skill and limited numbers, while he must compete with the cheapest and most abundant form of labor.

"For many years, too, he has suffered from the total loss of the French and German markets for his hog product, an interest next in importance to cotton and breadstuffs. That the prohibitory legislation of these Governments is warranted by the sanitary pretexts upon which it is based has been too often refuted to require further discussion at this time. It is now well understood that these are without foundation. But this inimical legislation may be, and probably is, in retaliation for the restrictions practiced by ourselves with reference to the products of those countries."

Cheap Labor in Europe.

The condition of labor in the thickly populated countries of Europe affords a standing theme of protectionist organs and orators on this side of the water for menacing workingmen with the dangers of tariff reform. An esteemed contemporary much given to this method of argument quotes from the London Times a terrible account of the straits to which labor is reduced in Belgium, and from this attempts for the hundredth time to adduce the argument that free trade, and especially free trade in raw materials, is a curse to any country. The Record is asked whether it favors a policy that would bring the labor of American workingmen to the same level. The question is totally irrelevant to the industrial and social conditions of the two countries.

Nowhere else on the habitable globe is the pressure of population on territory so great as in the little kingdom of Belgium. The number of inhabitants to the square mile in Belgium is 481. In the populated portions of the United States, on the other hand, the number of inhabitants is thirty-two to the square mile. The swarming hive of China has not more than one-fifth of the population of Belgium to the square mile. What excites wonder and admiration is that so many inhabitants can be nourished on so small a territory as Belgium. Were it not for the freedom of trade that offers employment to so vast a multitude of workers and cheaply distributes and exchanges the products of industry such a thing would be impossible. Whatever reforms may be necessary for improving the social condition of the workingmen of Belgium, surely the protective policy is not one of them. Will any protectionist pretend that high duties on manufactured or agricultural products would promote the prosperity of Belgium or increase the comforts of its working people? Would not duties on the raw materials of industry be a serious calamity to that country? The only effect of duties on necessaries of living would be to aggravate the miseries of the industrial situation by diminishing the purchasing power of wages and to lessen the ratio of population by causing widespread starvation.

If low wages and industrial poverty result from free trade our protectionists ought to find abundant supports of their theory in other countries of Europe besides Belgium. In the neighboring commercial country of the Netherlands the pressure of population upon territory is not nearly so great as in Belgium, and its tariff policy is much nearer to free trade. Spain and Italy have both protective tariffs, and there is surely nothing in the industrial condition of those countries to excite the envy of the working masses of Belgium. Nor are the wages paid in protective Germany or Austria such as to induce Belgian workingmen to immigrate to either of these countries. But German and Belgian workingmen are attracted by the higher wages of free trade England.

Nothing better illustrates the absurdity of the pretense that high tariffs cause high wages than the great differences in the rates of wages in the same country under the operation of the same policy. In different portions of Germany there is much disparity in the rates of wages in the same branches of industry. In Chicago the rates of wages are almost uniformly higher than in New York or Philadelphia. If the tariff is what makes high wages, how do its advocates undertake to explain this difference? If high wages depend on one and the same cause the results should be uniform throughout its entire operation. In nearly all the protected industries, so-called, of this country the rates of skilled labor are much lower than in the mechanical occupations that know nothing of the tariff except in the enhanced cost of the commodities which workingmen and their families use. When our tariff mongers explain all these things they will be much better prepared to wrestle with the industrial problem in its relation to the swarming populations of Europe. At least they will not be guilty of the absurdity of attributing to commercial and industrial freedom in Belgium the miseries which this liberal policy does so much to mitigate.—Philadelphia Record.

Protection and Socialism.

At the meeting of the Congregational Union in the Bible House, in New York, Thomas G. Shearman spoke by invitation on "Socialism." Mr. Shearman said he was thoroughly in sympathy with the objects for which earnest Socialists were striving—the amelioration of the working class, and a more even distribution of wealth. The means Socialists had adopted to this end, and most of the theories they were endeavoring to propagate, were, however, in his opinion wrong. Mr. Shearman maintained that nearly every means so far supported by Socialists for the benefit of the masses had only enriched the rich. This, he asserted, had been the result of protection, subsidies, bounty laws, and all legislation of that kind.

Protection and Socialism, he declared, went hand in hand. Socialism was increasing in Germany with the increase in protection. In England there was very little Socialism, and it had been decreasing since 1850. Subsidies also, apart from the fact that they never achieved their object, always enriched a few. Subsidy in this country had always meant bribery and corruption. Mr. Shearman concluded by saying that there were two things necessary to end the Socialistic question. First, the substitution of direct for indirect taxation, and second, the extension of industrial and manual education among the poor by the Government. Education and wages were connected. Wherever education was most advanced wages were highest, as shown by the following examples: In Missouri the number of persons over 21 years of age who could not write in 1880 was 9½ per cent., and the average wages were $17.59. In Iowa the figures were respectively 2½ per cent. and $22.09. The figures for Pennsylvania were 5½ per cent. and $19.82. These Mr. Sherman compared with those for Virginia, where the average wages were $11 and the percentage of inhabitants unable to write 28½.

At the conclusion of the lecture Mr. Shearman was asked if he would oblige the Congregational Union by publishing it in one of the magazines. Mr. Shearman replied that his side of the matter was not exactly the popular one, and he would find difficulty in getting a magazine to publish it. As an instance of how subservient editors of all manner of publications were to their pecuniary interests, Mr. Shearman said that he knew it to be a fact that two years ago, when the New York Tribune was denouncing free trade and free-traders, "thirteen out of fourteen of the Tribune's editors were free-traders, and acknowledged it."—New York Times.

Carlisle Is Right.

Mr. Speaker Carlisle says that the way to improve the condition of labor is to remove the tariff embargo, that excludes the products of American labor from all foreign markets. Mr. Carlisle's observation is so exactly true and sensible that it tends to excite anew the wonder that Mr. Speaker should a second time have placed in the way of tariff reform that incorrigible obstacle, Mr. Samuel J. Randall.

Mr. Randall dissents totally to Mr. Carlisle's plan of bettering the condition of labor. One of the Randallian tuppeny papers in Chicago asserts, with all the wisdom of Bourbonic dogmatism, that removal of the tariff embargo would reduce the wages of "skilled labor of the highest class" in this country to 80 and 85 cents a day, which the knowing dogmatist asserts (untruly) is the price of such labor in "free-trade countries."

If the price of skilled labor in free-trade countries is only 85 cents a day, and in this protectionist country the price is three or four times that rate, what is the natural effect of a tariff embargo that excludes from this country the products of the 85-cent foreign labor, and from all other countries, of course, the products of the higher-priced American labor? The effect that has been seen by everybody in this country since the commencement of our war-tariff and Chinese-wall policy is in the rapid influx of the 85-cent laborers. The tariff embargo that excludes the products of that labor does not exclude the laborers, who have crossed the Atlantic and invaded our high-priced workshops in vast armies annually, until they have augmented the output of our "home industries" far beyond the utmost point of possible "home consumption." Now, a question of some interest to these wage laborers that the cheap organ of Mr. Sam Randall has omitted to consider is this: If we continue our tariff embargo against foreign markets, how many more years of the rapid inflow of 85-cent labor will probably be necessary to bring "skilled labor of the highest class" in this tariff-blessed country down to 85 cents a day?—Chicago Times.

Wage-Workers in Protected Germany.

Consul Warner sends to the State Department from Cologne an interesting document giving the rates of wages and general condition of the laboring classes in protection Germany.

He says he has compiled the report with great care. The wages of a laborer, whether he works in iron or steel manufactories, coal mines, stone quarries, on buildings or railways, range from 47 to 70 cents per day, and if he is a skilled laborer, from 80 to 92 cents per day.

Female labor is only allowed in a limited degree, and is only paid from 24 to 30 cents per day. Working hours are from 6 to 6 in summer and from 7 to 7 in winter. One hour is given for dinner, a half-hour for breakfast, and a half-hour for coffee in the afternoon.

The Government has no power to regulate or interfere with working hours, but it takes care that certain restrictions with regard to the employment of women and children are observed. Rent is $2.85 per month on the average, or one full week's wages. Meals cost 24 cents per day and consist principally of potatoes. They have also peas, beans, vegetables, common pork, and black bread. Occasionally they have dried fish and beef, but more often horse flesh. The laboring classes are poorly clothed as a rule.—Washington dispatch.

The Sacred Tariff Cow.

The heathen who worships his idol is always eager to break it when he finds out its impotency. The young married Hindu wife will invariable feed the sacred cow with bananas and mangoes and other delicacies for the favor of bestowing a son on her. But woe to the cow if the infant is a girl, or not even that. Cows are belaboured daily with bamboo stick in India for such fiascoes.

What the idol and the sacred cow are to the Hindus, the protection tariff has for the last twenty-five years been to the deluded working classes. At last they find out the impotency of their false gods. The tariff cow is still fed with bananas and mangoes. But the bamboo stick is not far off, and woe to the sacred tariff cow.—J. S. Moore, in New York Times.

Take Off the Duty.

Every time the wool-tariff has been tinkered with the sheep-growing industry has been deranged; nobody has made any money on sheep or on woolen goods for years. Take off the duty, get down to bed-rock, and then you can build up the trade in both the raw material and the manufactured article. This is the reasoning of common sense.—Florida Times-Union.

THE so-called protective policy is alleged to be a defense of American labor against badly paid foreign labor. In order to prevent foreign laborers from obtaining any advantage over the American laborers, the American laborer is taxed as high as sixty per cent. on what he uses and wears. After taxing him, the employer of American labor is allowed to export his products, receiving as a drawback the cost of the raw material. In this way the American manufacturer is able to sell his products abroad cheaper than he will sell them at home to his own employes. In this way American refined sugar is sold to the people of Scotland at about half the price at which the American people can buy it in their own country. In other words, the American people, bowing down to the fetich of protection, impose upon themselves a burdensome taxation in order that the people of other countries shall have goods twice as cheap as they themselves can get them. Blinded as they are by this idol worship, many of them resent as a personal insult every inducement to open their eyes to the imposition practiced upon them.—Detroit Free Press.

THE great suffering among the laborers in some parts of the country where protected industries are supposed to most thrive will not have been in vain if it serves, as it ought, as an object lesson of the most impressive sort to teach the laborers the humbuggery of this pauper-labor argument in support of a protective tariff. Well might the consumers of this country say to the protectionists: "You say you can not compete with foreigners because you have not their pauper labor. Well, now you have your pauper labor, why can you not compete." If Europe has any pauper labor worse off than that in some parts of this country, God pity them. If matters go on as they have for a few years past some parts of Pennsylvania will be seen to be, what they long have been in effect, a national poorhouse.—The Taxgatherer.

THE argument that we must have a high protective tariff because we need a large revenue, is one of the weakest which the protectionists use. It is surprising that some protectionists will make use of it. The question of protection has nothing in common with taxation. It would be perfectly possible for us to raise double our present revenue without an iota of protection, and to do it, too, much more economically than we raise our present revenue. A tariff is not necessarily protective. There is no more necessary connection between a tariff and protection than there is between an income tax and protection. The confusion in the minds of many on this point simply shows how successful protectionists have been in concealing real issues by the dust they kick up.—Tax-Gatherer.

UPON subjects concerning which the facts are so complicated, prophecy is seldom little else than foolish, yet we are very much inclined to think that, if the doctrines of protection retain their hold on the people of some sections of this country, twenty years will not pass before we hear the cry for protection within the United States. Certainly, if there be merit or reason in the protection gospel, there is no industry which more needs protection against foreign competition than does the farming industry of New England need protection against the Northwest; the iron industries of Pennsylvania against Alabama; the wool industries of Ohio against the Southwest. Would protection then be the national policy?

A CARTOON in one of the political illustrated papers pictures the direful effects that would follow the policy of free trade. The flood of cheap foreign goods is represented as a tremendous Niagara which is sweeping away in its resistless torrent the mills, factories, banks and farm-houses, while over an awful abyss are tumbling headlong the personifications of capital and labor. It is truly a terrible picture, but the alarm that it might otherwise excite may be prevented, perhaps, by the reflection that foreigners are not going to give their cheap goods away, and that if the country is ever flooded with them it will only be because American consumers find it to their interest to buy them.—Chicago Times.

TO PREVENT foreign merchants from coming to our country, Congress erects a great tariff wall that costs the people of the United States $800,000,000 annually to keep in repair. This they call "encouraging home industry." Then these "statesmen" take $800,000 more from the people to hire these same foreigners to come and trade with us. This they call increasing our foreign commerce. Both cases are robbery pure and simple, but the long-eared public holds open its pockets and licks the hand that steals its substance. Congress, knowing how stupid people are, robs them from both pockets, to keep them in balance.—The Tax-Gatherer.

AT last Mr. Randall's Democratic constituents are turning their backs on him, and he seems likely to reap the reward of his perfidy to his party. There is no doubt that but for him his party would by this time have had the country far on the road to free trade, and would itself have been so good a free-trade party that there would have been no danger of secession from its ranks on that account. He has proudly defied his party and beaten it. Now it seems disposed to defy him and beat him. It ought to do something to turn the laugh on somebody else.—The Million.

IT is said that bad boys fool their old grandmother by taking her religious paper out of its wrapper, when they take it from the postoffice, and placing an illustrated police paper in the wrapper, and the old lady looks over the pictures and thinks the religion we have these days is pretty rough. Boys will be boys.

SUMMER MANIACS.

Several State Conventions Nominate Candidates and Adopt Platforms.

Democrats and Greenbackers Fuse in Iowa—Pennsylvania Republican Convention.

Iowa Democrats.

The Iowa Democratic State Convention, at Des Moines, was temporarily organized, with A. R. McCoy, of Clinton, Chairman, and W. C. Miller, of Buena Vista, Secretary. The convention was in session two days. Nothing was done the first day beyond the appointment of the customary committees. Upon coming together on the second day a permanent organization was speedily effected by the election of the following officers: G. W. Bell, of Hamilton County, President; C. W. Miller, of Bremer; John F. Franly, of Pottowattamie; W. R. Hollingsworth, of Keokuk; J. S. Root, of Floyd; and M. J. Keeley, of Iowa County, Secretaries; Tim O. Walker, of Marshall, Reading Secretary.

The Committee on Resolutions made a report, the substance of which is as follows:

"The Democracy of Iowa announce the following platform of principles: That the clean, pure, and honest administration of Grover Cleveland is a matter of just pride for every American citizen without distinction of party, and we most cordially and heartily approve and applaud the noble, determined, and successful efforts of the President in the interests of good government, and we pledge him our continued support in all such efforts. That the noble and manly efforts of Gladstone in behalf of representative government for Ireland commands our unqualified approval. That we most heartily express our appreciation of the services of all Union soldiers and sailors, and recommend the fullest recognition of their services in defense of our country by ample and liberal pension laws making allowances to all who received injuries or disabilities in the service, and to those dependent upon them. To that end we condemn private bills and special legislation, which favor a few to the detriment of the many. * * * To impose taxes for any other purposes than the raising of the necessary revenue for the support of the Government is unconstitutional and wholly inconsistent with our boasted freedom. We therefore call upon Congress for the immediate revision of the tariff laws to a revenue basis, to the end that every industry and every section may enjoy perfect equality under the law. That we favor the repeal of the present prohibitory law of this State, and the enactment in lieu thereof of a law securing to each county and municipal corporation the right to determine for itself the prohibition or licensing of the sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage, providing by proper legislation for the enforcement of prohibition where prohibition is adopted, and where license is adopted for a license fee of not less than $500, with such legislative restrictions as will promote sobriety and suppress free whisky. We cordially invite all persons believing in the foregoing principles to unite in overthrowing the party in power in this State."

A minority report was offered for a local-option law confined to cities and towns, without limit as to license.

The platform, down to the liquor plank, was adopted, when a lively discussion ensued, concluding with the adoption of the majority report, which declares in favor of local option in counties and cities, and where a license is voted for it shall be not less than $500.

The convention then proceeded to select candidates for State offices. Cato Sells, of Blackhawk County, was nominated by acclamation for Secretary of State, and Paul Guelich, of Burlington, was named for Auditor. Word being received from the Greenback State Convention, sitting in Lewis' Opera House, that they had nominated Daniel Campbell, of Monona County, for Treasurer, and William Theophilus for Clerk of the Supreme Court, the Democratic Convention completed its work by nominating for Attorney General C. H. Mackey, of Keokuk County, and Frank Bradley, of Audubon County, for Supreme Court Reporter, and then adjourned.

Iowa Greenbackers.

The Iowa Greenback Convention was called to order in Lewis' Opera House, Des Moines, by H. S. Wilcox, Chairman of the State Committee. The body was organized without any hitch by the election of the following officers: Chairman, W. H. Robb; Vice Presidents, A. J. Hanna, W. J. Pass, A. S. Busserman, W. J. Strickland, W. H. Weller, B. E. Mann, D. Ramsey, E. H. Gillette, J. E. Dicks, L. B. Gunning, Dr. Armstrong, Nat F. Robe; Reading Secretary, E. Vincent; Assistant Secretaries, H. U. Worster, S. Kirkpatrick. In the absence of Chairman Robb, Vice President Weller presided. The Committee on Conference then reported. They had had some difficulty in dividing up the ticket, especially in the matter of the Auditorship. The ticket was fixed satisfactorily, the Democrats to nominate four, one of whom should be a Knight of Labor, and the Greenbackers two, the latter being the State Treasurer and Clerk of the Supreme Court. And having thus arranged for fusion the committee awaited the decision of the convention. The question was then put to vote, and the report almost unanimously adopted.

Daniel Campbell was nominated for State Treasurer, and William Theophilus for Clerk of the Supreme Court.

Pennsylvania Republicans.

The Republican State Convention, at Harrisburg, was one of the largest ever held in the State. Gen. Wagner, of Philadelphia, presided. A resolution favoring the submission to the people of a constitutional provision prohibiting the manufacture and sale of intoxicants gave rise to much debate, and it was finally referred to the Committee on the Platform. Col. D. H. Hastings nominated James A. Beaver for Governor in an eloquent and eulogistic speech, and the nomination was carried by acclamation. The ticket was then completed as follows: For Lieutenant Governor, William T. Davies; Auditor General, A. Wilson Norris; Secretary of Internal Affairs, T. J. Stewart; Congressman-at-Large, Gen. F. A. Osborne.

The platform adopted by the convention favors the repeal of the pension-limitation law; approves the Cullom interstate commerce bill; demands legislation to prohibit the importation of foreign contract labor; opposes convict labor; declares in favor of laws to prevent the adulteration and counterfeiting of dairy and farm products; denounces the Morrison bill and advocates "a tariff for protection only," and requests the enactment of national and State laws to facilitate the settlement of labor troubles by arbitration, and the fostering of the shipping industry.

New Hampshire Democrats.

Col. Frank G. Noyes, of Nashua, wielded the gavel in the New Hampshire Democratic Convention at Concord. Five hundred and thirty-seven delegates were present. Thomas Cogswell was nominated for Governor on the first ballot.

A resolution expressing sympathy with Mr. Gladstone in his home-rule struggle was unanimously adopted. A resolution was also adopted indorsing the efforts of President Cleveland and Congressman Morrison and Carlisle and their Democratic colleagues to revise the existing tariff laws.

The platform pledges support to Mr. Cleveland's administration, and congratulates him upon its success; declares devotion to the doctrines set forth in the last Democratic national platform; that Federal taxation shall be exclusively for public purposes, and shall not exceed the needs of the Government economically administered, and a readjustment of the tariff is asked for on that basis; demands that the rights of labor be fostered, and all laws prejudicial to labor be repealed; favors the principle of arbitration in the settlement of differences between labor and capital; demands a ten-hour law, and weekly payments in all manufacturing establishments; denounces lawlessness and anarchy, and the importation of cheap serfs; charges the Republican party of New Hampshire with hypocrisy in dealing with the question; declares in favor of a license law; recognizes the patriotic soldiers and sailors of the war of [illegible] and pledges efforts to secure them reward.

THE JOURNAL.

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

CHARLEVOIX, - MICHIGAN.

Democratic State Convention.

The Democratic State Convention to nominate candidates for State officers, and for the transaction of such other business as may come before the convention, will be held in Redmond's Opera House, at the City of Grand Rapids, on Wednesday, August 18, 1886,

AT 11 O'CLOCK A. M.

Each county is entitled to one delegate for each 500 votes cast for Governor at the last general election, and one for every fraction of not less than 250 votes. Every organized county is entitled to at least two delegates, and under the rules adopted a delegate must be a resident of the county he represents.

JOHN J. ENRIGHT, Chairman.
H. F. PENNINGTON, Secretary.

Charlevoix county is entitled to four delegates.

Organize.

Both the democratic and greenback state conventions have been called to meet in Grand Rapids August 18, and that there will be an honorable alliance formed, as has been the case in the past, there is, we think little doubt. In view of this and as preparatory to a successful prosecution of the campaign, all of the forces in opposition to the republican party should begin to organize and get into shape for business. There ought to be one or more democratic and national clubs organized in every town in the county: and not only in this county but in all the counties in this region.

Where it can be done satisfactorily it may be be best to unite in the formation of these clubs; but when it cannot, then let each branch of the opposition perfect an organization of its own. The main thing is to get into shape to work together for the advancement of a common cause.

All understand that the g. o. p. has always been in the ascendency in this part of the State—that they have the means and men at their disposal to prosecute a campaign—and that in fighting the republicans here the opposition has always had to contend against fearful odds. But truth and right will finally prevail over falsehood and wrong, and hence the democrats and nationals of the Grand Traverse region should take courage, organize and gird on their armor and go out to do battle for their principles.

And the outlook is very encouraging; the political skies of Michigan are growing brighter; and the prospect of a complete overthrow of the party of monopoly and high taxation in this state in November next is a certainty if we go into the fight with that earnestness that ought to characterize the efforts of every lover of equal rights and exact justice for all.

The Michigan Club, with its $5 admission fee, is the weapon of our political enemies, and with the money thus obtained they hope to buy votes. We believe they will fail. The great mass of the people will not sell their franchise—they are not in the market, therefore we can go to them and appeal to their judgment and good sense in behalf of our principles with a firm faith that we shall win.—Eagle.

Cleveland and the Pensions.

To understand the special or private pension legislation which certain demagogues are now attempting to make capital out of it is necessary to know that this congress has passed more bills of that kind, twice over than any other, and that many of the proposed beneficiaries are persons whose claims have been rejected by republican commissioners of pensions as well as by General Black, the present incumbent. Of the six hundred and more bills of this description passed this year Mr. Cleveland has vetoed about one hundred. The others have been approved and now are laws.

The bills vetoed may be divided into three classes: First, those placing on the pension rolls persons whose cases are still pending in the bureau and who are likely to get full justice done them there; second, those in favor of persons whose claims have been rejected by the pension bureau as lacking any proof of their worthiness, and third, those of notorious frauds, bounty-jumpers and deserters who by reason of political influence have been able to secure favorable action in congress on claims which would not be considered for a moment in the bureau.

When it is remembered that this species of legislation is apt to be vicious in the majority of cases, and that in many states it is absolutely prohibited by constitutional provisions, the fact that the president has signed at this session about five hundred special pension bills proves that he has given the applicants the benefit of the doubt wherever it has been possible to do so. The reasons assigned in his vetoes are a sufficient warrant for such adverse action as he has taken.

Under the many and very generous pension laws of the country it may be set down as reasonably certain that the great majority of the persons who cannot establish their claim to a pension before the bureau do not deserve such recognition. The pension machinery was not constructed to facilitate the efforts of pretenders to fasten themselves on the treasury, nor is it the province of congress to encourage fraud by specially singling out these rejected claimants and placing them in the company of the deserving recipients of the nation's grateful bounty. Mr. Cleveland's manly stand against this abuse must be as gratifying to old soldiers and honest pensioners as it is to the people at large who hate demagogy and admire manliness and independence in high places.—Chicago Herald.

Paying the Confederate Bonds.

The following from the pen of Hon. John W. Daniel, United States senator-elect from Virginia, may instruct some very timid people, who may honestly entertain a fear that there is a possibility that the confederate bonds may be paid:

"The proposition brought forward for the holders of confederate bonds that this government is bound or ought to pay these bonds, is as palpable and eccentric an absurdity as the frivolous wit of man can invent. In the first place the amendment to the federal constitution forbids it, and that alone disposes of the question. In the second place, the theory of the war was that the confederate securities never had a legal constitutional existence, and that settles them. In the third place, the theory of the war was that the confederate states had no legal existence. The victors in the war would as soon think of reviving the confederacy as of paying its debts, and the men who were confederates are as little disposed as their former foes to pay them. In the fourth place, there is no law, no equity, no principle of honor, and no reason of expediency to suggest that the United States or that anybody should pay the confederate debt The confederate bond—at least such as I have seen—expressed this on their face, being payable at a specified time "after a treaty of peace between the Confederate States and the United States of America." That treaty never took place. The bonds by their terms are not yet due, and will never be due. But, apart from all this, the United States has already made England pay the Alabama claims, based on pretensions that negative the idea that the government will ever pay a debt contracted to fight it. It is an idle waste of time to discuss this question, and minds to which the proposition made is not an arrant absurdity would never understand the arguments presented. Evidently speculators and jobbers are trying to make a turn in confederate bonds, and evidently also only the ignorant and unwary will be caught by such chaff as is thrown before them.

Fraudulent Pensions.

Intelligent soldiers will find no fault with the President's action in vetoing objectionable pension bills. Already during this Congress 500 bills have passed, giving pensions to parties who could not prove their cases before the proper bureau officers. The government should be not only liberal but generous in granting aid to our national defenders, but those soldiers who are entitled to pensions are interested, the same as all of us, in preventing raids upon the treasury to pay bogus and improper claims. The very ability of the government to pay honest pensions may depend upon its care in shutting the door against dishonest ones.—Tecumseh Herald.

Randall's Scheme.

In order to keep up the present tariff, the sole benefit of which occurs to the interest of a few mine owners, Sam Randall would take off the tax on tobacco, a luxury which the tax does not affect in the slightest degree, making this the only country on the face of the globe that does not draw a big revenue from this luxury. It would not cheapen tobacco to any appreciable extent, and would simply put millions into the pockets of tobacco manufacturers. But this is the whole scheme of Randall and other creatures of the monopolists. Next it will be whisky that will be made free; the gang would pawn their immortal souls to serve their masters.

Support the Motion.

One of the most important offices to be filled this fall, indeed, as far as the newspapers are concerned, the most important of all, is that of an Auditor General, and we wish to present for the favorable consideration of the press and people for the place the name of a sterling young democrat, Philip B. Wachtel, of Petoskey.—Cheboygan Democrat.

The Cheboygan Democrat does well in nominating that sterling young democrat, Philip B. Wachtel, of Petoskey, for auditor general. That section of the state that deserves recognition could not be more meritoriously greeted.—Kalamazoo Gazette.

Frank M. Abraham has taken possession of and is now running the United States hotel at Boyne City.

NOTES AND NEWS.

The Cheboygan Democrat closes a paragraph on the extravagance in national financial management as follows: "It would be better for the people of the United States to-day if every dollar of revenue was raised by direct taxation, for then they would watch the men who distribute the money, and they would not pay more than half what they do now for the support of the government. Still it would be impossible to convince the people of the truth of this statement. They prefer to be robbed indirectly and have the money squandered to paying direct taxes."

Is the Allegan Tribune correct when it says: "The protectionist democrats are getting their eyes opened at the duplicity of Cleveland, Manning & Co., and in 1888 will vote solidly for a protectionist republican for president." If the lines on the tarifi reform issue are drawn so tightly in 1888 as to cause protectionist democrats to "vote solidly for a protectionist republican for president" then you will be pretty likely to see tariff reform republicans voting solidly for a tariff reform democrat for president. We truly hope that politics will be so shaped during the next two years that all the friends of equal taxation and commercial liberty will be found battling side by side in the campaign of 1888. In that event, there won't be enough left of the protectionists after the election to know what struck them.—Lansing Journal.

If that part of Michigan known as the Michigan legislature could see the Agricultural College at this season of the year, its beautiful lawn, its well-clad, well fed and intelligent looking students, its thorough-going practical, painstaking faculty, from president down to the superintendent of the farm, its general air of thrift, wholesomeness and usefulness, it would not hesitate an instant in voting the instiution such sums of money as might be consided necessary to carry out thoroughly the broadest anticipations of its inceptors. The Agricultural College, in its entirety, is to-day the handsomest spot in the state; it is the paradise of this beautiful peninsula, and is well worthy of the deepest solicitude of those who have its development and future prosperity in hand.—Lansing Republican.

John Kelly thought Tilden too old and frail to run a second time as president. John Kelly is dead. The stalwart Chandler wrested the presidency from Tilden; Chandler is dead. Grant, it is said, would have arrested and imprisoned Tilden if he had attempted to claim the office he had been elected to. Grant is dead. Hancock was chosen as a more likely man to live through the presidency than Tilden. Hancock is dead. Hendricks seemed to have a long life ahead of him as compared with the man at the head of the ticket. Hendricks is dead. Seymour, McClellan, all the old candidates, are dead. Meanwhile Tilden thinks there is nothing so invigorating as working away before the mast on his yacht.—acksonville Herald.

Muskegon News: There are a number of republican papers in the ninth congressional district who honestly prefer the nomination of some other republican for congress than Cutcheon this fall. Yet they dare not come out and say so, and are afraid of the machine managed by the present incumbent.

Not New Taxes But Fewer Taxes.

It may be tariff revision to select an object of importation from which revenue is derived and put a prohibitory duty upon it; but it is not tax reduction. If the people are not to be benefited by tariff revision they don't want tariff revision. They wish to get rid of taxes instead of having new taxes laid upon them.—Philadelphia Record.

Every seat, and nearly every foot of standing room, was filled at the congregational church Sabbath morning, to listen to the address to boys and girls by J. S. Smithson, and many went away because they could not get seats. The discourse covered those points of christian work easily understood by children, and could not fail to draw the child closer to the church in every respect. The music was furnished by the Sabbath school, with orchestra accompaniment, as announced last week.

Nine times out of ten when society is shocked at the terrible bad taste of some petted darling of aristocracy in marrying a coachmen, hostler, or hired man, it is not the girl's fault at all. She has been so carefully watched that she could not get acquainted with any male biped of her own station, and don't know any better than to freeze on the first thing in pants that comes along. Girls who are allowed to mingle with young men of their own station in life very seldom get mashed on coarse, vulgar men.

Traverse Eagle: The rapidity with which a lie travels is well illustrated by the way the false statement published in the Michigan tradesman of the sale of Hannah, Lay & Co.'s pine lands, and representing it to be but the beginning of the disposal of all the interests of the Company in Traverse City, is traveling about the country. The statement was promptly corrected by both the Eagle and Herald, of this place, but, notwithstanding this, the Tradesman's yarn is still being copied by our exchanges. Even the Charlevoix Sentinel, which ought to know better, copies the article without comment.

The C. & W. M. railroad have made arrangements with Dexter & Noble of Elk Rapids, to run his new iron steamer, "Queen of the Lakes," between Holland and Macatawa. They have been inconvenienced heretofore by not having control of any steamer which they could depend on. The "Queen of the Lakes" is one of the finest excursion steamers on the lakes. Its width is 30 feet and its length is 107 feet. It has a seating capacity of 400 and cost $21,000. Mr. Noble started yesterday from Elk Rapids and will reach Ottawa beach this afternoon. It will be a great improvement on their old arrangement, as they will have entire control of the new steamer.—G. R. Democrat.

Another Pioneer Gone to Rest.

Medad Thompson died July 12th, at 11.30 p. m., at the age of 86 years. 3 months and 20 days.

In 1850 went to Colorado, was there two years. Returned to his home in Iowa, and then removed to Charlevoix, Mich., in 1854, where he has since lived. A Fish Story.

Charlevoix, July 10.—Three "chaps" caught 500 trout up Jordan river last Thursday and a "high blood" from St. Louis, Mo., caught 200 pounds of bass in three hours in a small lake six miles from Charlevoix. This is no fish story.—Grand Rapids Democrat.

A Warning.

Pain is given for the wise purpose of informing us of the presence of danger and disease. Any little excitement of an unusual nature disturbs the balance of the system, the nervous energies are exhausted, and headache and a hundred other disturbances are the result. Many of the miseries of man and womanhood might be cured and prevented were their approach heeded and resisted, having their origin in derangements of the liver and blood, dyspepsia, jaundice, indigestion, costiveness, and other unwholesome conditions. Evils of a diseased nature find a certain cure by the use of Golden Seal Bitters. In this medicine, nature, aided by art, has produced a rare combination of medicinal properties, wisely adapted to the cure of diseases common to mankind. The vitalizing principals embodied in Golden Seal Bitters will assuredly cure the broken down dyspeptic. Sold by Perry Weed and Dr. G. W. Crouter.

LINES TO A FRIEND.

BY MARY F. SCHUPLER.

I know that we shall meet some day, somewhere;
It may be when we both are growing old
And youth has lost its charm—we shall not care,
Our heart's need not have in that time grown cold;
Yes, in some other clime—some other land,
I know that I shall clasp your warm, true hand.

It may be in the spring time, when the earth
Gives kindly welcome to the sun's bright rays,
In springing grass and modest violets,
With robins trilling forth their pure, sweet lays;
I would not hope to meet you in the strife
Of worldly cares which mar the joys of life.

Or we may meet in summer, when the fields
Are rich with golden grain—when blooming flowers
And ripening fruits shed fragrance on the air,
Æolian breezes speed the swift-winged hours;
Our time of meeting may be far away,
But still I know that we shall meet some day.

It may be in the autumn, when the trees
Have changed their airy hues to gold and brown;
When earth, robbed of its verdure, seems to plead
For every faded leaf, slow, fluttering down;
But though the autumn winds may sadly sigh,
We may not meet in sorrow, you and I.

Or we may meet in winter, when the earth
Is robed in fleecy folds of purest white,
With crystal gems on housetop, tree, and tower,
Reflecting beauteous rays of changing light;
We may have reached the winter of our age,
With tear-drops blotting life's close-written page.

Or we may meet in that bright world above,
Beyond death's valley, in that Aidenn where
Lost joys are all regained—loved ones restored,
No restless yearnings—no unanswered prayer;
Ah, yes, dear friend, I know we shall meet there,
And we may meet on earth some day—somewhere.

A PLUCKY GIRL.

BY CAPTAIN JAMES MONTFORD.

"Relate your experience as a prisoner, Colonel," said the worthy's wife, as he declared his inability to furnish a story for that evening.

"You have already heard that, which is no adventure of mine, by the way, or at least I played a very unimportant part."

"It's so long since I heard it that the circumstance has escaped my memory," returned the lady.

The Colonel acquiesced and said:

"It is a pretty story enough; but the heroine did not consider me in the least, I can promise you. Did you never think how seldom an adventure crosses the path of a married man? They are either shot dead, and there is nothing to tell, or——"

"Perhaps the actors keep the story to themselves," I suggested, "for fear of more adventures at home."

"Well, I was a party in the affair, if not a principal, and the matter is as follows:

"There was a young man, whom I will call Frank Tooke, in my regiment. He was the nephew of a farmer dwelling in Missouri near the place where I was located at that time.

"Frank had entered the service without his uncle's consent, and, indeed, against his inclination; for the old gentleman had 'leanings' in the contrary direction.

"His distaste was not so strong, however, but that he invited the story-teller to accompany Frank to the farm-house to tea.

"I refused twice or thrice; but as the farmer continued his solicitations, I at last appointed a day, and accompanied by Frank, rode over to the farmer's house.

"We were well received, and everything done to make the visit pleasant; but as it contains nothing remarkable I shall pass it.

"But one object of my observation was the young woman who displayed so much energy a few hours later.

"She was the daughter of a neighbor, and as I soon supected from several glances I witnessed between Frank and herself, she had been invited by Mr. Tooke's daughters to meet their cousin.

"She was a pretty girl, with dark hair and eyes, bright and good-natured. As I sat alone with Frank for a few minutes just before sundown, he told me all about her, and something that seemed to interest him above the rest—she was his promised wife.

"So far the visit was fair as could be described; but misfortune was gathering, and soon after night set in it descended.

"It was a warm evening, and the windows of the sitting-room, opening out upon a long veranda, had been raised to admit the air.

"We were seated quietly, listening, I believe, to the mistress of Frank's affections while she played a rollicking war tune upon the antiquated organ, when I happened to turn toward the windows, and saw a sight that brought me upon my feet immediately.

"A large, bearded man stood upon the veranda looking into the room. He held a long rifle in his hands, and as I rose presented it at my head.

"'No resistance,' he said, harshly, and stepping in through the window, was followed by half a dozen men.

"All was excitement and alarm. The women screamed, and old Mr. Tooke swore; but it was all of no use.

"I had been warned before coming to the farm house that a detachment of Hildebrand's bushwhackers were lurking in the neighborhood, and I at once concluded that I had fallen into their power.

"They had surrounded the house, and escape was imposible. Frank and myself were soon bound to our chairs at the mercy of the rascals.

"They did not attempt to plunder the house. Perhaps they had some respect for Mr. Tooke's principles, but nothing he could say prevailed upon the fellows to release their prisoners.

"I heard that after the first burst of excitement was over Miss Brady, Frank's betrothed, seemed to become strangely composed.

"She whispered a few words in the ear of Mr. Tooke, and then left the room.

"The old man came up to the leader of the gang and invited him to partake of a cold collation and some liquor he had that day procured.

"This offer was accepted at once, and the outlaws were very merry for half an hour—so long as the liquor lasted—but they were careful to have a guard upon us, and no opportunity presented itself for our escape.

"At last they prepared to leave the house, and we were led into the yard and mounted upon a pair of poor horses behind two powerful ruffians.

"The band rode off at a good pace, which was kept up until we arrived at a thick wood upon the bank of a river, five miles from Mr. Tooke's residence.

"This seemed to be the rendezvous of the gang, for fires were smoldering and a few camp utensils were scattered about upon the ground.

"Dismounting, the horses were picketed, and the marauders prepared to turn in for the night.

"Blankets were furnished us, but we were not in a condition to court sleep with any success.

"Mercy was an article to be expected from the gang only so long as it suited their inclinations; they were liable to drag us to execution at the least alarm.

"Guards were set around the camp, and soon all was quiet.

"An hour or more dragged away. You may imagine how pleasant I felt with the prospect of meeting a miserable death in the morning.

"Disgrace was certain at least, for I would be carried away into the mountains, far off from my command. The prospect of release was small, for there was no exchange of prisoners with the guerrilla band.

"But suddenly I heard a slight noise at my side. We lay at the foot of a tree, wrapped in our blankets, side by side. By the smoldering light of the fire I saw a hand appear from behind the tree.

"It rested upon Frank's shoulder, while a voice said:

"'Be quiet—help is near.'

"The young fellow started violently, his lips parted, and I feared he would alarm the foes.

"But he choked back his astonishment, and soon recognized the speaker as Miss Brady.

"'Are your hands free?' she asked in a whisper.

"'No,' returned Frank in the same tone.

"She moved cautiously forward and severed the bands. I was soon afterward released.

"'Where is the sentinel?' I asked, still lying in the same position, 'and tell us how you came here, that we may know how to proceed.'

"'The fellow is upon the other side of the camp, upon the ground; I believe he is asleep.'

"'But who is with you?' asked Frank; 'you did not come alone.'

"'A negro servant is all. I have horses, though; you must slip away.'

"We rose up carefully from the ground, and slipped away after Miss Brady, who led the way toward the horses.

"As we reached the place where they stood, the young woman gave an exclamation of startled surprise, and turned back quickly.

"'There's the sentinel,' she whispered.

"Looking forward, I saw the shadow of a tall man but a few feet distant.

"He was coming directly toward us, and, as his eyes were fastened upan me, I knew my presence had been discovered.

"Determined to resist recapture, I moved forward.

"He mistook me for one of his comrades probably, for he came directly up to me without a word.

"I knew that I would be recognized immediately, and resolved to take advantage of the man's ignorance of my intent.

"As he came within reach I leaped upon him and seized his throat.

"He gave a yell of surprise and fear; but Frank came to my assistance and the ruffian was soon silent.

"But his yell had aroused the camp, and we heard the outlaws run to their weapons and answer the sentinel with wild cries.

"'Come on,' cried Miss Brady, running forward toward the point where the horses were concealed.

"We soon came upon a negro who held three horses, and an instant later were in the saddle.

"As we galloped out of the woods the bushwhackers were at our heels.

"The horses we rode were poor, and, as one was double loaded, escape would have been impossible had it not been for the fortunate arrival of a posse of soldiers from the camp.

"The marauders at once ran off at the appearance of re-enforcements, and we saw them no more.

"Half an hour later we reached Mr. Tooke's farmhouse, when Miss Brady gave the following account of her plan:

"When she saw her lover captured by the guerrillas, she had hurried to the negro quarters, and dispatched a boy to the camp for aid.

"This was a good move, as the plunderers would not have been easily discovered; but the girl was plucky; and as she saw the men preparing to quit the place with their prisoners, she, with the aid of a negro, equipped the steeds, and followed upon the trail.

"The remainder had been accomplished with ease; for the gang expected nothing of the sort, and were off their guard.

"But it is not every young woman nowadays that would display so much resolution and courage."—Chicago Ledger.

The City of Los Angeles.

The city of Los Angeles, the commercial center and largest municipality of Southern California, is a curiosity; or, rather, it is made up of numerous curiosities, such as are not found in any portion of the United States but the Pacific coast. The city contains a population of fully 35,000 persons, and the number is steadily increasing. This number includes about 5,000 Chinamen, nearly all of whom live in that portion of the city known as Chinatown. Their habitations (I can hardly call them houses) are in a cluster, near the center of the corporate limits, but north of the business center. Their abodes, shops, stores, costumes, habits, etc., are as unlike those of the American people as can well be imagined; and the visitor who gets inside of these quarters and comes in contact with the curious things to be seen and heard, finds it difficult to realize that he is not in China instead of the United States. My own observations in Chinatown will form a portion of a future sketch.

The population of the city also includes a liberal sprinkling of Mexicans, most of whom lived here long before the town grew to be anything more than an old-fashioned, uncouth, and almost unknown trading post and ranchmen's headquarters. These, like the other denizens of the now thriving city, are, as a rule, quiet, orderly, well-behaved people. In fact, I have never been in any city of equal size where there was less drunkenness, rowdyism, or peace-disturbing element of any kind than Los Angeles.

The location of the city is as beautiful and picturesque as one could wish to see. It is in the richest portion of the Los Angeles Valley, with the Pacific Ocean on the west and south, distant sixteen to twenty miles. From the grand old ocean come cool, gentle, and refreshing breezes all through the summer months, when they are most needed. These breezes come as regularly as the days, usually rising about ten or eleven o'clock in the morning and continuing till evening. Thus is the intense heat of the sun at mid-day made tolerable, and the nights are so cool that sleeping under at least one blanket is a luxury which everybody can enjoy. I never slept so soundly and restfully anywhere else, in all my peregrinations, as I do near the Pacific coast with the glorious sea-breezes fanning me all night long.

On the west and north are the Sierra Madre and the San Bernardino Mountains and their foothills. These elevations present an almost unlimited variety of shapes and colors. The nearest foothills are within a mile of the city limits, and some of the higher peaks are not more than three or four miles further away. In the after part of the day, when the sun is dipping down into the ocean, the hills and mountains appear to be much nearer than they really are, and loom up like a grand wall of granite, as if built on purpose to shield the city from the vast world lying to the east and north of it. Some of these foothills reach around into what are now residence portions of the town, and the view to be had from any one of these elevations is picturesque and lovely beyond description. In all my travels I have never before, up to the hour of this writing, beheld anything of the kind so beautiful.

The business men and property owners of Southern California are both lucky and shrewd. They are lucky in being in a country whose climate is superb, pleasant, salubrious, and beautiful, almost beyond the power of exaggeration. They are shrewd enough to take advantage of this fact and utilize it for business purposes.

The Pacific coast region has a monopoly of about all the good, healthful, reliable, all-the-year-round climate to be found in the United States, and the Californians know it. They know, also, that the people of the regions east of the Rocky Mountains are every year becoming more dissatisfied with the cold and blizzards of winter and the heat, cyclones, thunderstorms and sudden changes of spring and summer. Hence they are turning their thoughts and faces toward the Pacific coast as a region where such objectionable meteorological conditions are unknown. They are flocking to this favored region by hundreds and thousands, some intending to remain only a portion of the year, and many others with a purpose to make investments and establish homes for themselves and families. All these new comers are heartily welcomed by residents of the country—especially by real-estate agents, hotel-keepers, and proprietors of "rooms to let." Thus does the man who is already established on the ground profit by fresh arrivals. A constant stream of immigration keeps business lively, and there is little or no complaint of "dull times" in California. Visitors and new settlers must be cared for; they want accommodations, they need homes, they are liable to purchase land or town lots; and in a variety of ways their wants must be catered to. Hence the business man or property owner smiles a sweet, happy, velvet-trimmed smile whenever he learns that a new invoice of strangers has arrived from the East.—Ralph E. Hoyt.

Wages and Living in Egypt.

D. N. Richardson, editor of the Davenport Democrat, writes from Cairo, Egypt, relative to the pay and living of the laboring class in that region. It may be interesting here, when there is just at this time so much uneasiness among the laboring classes:

All the embankments made to hold the Nile in check, all railroad fills—and these great works are myriad—are done with human hands, children and coolies packing the dirt in little baskets on their heads. Horses and carts might be used, but then what would the low-class people do to get their 10 to 15 cents a day, which goes to buy their daily bread and drilling shirt? To clothe these people costs a dollar or two a year. To feed them, say 5 cents, perhaps, a day—but that is rather high. The stuff they eat—some greens, a very little coarse bread, some sugarcane to chew, make up the measure of their daily food.

You think this state of things severe, but have you never thought in your great land of peace and plenty that the time will come when America will be over-populated, when wages will fall off, and land get very dear, and people will fare no better than these I'm telling of? To be as densely populated as this land is, Iowa should have 720,000,000 of people, instead of the 1,750,000 that she now has. Figure on that awhile and you will find no space for wages beyond what is paid here; nothing but huts to live in and the cheapest, coarsest sort of food.

Too Much Hard Work.

If anybody doubts that farmers have to work hard to get ahead, let him look at the number of broken-down, dyspeptic farmers' wives, barely turned of forty, that you see at State and county fairs. The farmer cannot hide his land or his stock—it is inevitably taxed; and it is a smart, industrious, sober, energetic farmer that can make his farm pay 6 per cent. in New England. Hundreds of sturdy farmers in Vermont make less than this off their farms; and too many of them are tortured to death by the effort to pay for a farm they have bought, with a mortgage attached. If it be true that the farming class contributes largely to the insane, it is not because they are brooders over the little, mean, local woes of life; it is because, as a class, they work very hard, both men and women; because they have to carry more anxieties and troubles, with less time for relaxation, than the city worker of the same grade of intelligence.—Popular Science News.

The Future of Society.

It has chanced to the writer to read recently a number of memoirs, biographies, and sketches, all intended to describe "society" in its technical sense—the upper society, that is, of great capitals, the large group of more or less idle persons which in every European country has drawn together round the center of affairs, be it court, parliament, or conspicuous person, has called itself and thought itself "the world," has given laws to manners and greatly influenced morals, and in all ages has attracted to itself for no obvious reason an exceptional attention and regard. It is not an interesting study, except for an object, and one is soon startled to see how little variety it presents; but it is impossible to read such accounts without noticing that "society," in its limited sense, though without demonstrable raison d'etre, is apparently indestructible, or wondering whether, if indestructible, as time advances, grows worse or better. The closer you study European history the more certain are you to find a limited yet large circle which surrounds the center of power, which claims for itself most of the enjoyments of life and secures them, which the millions around regard with admiration, or envy, occasionally savage hatred, but which itself does little or nothing to draw to itself that exceptional attention. It simply is, and continues to be, floating at the top, apparently without effort, and though rapidly fluctuating in its components, still marked by the presence of its constituents, such as the great families, which hardly change. It is always frivolous, always attentive to ceremony, always more or less vicious, and always in want of fresh supplies of cash, which it wastes profusely; yet it does not pass away. You find it as powerful round Charles the Bold, or Philip II., or Henri Quatre, as around Louis XV., or Napoleon III.; as marked in the time of Charles II., as of Queen Victoria; and allowing the difference of manners, always showing the same characteristics. All within it are seeking distraction; all are self-willed and in a way lawless, yet without independence; and all, as a body, seek money.

The satirists of to-day who describe Berlin, Vienna, Paris and London, all notice the money greed of "society," the intrusion into it because they bring money of vulgar Jews, the taint of jobbing which sticks to some of its real and most of its factitious eminencies; but all that is very old. Legacy-hunting was a trade with the Roman aristocracy; society in the middle ages hungered for grants of land, heiresses' appanages, and court pensions; the grand society of Louis XIV. courted farmers-general as the little society of M. Grevy courts German and Levantine Jews, and contracts were competed for by courtiers two hundred years ago, as "concessions" and "early information" are now. There is no change in objects, and as to methods there is probably an improvement. Cruelty has been struck out of the list of permissible detractions; sexual vice, if still a motive power, is far less cynically coarse; luxury has got itself a varnish of refinement from art, which is sometimes genuine; and idleness, though still dominant, is broken by a quantity of thin but harmless intellectual interests. Whatever the change, however, "society" has lasted on. It has survived all political events. It emerged smiling, interesting, and corrupt from the cataclysm of the French Revolution, which for one short hour did completely submerge it; it remains unaffected by the slow decay of the prestige of birth; and we see no sign that it is seriously threatened by the progress of democracy. National poverty, one would think, would weaken it; but it never was more conspicuous than under the Directory, when nobody had anything; and it was rampant in Berlin when, after the French invasion, fortunes were not, and £100 a year was a salary coveted by great persons.

Will "society" ever get better? History does not suggest hope, for even religious revivals have only touched it for a moment; misfortunes have never sobered it, as witness the history of the French emigres and nobles, and the progress of intelligence has made but its amusements a little more varied. Indeed, if we were to calculate closely, a probability would become visible that "society" might grow a little worse. It attracts wealth more than ever. It grows more skeptical than it did. It is becoming cynical under the microscope to which it is exposed, its members feeling that if they are to enjoy at all they must disregard opinion, and it is deriving from the progress of democracy a new and evil strength.—The Spectator.

The Decollete in Days of Old.

All the papers at the present are talking about the decollete dress. The fact is the square-neck toilet of to-day is nothing compared with former fashions. The corsage since 1200 A. D., has been periodically rising and falling. In the fifteenth century Agnes Sorel is said to have worn costly gowns with trains one-third longer than any princess in the kingdom, and her "bosom bare to the waist." It was the custom "when Madison was President" for the belles to dress with similar freedom.—Memphis Times.

THERE is a man residing in Rondout who is very particular about the daily observance of family worship. His wife is a thoroughly good woman, but her religion is of a practical nature. She thinks there is a time for everything—family worship included—but that time, to her way of thinking, is not when a savory breakfast is all ready to be placed on the table. One morning when her husband's prayer was longer drawn out than usual, a suspicious smell of overdone biscuit was wafted slowly but surely toward her olfactory organs. She wriggled and twisted and thought of her biscuits, and at last, when the husband started off afresh on a new track, to which there seemed no end, she startled the good man by saying: "Lord! DID HE EVER TALK TO A BOSTON GIRL?

He had studied every lexicon from ancient Medo to Mexican,
Knew Assyrian, Sanscrit, Greek;
Knew the shape of sword and sandal of the Visigoth and Vandal,
And the old Etruscan features and physique.
He could write a song or sermon in old Celt or Ancient German,
And sing Italian songs and roundelays,
Describe Tiglath-Pilezer, the herbivorous Nebuchadnezzar,
And all the kings and queens of olden days.
He knew Nimrod, Noah, Cyrus, and the monarchs of Epirus,
And gave scholarly descriptions of their deeds;
He could lend an added splendor to the ancient witch of Endor,
And describe the early monarchs of the Swedes.
But when he turned to Russian, he reeled with the concussion
Of a word that parched and paralyzed and stung,
For Ivan - Adamowsi - Shanki - Ranoff - Peter-Sqnoskie
Completely tied and tangled up his tongue.

They Sympathized with Each Other.

The small boy had just taken a trip across his mother's lap, and as he came out of the house he gave indications that the passage had been a stormy one.

"Hello, Tommie," said his father, meeting him at the door. "What's the matter?"

"Mother," he replied, sententiously.

"So?" queried the father, who seemed to understand the case.

"Yep; trying to get blood out of a turn up, I guess; feels that way, anyhow."

The father shook hands sympathetically with his son and heir and then posted.—Washington Critic.

IF we are content to do or avoid certain things merely because we are compelled to do so; if we secretly wish that the constraint were removed so that we could bound back into opposite courses; if our hearts refuse their allegiance to what our hands seem forced to do—then we may be sure we are not preparing for the law of liberty which awaits all who are able to value it. Good laws and intelligent obedience are the porch and entrance through which we must pass to dwell in the larger and freer courts of liberty, where a beautiful, loving loyalty will hold us closer to the right and the good than all penalties, or terrors, or restraints.

The Country Editor.

The lot of the country editor is not a happy one. He has to submit to many forms of oppression and injustice that his metropolitan brother is unacquainted with. A village grocer will enter the publication office with a patronizing air, as though he owned the village and held a mortgage on two or three more, and orders the insertion of a two-inch advertisement, worth about a dollar, which he pays—next year, if he is dunned often enough. The man of commerce will then casually mention in a half-column special notice upon editorial page, calling attention to merits of his stock of dried codfish bermuda onions, would be accepted he pays the enormous sum of 00.

He goes to the strawberry festival, and for a bite of sponge cake, a mouthful of strawberries and a glass of feeble lemonade he is expected to announce in his next issue, in glaring head-lines, "A Notable Event!—A Congregation of Talent, Wit, Wealth and Beauty!" As a rule, this class are his severest critics, and seldom subscribe for his paper if they can borrow it of their poorer neighbors who pay for it.

He goes to the circus, gazes upon the sacred steer and stuffed monkey, exchanges smiles with the hyena, watches the gyrations of the trick mule, listens to the copyrighted jokes of the clown, and has his pockets picked of the $4 oreide watch won at a raffle for the benefit of the parson.

In the lecture room he is a wearied listener to the shabby, long-haired professor who lectures upon "The Cucumber, and the relation it bears to the Colic," or a long and elaborate essay upon the "Extermination of Bed Bugs."

He is pestered by a large class of writers whose contributions smack of nothing but the writer's lack of brains. This class is usually composed of those men who, when told that their sketches are declined, coolly adjust their single-barreled eye-glasses and exclaim, "But, bigod, sir, I have been to college, you know!" The poor fools do not know that the best of all schools in which to acquire a thorough journalistic education is the printing office. Most of the great editors of the day can go to the case and "rattle up" a stickful as quickly and well as any of the boys.

Amateur printers borrow and never return his type, and a thousand other things occur to make life as burdensome to him as that of the man who pays $1,000 alimony per year to his red-haired, pug-nosed and freckle-faced sometime wife. He dines not upon ox-tail soup and champaingе, but is content with pigs' rump and cabbage which he washes down with Budweiser beer occasionally.

The editor's day of triumph is when he writes the obituary of one of his tormentors, and he celebrates it in a befitting manner. Immediately after placing the copy in the hands of a compositor he goes out. Soon afterward he is seen on the street, his heels occasionally kissing the back of his neck as he tries to forge ahead. When he reaches the office the men have gone to dinner. He sits down and broods over his troubles and wishes that he were dead. Ah, well! The lead butchers return to work; they see a figure lying upon the floor. The lift it and tenderly place it in the lye trough; he is cold and dead—drunk.

Yes, an obituary means something to a country editor. He lives like a ring-tailed moke and lies like a spotted jehosophat, dear, indulgent, liver-lipped reader.—Ca'amity Sam, in Through Mail.

"Excuse me, Colonel, but I would like to inquire how you came by such an unusually large wad of wealth!"

"Sir!" replied the moneyed man, "I am a member of the Territorial Legislature."

Why Is It

That rheumatism and neuralgia are so prevalent? This question has not been satisfactorily answered, but it is certain that these diseases are not only the most painful but among the most common, and some member of nearly every family in the land is the victim of one of these dread tormentors. Ladies seem to be peculiarly liable to neuralgic attacks, which, in the form of neuralgic headache, pain in the back, or nervous pains, are of constant occurrence, particularly at this season of the year. Not until the discovery of Athlophoros had any remedy been found for either rheumatism, neuralgia or nervous headache, and they were generally conceded to be incurable, but Athlophoros has been proved to be not only a certain cure for these diseases, in all their varied forms, but a safe remedy. If in the use of Athlophoros, the bowels are kept freely open, its success is certain, and to aid this, Athlophoros Pills are recommended, which, while providing the necessary cathartic, will be found to be a valuable aid to the action of the medicine. Athlophoros is no new experiment; it has been thoroughly tested, and has proved its wonderful efficacy.

The Athlophoros Pills were originally prepared as a remedy for use in connection with Athlophoros, for rheumatism and neuralgia and kindred complaints. Used in connection with that remedy, they are a certain cure for either of these very common and distressing diseases. They have also been found to be an invaluable remedy for many other complaints, in fact for any and all diseases arising from vitiated blood or general debility. They are especially valuable for nervous debility, blood poisoning, dyspepsia, distress after eating, headache, constipation, loss of appetite, and all stomach or liver troubles. For diseases of women they are invaluable. These pills are perfectly harmless, and may be safely used by adults or children.

Every druggist should keep Athlophoros and Athlophoros Pills, but where they cannot be bought of the druggist the Athlophoros Co., 112 Wall St., New York, will send either (carriage paid) on receipt of regular price, which is $1.00 per bottle for Athlophoros and 50c. for Pills.

Saved by a Dog.

A paper called The Age tells how in Birmingham, England, a child's life was saved by a Newfoundland dog. A little two-year-old girl, the daughter of the train-master at the railroad depot, is very fond of her father's Newfoundland dog, an affection which the animal is evidently aware of and reciprocates by constant devotion. The two are playmates, and the attachment between them is most interesting. A few days ago the dog was observed to be acting strangely. He went from one room to another until he found the mother of the child, when he rubbed himself against her hand and pulled at her dress. The lady took no notice of him, and the dog persisted in his efforts to draw her toward the door. "Go away" said the lady, "go and find Nellie." The dog went away whining. A few minutes afterward the mother went to look for her little daughter, and found her lying asleep so close to a large fire that her clothes were scorched. They would have blazed had it not been for the dog, who had crouched down between her and the fire, taking care to protect her well. Marks on the child's clothing showed that the dog had tried to drag her out of danger. When he failed he interposed his own body, and the mother found him in that position whining, while the hair was being singed from his back. The child was still sleeping peacefully. If a dog, without any soul, can be so loving and self-sacrificing, what should we expect from little children who have been trained in the Sunday-school and at home?—Anon.

The Physiology of the Liver.

The liver is the largest secreting organ in the human body, and the bile which it secretes is more liable to vitiation and misdirection from its proper channels than any other of the animal fluids. Luckily for the bilious, however, there is an unfailing source of relief from liver complaint, namely, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, a medicine which for over a quarter of a century has been achieving thorough cures of the above-mentioned ailments, fever and ague, dyspepsia, bowel complaints, rheumatic and kidney affection, and disorders involving loss of nervous vigor. It is, moreover, a preventive of malarial disease, and affords protection to thousands of persons residing in districts of country where that dire scourge is prevalent. As a remedy adapted to the medicinal requirements of families, it is supremely desirable, and as a means of fortifying a debilitated system, it is thoroughly to be depended upon.

Ruskin as a Snubber.

Mr. Ruskin certainly cannot be accused of treating his friends and correspondents very graciously. He has written to inform them that he must decline correspondence in the spring, as he prefers spending such days as may be spared to him in the fields instead of at his desk. If I were one of those "friends and correspondents," I should, by all means, allow him to enjoy his "rest" to the full, and, at the same time, not only pardon his declining correspondence in the spring, but would allow him to take the same course in the summer, autumn, and winter. If the people will fawn and cringe to such "illustrious" egotists, they cannot expect to be pited when they receive an occasional disagreeable snub.—London Truth.

Remarkable Escape.

John Kuhn, of Lafayette, Ind., had a very narrow escape from death. This is his own story: "One year ago I was in the last stages of Consumption. Our best physicians gave my case up. I finally got so low that our doctor said I could not live twenty-four hours. My friend then purchased a bottle of DR. WM. HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS, which benefited me. I continued until I am now in perfect health, having used no other medicine."

A Washington Crank.

One of the characters of Washington is a young fellow who pads his clothing so as to make him seem to be nearly twice as large as he is. His clothes are always neat, but as he wears them he looks more like a stuffed man than a real one. He wears a pair of boots with heels fully four inches high. His coat sleeves are so long that they cover the tips of his fingers, and even beyond that he has a pair of enormous cuffs. This young man is the son of wealthy parents, and is generally regarded as being a trifle daft. One of his peculiarities is a love for his own figure. He thinks he is the handsomest man alive. He rents an office in an up-town building to which no one save only a favored few are admitted. This room he has arranged so that the walls and ceiling are entirely covered with mirrors. Strange stories are told of the young man's actions in this apartment. Is is said he will remain there for hours admiring himself as reflected in the glass, all the while cutting up the most extraordinary antics. On the street he never looks to the right nor to the left. He never speaks to any one unless first addressed. Several times he has been guyed by young fellows who thought they would have a lark at his expense. In each and every instance they have been soundly thrashed, for he is one of the most expert and scientific sparrers in the city. This man is one of Washington's most notable oddities.—Philadelphia Call.

Dr. Pierce's "Favorite Prescription" is not extolled as a "cure-all," but admirably fulfills a singleness of purpose, being a most potent specific in those chronic weaknesses peculiar to women.

THE wealth of our language is shown by the fact that "hang it up" and "chalk it down" mean precisely the same thing.

AS A hair dressing, Hall's Hair Renewer has no equal. Ask your druggist for it.

Tobacco and Self-Interest.

BY PRESIDENT JOHN BASCOM, D. D., LL. D.

(Concluded).

It is an unsocial habit. In a limited way, in the form of smoking, it is social; but even then it is narrowly elective of those of like habits, and comes in to reduce the mental tone and straiten the circle of feeling. The indulgence, as more or less offensive, repels many, and the persons repelled are those of a more refined and inspiring temper. The habit is exclusive and narrow in its social and physical relations.

The use of tobacco puts a serious obstacle in the way of the success of a young man. There is no employment to which it recommends him; there are many employments in connection with which it is a formidable or a fatal difficulty. The use of tobacco is rarely, indeed, a predisposing term in favor of a young man with anybody, while in many cases, even with those who themselves use it, its use is a decisive objection, when any position of delicate trust is under consideration. It lowers, both directly and by association, in very many minds, the sense of soundness and strength which they wish to connect with a young man whom they are to encounter constantly in important relations.

Rarely, indeed, would any man, himself addicted to a temperate use of tobacco, recommend the habit as a wise and grateful one to a young man in whom he was interested. How many fathers would give this counsel to sons? How very many, on the other hand, out of their own experience, would give with great urgency the opposite advice? A man of good judgment, having reached mature years without the habit, very rarely takes it up. It is fastened on boys and young men in that period of crudeness and greenness in which they are mistaking the vices of their elders for their virtues, their errors for their excellences. A boy once gotten beyond this unripe age, so succulent of moral malaria, without the habit, finds nothing in it to appeal to his growing judgment and experience.

The expense of this habit is an important and uncompensated burden on any young man. A wise economy is a universal condition of success. Here is an economy large enough to be in itself of considerable importance; one which in no way interferes with progress and self-improvement; and one which tends to remove the temptations to indolence and wastefulness in many directions.

The funds which a young man addicted to the use of tobacco devotes to this end, are quite sufficient—if he is without wealth—to reduce seriously his chances of success in business; while this form of expenditure will often anticipate for him very desirable outlays for social and intellectual improvement. He often chooses between this one habit, with its unfavorable associations, and a large variety of truly valuable attainments to be won at a much lighter rate.

With working-men, this habit is especially unfortunate, as narrowing narrow means; making more gross, gross tendencies; reducing ambition, and consuming on personal indulgences the resources of the entire household. If an angel of hope and prosperity shall ever descend on the homes of the poor, one of the first things she will drive out will be tobacco, which deadens all the incentives of life, and consumes its resources in utter waste. We certainly do not envy the poor their pleasures, we only regret that they are of so unproductive a character.—University of Wisconsin.

Chronicles from Wilson.

It came to pass in the days of Grover, the king, in the second year of his reign that a scribe thought of the doings of the citizens of Wilson, and as he thought thereof, resolved to indite them for the edification of the inhabitants thereof, also for their children, yea, even their children's children.

It so happened in the month called June a man whose surname was called Hudkins being the supervisor of said province said unto his carpenters and builders: let us build a barn of great proportions, so the sound of the axe and the hammer was heard through the wilderness. So when their work was finished, he called together his kinsfolk and acquaintances to the number of fourscore or more so that the building was fitly framed together; so they did eat, drink, and was merry, for a barn of goodly proportions was raised.

Also, one Healey, of the same province has a fine building for the stabling of his kine, and for the storing of his grain, with a gigantic cock surmounting it which shows whether the wind lieth to the north-east or south-west.

And it was so that in the month called July, on the 17th day of the month, that one Shepherd, a citizen of this province, who has been sojourning in the city called Traverse for many weeks for the restoration of mind and body, has returned in good health, and was warmly greeted by his kinsfolk, and acquaintances, his wife and little ones.

It came to pass on the sixth day of the week, that many of the friends of one Smith, did gather together at his house and made the night merry with music and dancing.

And it was so that when one of the young men did see fit to take unto himself a wife that his acquaintances did gather together with horns and instruments of music (?) to greet him, but after the assembly was gathered, they looked for the bridegroom, and lo, he was not there, for he and the bride had gone, they knew not whither, so they returned home with saddened hearts.

Also in this province, it so happened that one widow woman did suppose she saw her husband, who was gone away or deceased (?) and when she saw the apparition she did run in the wilderness until she became exhausted; her robes being torn and her sandals become rags on her feet, but it was not him or his ghost.

One man named Vance who built a saw-mill here last year is now sawing out lumber and hieing it away to the village called East Jordan. Also one Empey, of the latter place is getting out much bark in this region which he is sending by boat to far off lands. EZRA, THE SCRIBE.

East Jordan.

The board of directors of the Charlevoix county agricultural society will hold a meeting at the town hall in East Jordan on Friday next, at one p. m., for the purpose of completing arrangements for their annual exhibition. It is desirous that a full board be present. The members of the board are as follows, and the time for which they are elected:

For three years,—Robert Trimble, Norwood; Nathan L. Cash, Eveline; Joseph R. Dixon, Charlevoix; Alonzo J. Stroud, Evangeline.

For two years,—Wm. H. Healey, South Arm; Wm. F. Empey, South Arm; Joseph C. Glenn, South Arm; Wm. Mears, Boyne Valley.

For one year,—Hiram B. Hipp, South Arm; Orlando Blair, South Arm; Marion Hudkins, Wilson; John E. Darrah, Melrose.

President, John Nicholls, Charlevoix; Secretary, Jas. H. Stone, East Jordan; Treasurer, James B. Palmiter, East Jordan.

On Monday evening last a meeting was held for the purpose of organizing a driving park association. The officers elected were M. M. Burnham, president; and Jas. H. Stone, secretary. The meeting adjourned to meet again, on Thursday evening next at the Jordan River house, to complete the organization. It will be a stock company. Grounds have been selected about half a mile south from the postoffice, and steps will be at once taken to grade and put a track in good order, and inducements will be offered for the agricultural society to hold their annual exhibition on the grounds. A good quantity of clay is near at hand with which to make an excellent track which will for the present be made a half mile track.

An Ugly City.

San Francisco is probably the ugliest city in the union, despite her beautiful surroundings, her ideal situation, her ravishing water view. Nature has supplied her with charms galore, but on her face the deforming hand of man has left heavy, hideous marks. Her architecture is a nightmare of gray and wooden horrors; her houses lack both paint and dignity and are huddled together, separated by the omnipresent, ultra-ugly, all-pervading fence. A tall, wooden fence has its obvious use in rural districts, where it protects the grounds and gardens of the residents from the unwelcome incursions of roving cattle, but it is many a year since kine and swine have been permitted to gambol about the San Francisco streets, and there is neither sense nor beauty in the large, wooden structures which surround the lawns and parterres of every second house in San Francisco. Eastern cities have long since abandoned fences, except in some cases, where a low, lacelike, iron railing is substituted, and one can ride miles through the beautiful boulevards of Chicago, Cincinnati, Detroit, or Boston without seeing a fence of any description. There your grounds are separated from your neighbors only by a low, stone coping, and the lovely expanse of green and flowers stretches away indefinitely, unmarred by the painted excrescences which render our streets as lugubrious as the shadow of convent walls, which neither adorn nor defend, but successfully conceal the really beautiful lawns which lie behind their aged backs.—San Francisco Post.

A Warning.

Pain is given for the wise purpose of informing us of the presence of danger and disease. Any little excitement of an unusual nature disturbs the balance of the system, the nervous energies are exhausted, and headache and a hundred other disturbances are the result. Many of the miseries of man and womanhood might be cured and prevented were their approach heeded and resisted, having their origin in derangements of the liver and blood, dyspepsia, jaundice, indigestion, costiveness, and other unwholesome conditions. Evils of a diseased nature find a certain cure by the use of Golden Seal Bitters. In this medicine, nature, aided by art, has produced a rare combination of medicinal properties, wisely adapted to the cure of diseases common to man-kind. The vitalizing principals embodied in Golden Seal Bitters will assuredly cure the broken down dyspeptic. Sold by Perry Weed and Dr. G. W. Crouter.

Broken Down Invalids.

Probably never in the history of Cough Medicines has any article met success equal to that which has been showered upon Dr. Pete's 35-cent cough cure. Thousands of hopeless cases of coughs, colds, and consumption have yielded to this truly marvelous discovery. For this reason we feel warranted in risking our reputation and money on its merits. Sold by Perry Weed and Dr. G. W. Crouter.

Wreck of the Hercules.

We take the following concerning the wreck of the Hercules, (which we briefly noticed last week) from the Sheboygan Times, of July 17th: The scow Hercules, from Charlevoix, bark-laden for Milwaukee, capsized off North Point reef, this port, about 5 o'clock Wednesday morning, during a high wind and heavy sea. We get from Capt. G. E. Hoag, master of the vessel, the following particulars. He left Manistee Tuesday night with a northeast wind, which not long after freshened until it became very strong and he was obliged to shape his course almost directly for this shore, which he sighted at North Point about daylight. The wind was still strong and the sea high. When about one and a half miles off the point the scow suddenly sprang a large leak in the stern, which seemed to partially give way, and within ten minutes she filled and rolled over on her beams end, scarcely giving time for the men to get upon her side. Just as she began to go over Capt. Hoag was making fast a tow line to throw to one of the tugs near at hand, and was obliged to hurriedly climb up the rigging to save himself from being born down and carried overboard by the falling deck load of bark. The man at the wheel, Albert Hopkins, was covered up and forced partly into the water, but was enabled to pull himself up on to the vessel's side, as did the rest of crew, but where they found it very difficult to maintain themselves, even with what little assistance they could render each other. The tug Sheboygan was nearest the vessel, but the Minnie Karl got the first line communication with her and pulled all the crew on board, except Capt. Hoag who was the last to leave. He then jumped on board the Sheboygan, which came along side the bottom of the scow lying to the windward. During the effort to save the crew they came near being swept off the wreck into the lake by a line which passed partly over it. The scow could not be towed into the harbor without being righted, and she very soon drifted past and went ashore at the South Point, where she became a complete wreck, and was stripped Thursday by her crew, with the help of the crew of the Life Saving Station and the tug Nelson, under the direction of Capt. Hoag. An attempt will be made to tow the wreck to the bench south of the harbor.

The crew of the Hercules comprised the following persons, residents of Charlevoix Mich.: G. E. Hoag captain; George Howe, mate; Chas. Arnold, steward; Herbet Hopkins and Frank Bennett, sailors. They saved nothing except what they had on their persons at the time, the captain losing about $15 in money, and the mate a new suit of clothes and a gold watch. They extend their thanks for the kind assistance received here, in a card published in this paper."

The Sage of Greystone.

A great deal has been written as to the decreptitude of Samuel J. Tilden, writes a New York correspondent of the Albany Journal. The differences of judgment arise from disagreement as to how much his palsied shake of head and hands implies. My own belief is that he is nowhere nigh so ill as he looks, and that the seclusion that he seeks is due to a dislike of being seen rather than to absolute inability. He lives up the Hudson at Greystone, but he makes visits to town much oftener than is generally known. His mansion in Gramercy place, with its beauties of architecture, decoration, and contents, are not altogether neglected by the aged statesman. He rides from his country residence in a close carriage to the railroad station, slips quickly into a private section of a drawing-room car, and on arriving in this city takes a cab for his town premises, which are in a quarter once fashionable but now aside from all bustle. His house fronts magnificently on Gramercy park, which is a high-fenced square private to the owners of the abutting property. In this inclosure I saw Mr. Tilden, the other sunny day, walking leisurely to and fro. He did not evince the feebleness that I was prepared to see, and I presume that the movement of stepping regularly abated the shake of his frame. He was alone, though a valet was in the park within call. He gazed much at St. George's church, whose two spires rose at hand, and I ventured to speak casually to him of the late Stephen H. Tyng, long the rector, and famous for intellectual vigor. The present pastor, Rainsford, is a noted athlete. "If the head of Thea could be placed upon the body of Now," said Mr. Tilden (but he subsequently declared, as proving that he meant no disparagement of Rainsford, that he knew nothing for or against his ministerial capacity.) "St. George would have a wonderful rector indeed."

At Mount Washington, a suburb of Pittsburgh, John H. Duvall decoyed Jacob H. Jones, who had recently married Duvall's divorced wife, to a lonely spot and threw a can of vitrol in his face. After gloating over his victim's suffering, Duvall walked to a high cliff, shot himself, and tumbled three hundred feet to the bottom. Jones, if he recovers, will be totally blind.

Rear Admiral Worden died at his residence at Newport, R. I., last week. He had been in feeble health for a long time. He was appointed Fleet Captain of the East Gulf squadron in 1864. In 1866 he was commissioned Captain, in 1871 Commodore, and in 1875 Rear Admiral, when he was placed in command of the South Pacific Station. His record through the war was an honorable one. His long and useful public service came to an end in 1877, when he was retired from active work. Since then he has spent most of his time in Newport in comparative quiet

The total in the United States from January 1 to date is 5,588, against 6,431 in 1885, a decline of 843 this year. Bradstreet's, in its weekly review of the industrial situation, says:

> Mercantile collections have notably improved at nearly all distributing centers. The demand for funds is active at New Orleans and Boston, where money has been tight and interest rates higher, and is increasing at Philadelphia and St. Louis. The supply exceeds the demand at Chicago and Kansas City. But the visible signs of the reported improvement are found in the hardening tendency in grain, pork, lard, wool, cotton, brown and bleached cottons, and print cloths. Iron and steel are firm, and while not higher are not likely to go lower. Oats higher on poor crop prospects. Pork and lard have lost some of their advance on speculative sales, under cover of the advance in grain. Cotton is higher on better demand and unfavorable crop reports in the South Atlantic States. Wool remains firm at previous advances, and manufacturers are buying more freely. Higher prices for new makes of brown and bleached shirtings and sheetings and for print cloths characterize the firm tone and confidence in the dry goods trade.

FOREIGN.

J. E. Thevold Rogers, the well-known author and Oxford professor, sent four London newspaper correspondents the following letter in response to a request for his opinion in regard to the present aspect of the home-rule question:

> The settlement of the question is inevitable, for a deadlock in parliament is unavoidable. The present situation is due partly to an intrigue of some radicals against Mr. Gladstone personally, and partly to the decadence of the aristocratic whigs. The former have made a tool of Mr. Bright. His great and just reputation has discouraged thousands of liberals from voting at all, and it is to their honor that they have hesitated to think him in the wrong. Long and well as I have known him, I can find no reason for his action beyond his dislike of the tactics of the Irish party. The House of Commons made, I think, a grave error. That the home-rule policy will finally and speedily prevail I have no doubt. Political, like religious, truth has its martyrs and its persecutors, some of the latter acting blindly and honestly. Some of them, from interested motives, earnestly hope that the friends of Irish liberty and Irish progress will not misinterpret or resent this accidental and temporary shift.

The Turkish Government has issued orders to have the army placed on a peace footing. The military and naval reserves are being disbanded.

The total number returned were: Conservatives and unionists, 386; Gladstonians, 252. The conservatives and unionists estimate the final result as follows: Conservatives, 323; Liberal Unionists, 75; Gladstonians, 188; Parnellites, 86. T. P. Gill, Home-Rule M. P., telegraphs from Dublin: "The situation looks first-rate. The Tories will not have a majority, and no coalition will hold together. If our people in Ireland and America can maintain their splendid calm, nothing can stop the advance of home rule."

The court considered this a proper service.

French dispatches show that Gen. Boulanger, the French War Minister, is apparently determined to convert the French army into a radical body, and is also working up a feeling against Germany

LATER NEWS ITEMS.

Acting Secretary Fairchild has summarily dismissed a chief of division and two clerks in his office for discreditable conduct in connection with examinations for promotion, says a Washington dispatch. It seems the chief of division had been instructed to prepare examination papers for promotion in his office, and after doing so surreptitiously furnished copies of the questions to two of his clerks under him. This fact was brought to the attention of the head of the office, who made inquiry of the accused parties, and upon their denial of the truth of the charges reported them to the Acting Secretary as persons unworthy to hold position under the Government. A high official of the Treasury Department states that he is convinced this practice has been long in vogue, and that the authorities are determined to put a stop to it, as far as possible.

President Grevy, at Paris, congratulated General Boulanger, Minister of War, upon the successful appearance of 400,000 troops, which passed in review in the Champs de Mars.

THREE reports from the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections upon the Payne case were submitted to the Senate on the 15th inst. The report signed by Senators Pugh, Sanlsbury, Vance, and Eustis, the Democratic members of the committee, sets forth at length the public history of the case, recognizes the transcendent importance of throwing around the Senate of the United States the highest safeguards against seating a member whose title was procured by bribery, fraud, and corruption, and describes the processes by which the signers reach the conclusion that there is no ground for further proceedings against Mr. Payne. The report says the committee's first act was to comply fairly with the first request of the Ohio House of Representatives to make an examination of the testimony taken by the select committee at Columbus. Upon this testimony Mr. Hoar made a report to the committee that, after careful reading, no evidence, opinion or statement whatever was found personally inculpating Mr. Payne in any way with the corrupt use of money in connection with his election. Neither did such examination show that enough had been found to justify the charge that the election was procured by the corrupt use of money. The report asks that the committee be discharged from further consideration of the subject and that it be indefinitely postponed. Senators Teller, Evarts, and Logan unite in a report in which, after reciting the circumstances surrounding the Senatorial election in Ohio in 1884, it is said that no action was taken by the State Legislature which elected Senator Payne calling in question the validity of his election, but that the new Legislature in January of the present year had adopted the resolution under which the investigation of Donovan's charges had been made. The Senate committee had found it proper to accept the presentation of the case set out in the majority and minority reports of the select committee of the Ohio House of Representatives. The only constitutional warrant for an investigation in a case like that presented is in the clause making each house of Congress the judge of the qualifications of its own members, and the clause conferring the right of expulsion. The signers of the report do not find that a case has been presented that would affect Mr. Payne with such turpitude as would tolerate his expulsion from the Senate, nor that testimony is accessible that touches the subject of the personal inculpation of Mr. Payne. They therefore turn their attention to the question of the validity of his election to the Senate. The report holds that the evidence in such a case must show that the fraud which it alleged was committed embraced enough in number of the voting electors to have changed the result. The testimony presented by the Ohio House of Representatives shows the number of members of the General Assembly that have been brought into inculpation and the weight of evidence against him. Senators Hoar and Frye in a separate report state that they cannot concur with the views expressed by the other members of the committee, and say they think a case is presented in which it is the duty of the Senate to permit the petitioners to present their evidence and to authorize the issue of proper process to aid in procuring the attendance of witnesses. The Senate is the only court which can have jurisdiction of the question. The report concludes with a resolution directing an investigation of the charges, and with a recommendation that it be adopted.

CONGRESSIONAL.

The Work of the Senate and House of Representatives.

MR. HOAR offered a resolution in the Senate on the 9th inst., calling on the President for information as to the seizure or detention in any foreign ports of any American vessels, the pretexts or alleged causes therefor, and what efforts have been made to provide redress for such seizures and to prevent their recurrence. The resolution went over. Mr. Call offered a resolution calling on the President to direct the American representative in Mexico to investigate the truth of statements made in the newspapers that citizens of the United States are confined in Mexican dungeons without trial for alleged offenses against the laws of Mexico, and that their final trial has been postponed without cause, and requiring the United States Government (if such statements are found to be true) to demand the trial of such persons and their humane treatment. The Senate, in executive session, rejected the nomination of John Goode, of Virginia, to be Solicitor General of the United States. In the House of Representatives a motion to refer to the Committee on Invalid Pensions the message of the President vetoing the bill granting a pension to Sarah Ann Bradley gave rise to an animated debate, in the course of which the Executive was arraigned by Messrs. Grosvenor, Barrows, McComas, and Bontelle, and defended by Mr. Springer. The message was referred—130 to 118. The President sent to the House a message vetoing the bill for a public building at Dayton, Ohio, on the ground that the Federal officials at that point are well accommodated at a rental of $3,850 per annum.

A HOUSE bill authorizing the Chicago, Burlington and Northern Railway to bridge the Mississipi River at Dubuque, Iowa, passed the Senate on the 10th inst. A resolution was adopted by the Senate calling on the President for information as to the seizure or detention of American vessels in foreign ports. The Senate discussed the Hennepin Canal project at length, but did not reach a vote on it. After a warm debate the House adopted a resolution setting apart July 13 for the consideration of such business as may be presented by the Ways and Means Committee, not to include any bill raising revenue, the main object being to allow the House to reach the joint resolution reported from the Ways and Means Committee looking to the paying out of some of the surplus money in the Treasury. The House passed the general deficiency appropriation bill. Mr. Morrison reported the Randall tariff bill adversely from the Ways and Means Committee.

A BILL authorizing the construction of a bridge across the St. Louis River, between the States of Minnesota and Wisconsin, was favorably reported in the Senate on the 12th inst. The Senate passed the House bill granting pensions to the soldiers and sailors of the Mexican war. In considering the river and harbor bill the Senate adopted an item of $300,000 for the Hennepin Canal. A bill was introduced in the Senate and referred to stop all payments of public money to James B. Eads, his associates, or assigns, for past, present, or future work at the mouth of the Mississippi River until further ordered by Congress. The railroad-attorney bill was reported to the Senate materially amended. No Congressman, according to its provisions, shall act as the legal representative of any corporation whose interests are or may become the subject of Congressional legislation. A bill to reimburse Jean Louis Legare for services rendered and money expended in bringing to the United States and procuring the surrender of Sitting Bull and a number of his followers was laid before the House. The claim is for $13,412, and is indorsed by Maj. Brotherton, the United States officer who received the surrender. A bill appropriating $10,000 for the erection of a monument to mark the birthplace of Abraham Lincoln, near Hodgesville, Ky., was introduced in the House by Mr. Robertson, a Democratic Representative from that State. The Senate amendment to the legislative appropriation bill, increasing from $4,000 to $5,000 the salaries of the Commissioners of Pensions and Patents, was concurred in by the House.

THE resolutions and memorial of the Ohio editors, urging the reopening of the Payne case, were referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections by the Senate on the 13th inst. A proposed amendment to the sundry civil bill to appropriate $37,500 for the purchase of the school and farm at the Carlisle Indian School was submitted to the Senate by Senator Teller (Colorado). The bill to appropriate $250,000 for the establishment and erection of a military post near Denver, Col., was favorably reported from the Senate Military Committee. The Senate passed a bill appropriating $25,000 for a monument at Stony Point, N. Y., to commemorate the revolutionary battle there. The President sent the following nominations to the Senate: David Turpie, of Indianapolis, to be United States Attorney for the District of Indiana, vice John E. Lamb, resigned. George C. Munson, to be assayer of the United States at Denver, Col. Postmasters—John M. Wright, at Temple, Texas; John L. Walsh, at South Chicago, Ill.; George L. Wright, at Denison, Iowa; William H. McAllister, at Vinton, Iowa; John C. Anderson, at Eagle Rock, Iowa. Representative Matson, Chairman of the Invalid Pension Committee of the House, presented a report sustaining the veto of the pension of $50 per month voted to the widow of Gen. Hunter, as the legal rate of $30 has been allowed by the Pension Office, and the claimant is in no need of an increase. The House concurred in the Senate amendment to the legislative appropriation bill relative to the publication of the records of the rebellion, with the amendment providing for the publication of papers relating to the defense in the case of Fitz-John Porter. The Senate was asked for a conference upon the whole bill. Several measures affecting the tobacco trade were passed by the House, and also bills amending the statutes in relation to the immediate transportation of dutiable goods. The joint resolution directing payment of the Treasury surplus on the public debt was taken up and debated at length, but no action taken.

THE river and harbor bill occupied the exclusive attention of the Senate on the 14th inst. The amendment proposing to appropriate $350,000 for the purchase of the Portage Lake Canal and the Lake Superior and Iron Company Canal was agreed to—yeas, 35; nays, 21. The amendment in relation to the Cabanet River was agreed to. The amendment accepting the grant of the Illinois and Michigan Canal, and for the construction of the Hennepin Canal was adopted—yeas, 27; nays, 20. The House passed Col. Morrison's joint resolution directing payment of the surplus in the Treasury on the public debt. The vote stood 200 yeas to 65 nays. In the debate preceding the passage of the resolution Mr. Hewitt (N. Y.) denied that the passage of this resolution would give employment to a single man. Instead of giving employment to 150,000 men, 100,000 men would be dismissed from employment on the very first day that the public realized that the stability of the Treasury was impaired. Mr. Randall (Pa.) said this was not a silver question at all. It was a question whether we and the money in the Treasury undisposed of, and against which there is no legitimate claim, to the extent of $50,000,000 or $70,000,000 that might be used in liquidation of the public debt. Mr. McKinley (Ohio) thought the resolution a remarkable one. It was a proposition coming from the party in accord with the administration to compel the President of the United States and the Secretary of the Treasury to do that which they had always had the power to do. He stated that in sixteen months the Democratic administration had called in but $58,000,000 of Government bonds for redemption, and compared it with each sixteen months of Republican administration since 1861, which had averaged $154,000,000. Mr. McKinley stated that the Democratic majority in the House appeared to be at odds with the President. The only thing upon which that party was in positive accord was in getting the offices. Mr. Morrison—And we are getting along only middling at that. Mr. Henderson of Iowa favored the resolution because it enforced a Republican proposition. Now that the Democratic party had determined that the pension bills should not be passed, he was in favor of paying out the surplus on the public debt. Mr. Morrison, of Illinois, denied that the resolution was a condemnation of the administration. It left the question of reserve in the statutes where it was to-day. If it was law now that $100,000,000 was to be reserved, it would be law after the passage of the resolution. Did the gentleman from New York believe that $70,000,000 extra surplus was required in the Treasury because there was a Democratic administration?

RUM.

Its Effect on the Duration of Human Life—Facts of Interest to the Public.

[From the Toledo Blade.]

We are glad to see that the more advanced and wide-awake members of the medical profession are turning their attention to the physiological effects of rum on the human body. By rum we mean any kind of liquor—spirituous, vinous, or malt—which contains alcohol in any quantity whatever. There is a growing disposition among the doctors to investigate the old beliefs of the profession regarding rum's work in the body's economy; to take nothing for granted because it is current as a part of old medical literature, but to put each assertion to the proof, and test, by actual experiment, its truth or falsity.

The Blade recently discussed the topic of rum as a medicine, and endeavored to give its readers without the use of technical or medical terms, the latest results arrived at by the investigations of English scientists and medical men, which results may be summed up in the statement that alcohol, and of course rum in all its forms, is a poison, no more, no less; never a tonic, never a stimulant, in the medical sense; in fact, not a medicine.

Within the past few days the use of alcohol (and Rum) in medical practice was discussed by the Ohio State Medical Society, at its annual meeting at Akron, this State—the discussion being brought up by a paper read before the society by Dr. Wm. B. Davis, of Cincinnati, on "The Alcohol Question." While the paper was for the most part strictly professional in its treatment of the subject, and hence of interest only to physicians, the general conclusions of the author, as well as we are able to judge from the brief summary before us, were in accord with those before given in the Blade. There were some additional facts given, however, as to the habitual use of Rum, that are of the widest interest to the public.

Most interesting was his discussion of the influence of Rum on the duration of life. One might reason by analogy that as alcohol is a poison, the constant drinking of Rum is equivalent to a slow poisoning of the individual, and that a shortening of the natural term of life would be the inevitable result. Dr. Davis shows that this is actually so. It is found by the great life insurance companies that the use of Rum shortens life. These companies have a direct pecuniary motive in ascertaining the truth of this matter. To them it is not a humanitarian question, but one of dollars and cents. Put in its plainest form, the problem they had set before them to solve was, "Does it pay to insure drinking men?"

One of the most eminent of English actuaries, Mr. Nicson, made within the past few years a searching investigation of the "risks" (a technical term for the persons insured) of the life insurance companies of England, with special reference to the effects of alcohol upon the duration of life—or, to put it in other words, to find whether a company is justified in insuring a confirmed drinker (not necessarily a drunkard, but a steady, "moderate" drinker) or not. The results at which he arrived are startling. Understand that the worst class of drinking men are excluded from the list—those who are so far on the downward road that no insurance company would accept a risk upon their lives—and that in the class of "drinking men" all are included who use intoxicants to any degree. The results of this investigation may be stated thus:

First—Where, in a given number of "risks" 10 non-drinkers die between the ages of 15 and 20, there are 18 drinking persons die. That is, stating the fact in another form, nearly two drinking youths die to one abstainer among those whose ages range from 15 to 20!

Second—Between the ages of 21 and 30, there are 51 deaths of drinking men to 10 deaths of abstainers. That is, over five intemperate men die to one temperate man!

Third—Between the ages of 31 and 40, there are 40 drinking men die for every 10 abstainers; that is, the ratio of deaths is four to one!

It must be understood that comparatively few of these men die directly from rum. They do not all, nor nearly all, die in the horrible ravings of delirium tremens, for instance. But their lives have been shortened by rum. The alcoholic poison has undermined the constitution of each, and destroyed all recuperative power. The disease, whatever it may have been, which was the immediate cause of death, was victorious only because the system of the sufferer was enfeebled by rum.

What else could be expected as the result when a man, day after day, for years, takes into his system a poison? The currents of life are polluted at the fountain-head. The life-energy is expended in the daily task of overcoming the pernicious physical influence of rum. Every organ of the body is more or less disorganized and enfeebled, and when disease comes the power of resistance being lessened to a great degree, death results far more quickly than did this state of things not exist.

Mr. Nieson's investigations also led to the following results as to the comparative length of life the drinker and the abstainer may look forward to with a reasonable degree of certainty:

At the age of 20 years a temperate man may reasonably expect to live 44.2 years longer, a drinking man only 15.6 years. That is, at 20 a drinking man can at most expect to live only one-third as long as he otherwise could did he not have the rum habit fixed upon him.

At the age of 30 years a temperate man may expect to live 36.5 years, an intemperate person only 13.8.

At the age of 40 years the temperate man may look forward to 28.8 years still before him, the intemperate man only 11.6 years.

It is a hopeful sign that the medical profession is getting aroused to the tremendous dangers that menace humanity from Rum. It is full of promise for the future. As we have so often said, the Prohibition movement is in the "educating" stage. The masses of the people are slowly but surely becoming aroused to the dangers to health, to life, from the use of Rum; to the enormous sums which it costs the nation; to the vast burden of misery, and pauperism, and vice, and crime, which it imposes. Tens of thousands have come to a realizing sense of these things, but tens of thousands more who have never studied the matter must be aroused to the danger of allowing Rum to continue its work. They must be brought to see that, to stop drinking, the manufacture and sale of Rum must be stopped entirely. So long as money can be made by it, there are men who will deal out the liquid damnation to all who will buy. To prohibit its manufacture and sale is the only way to pulverize the Rum power.

WAGES AND RUM.

A By-No-Means Extravagant Assumption —Beer and Whisky and the Labor Problem.

Is it too extravagant to say that three-quarters of the money that is spent for rum in this country comes out of the pockets of men who are compelled to earn their money by hard work? We know of no statistics that could lead us to a conclusion in the matter, but from what may be seen in our rum-shops from day to day we do not believe that it is far out of the way to believe this estimate is correct. In the vicinity of every work-shop and factory the rum-shop flourishes as long as the work-shop and factory flourish; and about the door and around the tables of the average saloon may be seen men, often in crowds, who give unmistakable evidence that they are toilers. The rum-shop, therefore, becomes a direct burden to the employer. The laborer finds that his wages are insufficient to provide for his family and buy his grog, and he becomes uneasy. He pleads as an excuse for a demand for higher wages that he is not getting sufficient to keep his family as it should be kept. It is true that the family may be suffering deprivation, but it is also true that it might, perhaps, be well provided for if a portion of the man's wages did not go for rum. If charged with thus spending his money, he retorts that the poor man is as much entitled to his beer and whisky as the rich man is to his wine. It would be an unquestionable blessing if both were deprived of their drink. It would never do the poor man or the rich man the slightest harm to deprive him of intoxicating liquor. We have no pity to waste on any stomach whose owner thinks it is outraged because it is not filled with alcohol. We know that if we could stop every still, and shut up every rum-shop, and plug up every rum-barrel, every human being and the best interests of society would be better off. Hence, as the absence of liquor would be a public blessing, we think too much of our fellow-men to have the slightest sympathy with his plea for the privilege of drinking rum. As long as we have rum we shall not quarrel with anybody who differs from us in belief or practice, but we shall never willingly do anything which shall enable a man to buy more rum.

The rum traffic is a sufficient burden upon decent people and tax-payers at best, without assessing employers directly to sustain it. It is for better—better for himself and better for the community at large—for a workman to receive so little pay that he can not buy rum, than it is to have enough to enable him to fill himself. If the rum-shop could be eliminated from the labor problem, it would be easier of solution by a very large per cent. The money spent for liquor in this country is much greater than that spent for any article of consumption, and several times more than that spent for education. Comment upon such a state of affairs is entirely unnecessary. It is incredible that a nation in which there are so many who complain of an impossibility to get on in the world should support a hundred rum-shops to one school-house, and guzzle rum as if it were a necessary article of consumption. Further, the saloon always furnishes the flame that bursts forth into riot and bloodshed. It is the enemy of the workingman and everybody else. But thousands of workingmen are ready to boycott anything before they will boycott the rum-shop. Many a man could live well and save money upon his present wages, if he would let rum alone, but as long as he is a patron to the bar-room it is not likely that he would be paid enough to enable him to live decently or to save a cent.—Western Rural.

A Republic.

You have a true conception of a republican government, advocating that sobriety, virtue, honesty, loyalty and intelligence are the fundamental pillars upon which such government rests, and the history of the past is proof of that fact. Removing these foundation stones, the republic will be transformed, ultimately ruined. Some may think that a republic can exist, if only in name, but we differ. Good principles instilled into men make them noble, true and good; good laws, applicable equally to all, make a nation a desirable home for all men. Right principles in the individual, and good laws, make a nation great. An eminent jurist has said that "Law is a rule of conduct prescribed by the supreme power of a state, commanding us to do what is right, and forbidding what is wrong." And another writer says: "Law is the rock whereon rests our liberty, for there can be no liberty without law." And a fool said: "Laws are a spider's web, which catches little flies, and big flies bore a hole through and escape."

Even fools have been known to speak the truth. The Scripture says, "The end of the law is obedience."

Sometimes we criticise our fellow-men and are answered in various ways for taking such liberty.

There must be degrees of good and evil, for the deeds of men are a living testimony to this assertion. If there be no degree we are all on a level, and in such case would not be justified in our criticism; such action would not be consistent. Consistency is a jewel, and it is said that honesty lasts longest because it is least used.

The platform of a certain political party read: "The majority rule is the vital principle of a republic." And we say amen! But the loyal citizens who compose that party nearly all violate directly or indirectly the laws adopted by the majority for the government of our state, claiming that the "majority has no right to dictate what the minority shall drink or wear."

What right then has the majority to make a law forbidding a woman to appear in nude attire? Why prohibit the use of whisky and gin if they cannot allow ale, wine and beer? Is it more tyrannical to force a man by law to drink beer than to prohibit the traffic entirely? Which is the most tyrannical, partial and unjust, entire prohibition or partial?

Majorities do not make laws for the minority alone, for how could we get laws if a majority were not ready to obey the law they would enact. Every law has a minority opposition. And if no law were passed but upon consent of the minority, there could be no law. All law would be worthless.

We are much concerned about a nation in which many of its citizens have no higher conception of liberty, equality, and justice than a beer saloon, gambling den, or house of prostitution; who think they find all political wisdom in the bottom of a beer mug, and all nobility of character in a whisky bottle.—Iowa Prohibitionist.

A WOMAN'S ELOQUENCE.

In Advocating Constitutional Prohibition of the Liquor Traffic.

A fair and exceedingly appreciative audience assembled in the court house to hear Mrs. Judith Ellen Foster discuss the question of constitutional prohibition of the liquor traffic.

Mrs. Foster was warmly greeted as she stepped before the audience, her appearance making an instant favorable impression. With a pointed allusion to Mr. Gladstone and the issue now dividing Great Britain, the speaker remarked that she had come to discuss a question of home rule in a light other than that in which the Grand Old Man of England now stands. The absorbing question is, shall the Constitution be amended so as to prohibit for all time the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquor in Pennsylvania. By a constitutional limitation, the speaker said, no amendment to the organic law could be made until 1889. She was opposed to complicating prohibition in any way with partisan rivalries, and in this connection said, naively, "She had heard that the Legislature of Pennsylvania could sit and sit, and sit and sit, beyond any other class of men." The speaker held that legislators and business men are preoccupied so much in what concerns them individually as often to lose sight of what involves the highest interests of humanity. It will take time to overcome this. Proceeding, the speaker gave some illustrations of how constitutional prohibition was misunderstood by the politicians. She said all the advocates of constitutional prohibition asked is the right to vote on this question; the privilege to decide by ballot whether this question of a change in the Constitution shall be submitted to a popular vote. This matter is rapidly coming to the front; it is thundering down the track; gentlemen, get out of the way, or else get on and ride.

The speaker next discussed the manner in which prohibition work was done in Iowa. It has brought young men to the front, said she. New leaders are now at the top, and the former leaders, who were born undereared in the old dispensation—where are they? You cannot find them; they have sunk out of sight; they sleep in unmarked graves. Our present Governor, Larrabee, was once opposed to prohibition, although he was a total abstainer. Now he is a leader in our ranks and is in the fore-front of the fight. But, you say, if we had prohibition in the Constitution we could not enforce it. Possibly you might not at first in certain sections, but you will not stop the march of events for that, will you?

In conclusion Mrs. Foster exclaimed with great energy: "All we ask of you, O men, in this awful struggle against drink, is to help us to do what we may and must do for the suppression of the horrible traffic." The close of the address, which lasted an hour and a quarter, and which has been but scrappily outlined above, was full of pathos and searching appeals, which evoked tears and applause. The Rev. Mr. Botterill asked for a collection to meet the expenses of the work of the W. C. T. U., in behalf of which organization the meeting was held. Considerable encouragement and enthusiasm were felt by the temperance workers at the success of the lecture.

The meeting was one of the most successful held on the same subject since Judge Agnew several years ago discussed constitutional prohibition from the same stand.—Harrisburg (Pa.) Independent.

KING ALCOHOL BURIED.

"Bloody Copiah" Transformed Into a Stronghold of Prohibition.

[New Orleans telegram to New York Times.]

Copiah County, Mississippi, has in its day borne a bad name. Its soil has often been stained with bloodshed by the hands of the murderer, but in almost every case whisky has been at the bottom of the crime. Of late, however, the people of this section have been aroused on the question of prohibition, especially inspired by the teachings of the Rev. Mr. Galloway, one of the newly made bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church, who has been the leader of the prohibition sentiment throughout the State. A year or two ago Copiah voted against liquor license by a small majority. Yesterday another election was held, and it resulted in a rousing victory for the anti-liquor party, the county going "dry," according to the local parlance, by from 1,500 to 2,500 majority. In Hazlehurst the majority was 165 in a total vote of 480. All business-houses were closed, and all attention was given to the elections. Citizens, old and young, worked for prohibition. The cannon, "Old Lamar," was fired at intervals throughout the day, the sound of which carried the people back to the stormy days of 1875, when it played such an active part in the elections.

Great crowds of people, white and black, were on the streets all day, and the utmost quiet prevailed. In Crystal Springs whisky was completely snowed under, the town voting 324 against and only 35 for the sale. Gahmm Precinct voted solidly against, and returns are announced from all the precincts on the Illinois Central Railroad, showing over 1,300 majority for prohibition, which will probably swell to more than 2,000. Not since 1874 and 1875 had there been such unanimity of opinion and enthusiasm. Cannon boomed, church bells rang, and in the evening an open-air meeting was held, in which ladies participated, and a mimic funeral was held depicting the burial of King Alcohol. The enthusiasm was unbounded, and was participated in by all ages and both sexes and colors. It was notable that colored men freely voted for prohibition. In Beauregard 215 votes were polled, of which eighty-nine were for whisky. The ladies and children turned out to the polls, and by their presence influenced the vote to a great extent. In Wesson cannon were fired and all the church-bells were ringing for joy at the result of the election "For whisky" or "No whisky." Wesson gave 280 dry against 2 wet.

The ladies have done the work here, and the result is seen in the vote. Copiah has become the most orderly and enlightened county in all Mississippi under a strict enforcement of her prohibition laws. Money that went formerly to pay for criminal prosecutions now goes to keep open the public schools. The counties of Lauderdale and Clark were carried by the Prohibitionists a month ago after a desperate struggle, in which at one time bloodshed was feared at Meridian. In a few weeks the seat of war will be transferred to Natchez, in Adams County, and Vicksburg, in Warren County, where will be had the closest fight yet made.

The Quantity of Whisky That Is Used.

It is, at least, fairly doubtful if the majority of the people of this country have any just idea of the amount of whisky that is manufactured, sold, and consumed. They may, however, understand that the total output of the stills is enormous when they are told that in the internal revenue districts of Kentucky alone there were manufactured, in the month of May last, no less than 3,177,959 gallons. Altogether it is reported that the production of the first half of the present year has been 19,291,536 gallons. Add to this nearly twenty million gallons the other scores of millions of gallons of other intoxicants, wine, beer and the like, and the surprise will be, not that the liquor evil is so great, but so small; not that pauperism and crime are so common, but so rare. There are only sixty millions of people in this country, and if the above mentioned rates of production should be kept up during the entire year, what with whisky, wine, beer, and ale, the total output would be not less than a couple of hundred million gallons, or quite enough to afford a rum bath to every man, woman, and child in the land. But, unfortunately, rum is used as an internal instead of an external application, and the consequence is the abject poverty, misery, and crime, which so generally prevail. We can at present think of but one good use to which all of these hundreds of millions of gallons of liquid poison could be wisely put—to that of drowning all men engaged in the manufacture and sale of them.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

Precept vs. Practice.

"What I hate about these temperance people," said Goodfellow, "is their slobbering sentimentality. Stern, conscientious devotion to convictions I admire. But I do despise the mawkish sentiment that mars the temperance doctrines. I hate sappy sentimentality."—This manly and vigorous sentiment was uttered and applauded at 10 p. m. At 2 a. m. Goodfellow, with one arm around Hailfellow's neck, whom he called "Hayfellel," was slowly but surely ponring a mug of beer down his back, while assuring him with many tears that "he—hic—love 'im like—like—hic—likeabrother—hic—true—true—troosteel to 'im—knog any man down at—hic—said he—hic—seddewas'n, wen 'e was." Sobs. And Hailfellow, feeling about in the vacant air with a wandering hand, repeatedly urged his bosom friend, whom he called "Goofler," to "Putter there—putter there—thash what I say—putter there," until he dritted away into slumberland. It may be there is a great deal of mawkish sentiment among the temperance people. Goodfellow and Hailfellow both stand aloof from the cause on that account. But then, my son, there is some—oh, not much, but some mawkish, if not maudlin, sentiment in circles that are not totally abstinent, not to say temperate.—Bardette.

More Brute Than the Horse.

"Here is an episode of Washington life, which, if kept up, may relieve the overproduction of the whisky market. At Willard's Hotel a fine-appearing man, well-dressed, with a red face, indicating to be of refreshments often repeated, drove up in a handsome buggy, drawn by a pretty bay horse, which he left standing at the door while he entered the hotel. In a short time the gentleman came out again with a glass of whisky in his hand. This he placed on the seat of the buggy, while he caressed his horse with marked kindness. Then, taking the glass in one hand and opening the horse's mouth with the other, he proceeded to pour the whisky down the horse's throat. 'A Virginia gentleman never drinks alone,' he said, and, just as he said it, he was collared by a policeman, who took him, with his horse and buggy, to the police station, where he was charged with cruelty to animals. The Virginia gentleman belongs to Alexandria. He gave his name variously as Arthur J. Dickson and Davis, but one of Willard's ornaments said he recognized him as Graham, who keeps a large livery stable in Alexandria."

It is remarkable how the lives and characters of dumb animals are protected.

Prohibition in Pennsylvania.

The liquor prohibition sentiment in Pennsylvania is assuming formidable proportions. A recent dispatch from Harrisburg says: A movement has been started in the Republican party to commit the State convention to a resolution urging the passage of an act proposing an amendment to the constitution prohibiting the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquor. The Republican Legislature has so often denied the demands of the temperance people for the submission of such legislation to the people that a serious revolt is anticipated. This is sensibly appreciated by the Republican leaders, especially since Wolfe, who has frequently rebelled against boss rule, has thrown out the intimation that he would accept the nomination of the prohibitory party if he should consider such action necessary to strengthen the ticket.—Philadelphia dispatch.

Temperance Notes.

[Compiled by Miss Julia Ames, W. C. T. U.]

GENERAL NEAL DOW is writing a history of alcoholic prohibition.

THE W. C. T. U. has rightly been called "organized mother love."

THE employes of the South Chicago Rolling Mills pay $3,000 a week for liquor, nearly $160,000 per year.

THE Swedish Riksdag has granted a subsidy of 8,000 crowns for the promotion of temperance by means of literature dealing with the effects of the use of alcoholic liquors.

MISS ROSE CLEVELAND has accepted the position of literary editor of the Literary Life, and will make Chicago her home in the future. She will be warmly welcomed by her white-ribbon sisters.

ONE of the oldest and best-established schools in Baltimore, Md., strictly prohibits the use of tobacco by any of its pupils, and requests those who are addicted to its use not to apply for admission.

A PROMINENT citizen of Carrollton, Ga., says: "The results of prohibition are marvelous. Before the whisky traffic was abolished the trade of the place was $200,000 a year, now it is over $500,000 a year."

A GOSPEL temperance hospital has for nine years been supported in London. Last year 26,000 patients were cared for, either in the hospital or by its physicians and nurses in the homes of the poor. No alcohol is used, and the death rate is much smaller than in hospitals where alcohol is used.

MICHIGAN AFFAIRS.

—The office of gas inspector at Detroit yields a salary of but $5 a year.

—The establishment of a road-cart manufactory is talked of at Quincy.

—The iron ore shipments from Escanaba, for the present season, aggregate 518,329 tons.

—Bishop Patterson, who is now enjoying a European tour, writes that he will return home by August 1.

—A Mason minister has got into hot water by delivering a sermon in which he denounced the wearing of corsets.

—A party of capitalists are to expend $5,000 in improvements at Sebewaing, Huron County, in order to make it attractive as a summer resort.

—Government suits have been begun against Mount Pleasant people for cutting valuable timber on Indian lands, and there is great excitement at Mount Pleasant.

—The colored people of Ypsilanti will, on August 2, hold a rousing celebration of Emancipation Day. It is expected eight thousand people will take part in the festivities.

—Thomas J. Walker hanged himself in a cell at Ann Arbor. He was waiting a requisition from New Mexico, being charged with committing murder at Socorro. He had confessed his crime.

—A. G. Brown, Jr., a militia lieutenant of Jackson, has disappeared with $1,500 company funds. His friends claim that he went to Chicago to witness the ball games and lost the money in bets.

—A woman at Elkhart, Ind., has made application at the Postoffice Department in Washington to be appointed Postmistress at White Pigeon, on the ground that she once resided there years ago.

—While William Pompard, of Monroe, was recently skinning a large catfish one of the horns on the head of the fish penetrated his foot, where it broke off. Efforts were made to withdraw the bone with a pair of forceps, but it was planted among the small bones, and, as the spike is serrated, all attempts to withdraw it were futile. His sufferings are intense.

—The 16-months-old daughter of Chas. Barnes, who lives near the Chicago and Grand Trunk track, five miles from Lansing, wandered on the track the other day, and was struck by a train and instantly killed. Her body was torn to pieces and scattered along the track, thirty-two cars of a Lansing bound freight passing over the child, tearing it so that only one hand was found intact. The mother, who was in bed, got up and gathered up the fragments of the little one's body after the train had passed.

—It is now pretty definitely settled, says a Washington letter, that the love-sick Senator Jones, of Florida, will not return to Washington during the present session of Congress. His friends say that he is now ashamed to return, but that he will be there at the opening of the next session. A Michigan Representative, who has just returned from Detroit, says that he is living in great style at a hotel there, occupying the rooms that are usually given to Vanderbilt when he is in the city. He is seen very little, except when he makes an occasional visit to the bar.

State Crops.

For the July crop report the Secretary of State has received returns from 780 correspondents, representing 622 townships. Five hundred and twenty-seven of these returns are from 379 townships of the southern four tiers of counties. The area of the 1886 wheat crop, as returned by supervisors in the southern four tiers of counties, is 1,357,578 acres, and in the northern counties 243,206 acres; total of 1,600,784 acres. Final corrections and spring wheat sowings, which were not completed at the time the assessment was taken, will probably add 25,000 acres, making the total area of the 1886 wheat harvest 1,625,784 acres. The average per acre as estimated by supervisors is thirteen and sixty-eight hundredths bushels, indicating a probable yield in the State of 22,249,686 bushels. Wheat has evidently been very badly injured by the Hessian fly. The presence of the fly is reported by ninety-seven correspondents in the first, or south tier of counties; by sixty-nine correspondents in the second tier; forty-four in the third, and twenty-five in the fourth tier. The county returns of Supervisors, partially corrected, show the area of wheat harvested in 1885 to have been 1,497,470 acres, and the yield 29,927,543 bushels. Final corrections will increase this area by at least 35,000 acres, and yield by 700,000 bushels, making the totals about 1,532,470 acres, and 30,627,543 bushels. The total number of bushels of wheat reported marketed in June is 430,676; the number of bushels in eleven months, from August to June, 14,044,903, or about forty-six per cent. of the crop of 1885. The number of bushels reported marketed in the same months of 1884-5 was 8,468,513, or thirty-three per cent. of the crop of 1884. For these months in 1884-5, reports were received from about thirty-seven per cent. and in 1885-6 from about forty-eight per cent. of the elevators and mills in the southern four tiers of counties. About 2,732,000 bushels of the 1885 wheat crop is yet in farmers' hands. The condition of other crops compared with the vitality and growth of an average year is for the State as follows: Corn, ninety-two per cent.; oats, eighty-five; barley, eighty-eight; clover, meadows, and pastures, seventy-four; clover sowed this year, eighty-one per cent. The condition of corn compared with July 1, 1885, is one hundred and thirteen. Seven per cent. of corn planted failed to grow. Apples in the southern four tiers of counties promises ninety-four per cent., and in the northern counties eighty-six per cent. of an average crop.

FOR AUDITOR GENERAL.

The movement to secure for Philip B. Wachtel, of Petoskey, the nomination for auditor general, should meet with the enthusiastic support of northern Michigan, and the approval of the whole state. This section is entitled to consideration in the distribution of offices, and we do not know of a man who would add more strength to the ticket, and none could bring out more effective work for the whole ticket, than would be done by Mr. Wachtel's friends, in an effort to elect him to that important office. He is personally popular wherever he is known, and his past business training fits him for careful, close work in the business for the state.

The Democratic Press.

It is encouraging when a partisan press can receive just merited praise from an independent source of its position upon questions with which its party is connected. The republican press, throughout its lease upon power, was noted for its blind and persistent defence of everything republican, in the midst of the blackest crimes and rascalities that besmirched its administration. The Chicago Herald notes this in connection with the Belknap, Sheperd, Babcock and Robeson corruptions. "Every republican newspaper in America," it says, "defended Belknap until he confessed." The credit mobilier, star route and whiskey thieves, that were the chief points of interest in the Grant administration, were defended through thick and thin.

The free lance position of the democratic press is in marked contrast with the republican in a similar position. Their private opinions upon the financial policy of the government are very publicly expressed, even though in opposition. There is nothing but a very slight appearance of evil in the Garland and Goode cases. The fact is very doubtful, and yet a large portion of the democratic press is speaking right out in meeting. The honesty of intent can not fail to win its reward. The people will trust the party that has honest, outspoken representatives.—Kalamazoo Gazette.

The Surplus Must Go.

The house on Wednesday passed the following resolution which was introduced by Mr. Morrison:

Resolved, That whenever the surplus or balance in the treasury, including amount held for redemption of United States notes, shall exceed the sum of $100,000,000, it shall be and is hereby made the duty of the secretary of the treasury to apply such excess, in sums not less than $10,000,000 per month during the existence of any such surplus or excess, to the payment of the interest bearing indebtedness of the United States payable at the option of the government.

The vote on this resolution stood 207 ayes and 67 nays. Quite a large number of western republicans voted for it. Every member of the Michigan delegation except Congressman O'Donnel of Jackson, who was absent on account of sickness, supported the resolution.

The discussion which preceded the passage of the resolution through the house shows that it was urged and considered as a distinctively democratic measure. It was opposed most strenuously by leading republicans like McKinley of Ohio, and Reed of Maine. Nearly all those who voted against it were republicans. A democrat introduced it; only democrats advocated it: and all but 15 democrats recorded themselves in favor of its passage. It must be considered therefore as a purely democratic measure, and that party alone is entitled to the credit of the splendid victory which was achieved.

The country has again been given a practical illustration of the devotion of the national democracy to the interests of the people. Why should the wage earner or honest agriculturist hesitate any longer in deciding which party he will support in the coming contest? Has he not already had abundant proof of the patriotic purposes and honest performances of the one and the false pretenses and studied treachery of the other?—Lansing Journal.

The Treasury Surplus.

The question presented by Mr. Morrison's resolution is simply a business question. Is one hundred millions a sufficient reserve? In view of the resources of the country, we think it is.

We do not share the gloomy forebodings of Mr. Hewitt and the Herald.

The Herald has long been prophesying a woful disaster because of silver coinage. But the coinage has gone on and the disaster has deferred its visit.

The Star does not fear that the country will suffer if it shall use the money in its hands to reduce the debt. The greatest evils that can befall us come from a plethoric treasury. It gives birth to all sorts of schemes—Blair bills, Hennepin and Cape Cod canals, pensions to all men and every other form of waste. Let us use the surplus to pay the debt, and then let us reduce the taxes so that there will not soon be another surplus.

That is democratic doctrine—pay the debt and reduce the taxes.

The suggestion is made that, under the resolution, bonds may be called in and silver offered in payment of them. Of course that will not be done. To tender silver dollars for the bonds would injure the public credit, and democrats have always protected and fostered the public credit.—N. Y. Star.

Mercantile Hypocrisy.

In a store, Merchant (to clerk)—"Did you send Hammerton his bill again this week?"

Clerk—"Yes, sir."

Merchant—"What did he say?"

Clerk—"Said he would be around and pay it."

Merchant—"That's what he has said for the last six months. He's the biggest liar in this town. He can never get ten cents' worth on a credit here any more. I reckon we'll have to sue him—sh—here he comes now."

Merchant—"Good morning, Mr. Hammerton, glad to see you, sir. Won't you sit down?"

Hammerton—"No, thank you. I called to settle that bill."

Merchant—"What bill—oh, yes. Why sir, I hadn't thought of it. You see, the collector has charge of the bills and I pay but little attention to them. Thank you." (receiving the money and receipting the bill.) "Call again, Mr. Hammerton."

Hammerton—"I am a little pushed for money at present."

Merchant—"That makes no difference, sir, none whatever. Whenever you want anything give us a call. Good-morning."—Arkansaw Traveler.

The President's Popularity.

Colonel John Knapp, one of the proprietors of the St. Louis Republican, for years the recognized organ of the democracy in the northwest, is at the Fifth Avenue. Colonel Knapp during the last two months has made an extensive tour of the west, and he says that everywhere he found President Cleveland popular with his party.

"As far as I am concerned," he said "I can say nothing too good about the administration. It is, however, superfluous for me to speak upon the subject, as the Republican represents my views, and I guess that is generally known that it is giving the administration a most hearty support. And in doing so the paper but reflects the sentiment of the great majority of the democracy of Missouri. It rests with himself whether Mr. Cleveland is renominated."—N. Y. Star.

Economy in the Treasury.

WASHINGTON, July 15.—A table printed in this morning's Congressional Record by Mr. Belmont, in connection with his defense of the treasury administration, in the debate on the Morrison resolution, makes an interesting showing of the expenditures of that department for the fiscal year just closed. The expenditures for construction and repairs of public buildings, etc., increased $486,000, but the expenditures for salaries, repayments to importers, cost of detecting frauds in the customs service, interest on the public debt and other purposes, decreased $5,091,000, making a net decrease of expenditures for the department for the year 1886 as compared with 1885, of $4,600,000 in round figures.

TESTIMONIALS:

(A LETTER.)

LAW AND REAL ESTATE OFFICE OF EDWARD H. GREEN.
Charlevoix, Mich., July 17th, 1886.

H. B. CHAPMAN, ESQ., Boyne City, Mich.,

DEAR SIR:—Knowing of your intense suffering, and having sympathy for you would like of course to see you relieved of those terrible pains. Last winter I was suffering severely, when Mrs. Sweetland called to see me on business, and not finding me at my office came to my house and seeing the pain I was in, said she could relieve me if I were willing. Of course I was willing. She removed the pain almost instantly, and in less than fifteen minutes I went to my office, built a fire and went to work. Hence I am free to recommend her to others who may be suffering. Very respectfully,

E. H. GREEN.

Charlevoix, Mich., July 21st, 1886.

MR. AND MRS. SWEETLAND, Proprietors of the Metaphysical Bethesda, Charlevoix, Mich.:

I wish to here state that I had been a constant sufferer for six months with sciatic rheumatism in my left hip and leg reaching from the hip to the ends of the toes, also spinal nervous prostration. These diseases were so severe that I was unable to leave my house during the winter last past. Together with these was a paralyetic numbness and withering of the hip. All my friends know too well how much I had suffered, when four weeks ago I was induced to go to your Metaphysical Bethesda and place myself under treatment. Here Mrs. Sweetland gave me a full electric bath, effecting a complete cure. My intention was to have continued taking baths, but as I found my cure permanent I did not deem that more was needed. Some two weeks ago I was taken with an unbearable pain in the bottom of my right foot. During my terrible affliction which had then lasted for several hours, causing the foot to cramp and making it impossible for me to place it upon the floor, Mrs. Sweetland called accidentally, and seeing my affliction, placed her hands upon the affected member removing the pain almost instantly, which has not returned. Mrs. Sweetland's power for removing pain and disease is certainly miraculous in the extreme and worthy of great consideration from the afflicted, and careful study of the medical world. The baths given at the Bethesda surpass anything I have any knowledge of in this country or the old world, which can be given in the most elegant parlor without danger of injury to the most delicate article. I would also further state that I have been a practitioner of medicine for the past twenty years, and am forty-eight years of age, and to-day I claim that I am a well woman, thanks to Mrs. Sweetland.

MRS. ANNA ALDRICH.

CHAS. J. GRIER, Notary Public.

Buffalo, Oct. 25th 1884.

MRS. M. J. SWEETLAND,

MADAM,—I deem it my duty to let you know of the beneficial results of your treatment upon my head. Three years ago I suffered terribly with severe headaches. My hair began falling out. The headaches continued for over two years. At that time the top of my head was perfectly bald. I was placed under the care of physicians who exhausted their medical skill without giving me the slightest relief. Last spring I was advised to try your method of restoring the hair and subduing headeches. The result was wonderful. To my intense joy the headache departed and the hair began to grow over the bald space. Now I am pleased to say I am possessed with a luxuriant and healthy growth of hair, and entirely free from headaches. I can conscientously recommend your treatment.

Yours, etc.,
ANNIE HASTINGS,
218 Genesee street.

WONDERFUL CURE OF CANCER OF EIGHTEEN YEARS STANDING.

Mrs. M. D. Bouton, of No. 335 E st Swan st., Buffalo, New York, hearing of Mrs. Sweetland's success in mastering disease decided to undergo a painful carriage ride to her office, and place herself under the care of this wonderful woman. Mrs. Sweetland, by her strong magnetic or will power, gave her instant relief to the gratification and surprise of Mrs. Bouton. At this writing, seven weeks after the first treatment, Mrs. B. can walk and ride with ease and has gained fifteen pounds. The color returned to her face and the cancer reduced to a small speck which is kept open for the exudation of whatever fluid necessary to be removed.

CONDUCTOR M. D. BOUTON,
Buffalo, N. Y.

Warren, Pa., Oct. 21, 1884.

I was suffering with severe pains in my head and great heat, which caused my hair to fall out and created much dandruff. Hearing that Mrs. Sweetland was at the Carver house, I visited her and received one of her wonderful treatments. It has entirely removed the pain and dandruff. I also suffered severe pain in my back. I now have no pain in my back and feel that I am cured by this method of treatment. I sincerely recommend this lady to all who are afflicted.

MRS. ALSON ROGERS.

A WONDERFUL CURE.

Mrs. Thomas E. Metzgar, of this place, has been for the past two years badly afflicted with a throat and lung trouble which her friends thought would in the end lead her to a consumptive's grave. Her eyesight was also so badly impaired that she could not see distinctly without the use of glasses, and she had tried many physicians without relief. She heard of Mrs. Sweetland, and visited her at her rooms in the Carver house, put herself under that remarkable lady's care and received her wonderful and health-giving treatment. Mrs. Metzgar can now see to thread a needle without the use of glasses, and her throat and lung trouble is rapidly disappearing. She says she feels like a new woman and advises all her friends similarly afflicted to visit her benefactor, Mrs. Sweetland.

The steamer Remora broke her shaft the other day, near her fishing grounds Dog river, L. S. The captain at once started in a small boat for the Sault to procure assistance. At last accounts the steamer was drifting helplessly near the scene of the accident, about 70 miles from here. A tug was sent to pick her up and bring her to this place for repairs.—Sault Democrat.

A Charlevoix correspondent of the Grand Rapids Democrat says "the better class of citizens of the county say Boyne City is the proper place for the county seat." This is a severe reflection on some good men who honestly voted the other way. It looks now, however, as though the question was not settled forever, and those "better citizens" may get left after all, though they have the supreme court of the state of Michigan to sustain them.

Mrs. Annie Aldrich, wife of Capt. A. G. Aldrich, so well known throughout this part of the State, and who has been a sufferer from sciatic rheumatism and nervous prostration attests through her sworn statement in another column of having been entirely cured by a single bath and treatment by Mrs. M. J. Sweetland, of the Metaphysical Bethesda. This with the letter from E. H. Green to H. B. Chapman, would indicate the beginning of a successful business for the institution.

Statistics are not always amusing, but often suggestive especially those of the dead-letter office. 4,500,000 letters were last year sent to the dead letter office for various reasons; of which 3,500,000 were unclaimed letters, 112,650 were returned from hotels, 314,700 were mis-directed, 133,600 were held for unpaid postage, 14,134 were without address. Of these 4,044,845 were opened, 1,518,825 returned to writers, and 2,556,990 destroyed, 17,385 of the above letters contained money; 20,260, drafts; 34,400, receipts, paid notes, etc., and 85,000 contained postage stamps.

Attorney General Taggart has been handled vigorously and pointedly by Gov. Swineford in his open letter. Mr. Taggart is not personally a vindictive man. But he is pliable and in his position has undoubtedly been influenced by political motives. He has got himself into an unpleasant predicament, for his charges against Gov. Swineford were like chaff in the opinions of the discriminating and republican senatorial committee. Mr. Taggart may reply, but like the man and his whole course in this personal and political persecution, it will be weak and vascillating. Gov. Swineford invites suit against him and, it is hoped it will be brought, that righteous judgment may be meted to his persecutors.—Kalamazoo Gazette.

Boyne Falls Fishing.

BOYNE FALLS, July 11.—Your correspondent has little to write about except that the fishing here is the best and easiest to be found in northern Michigan. Large and beautiful speckled trout are caught within sight of the Boyne Falls house morning and evening. We want you to say that this is the place for everybody going to Charlevoix to get off the G. R. & I. road. Six miles by stage from here brings you to Boyne City where a steamer is waiting to carry passengers down Pine Lake—the handsomest inland lake in Michigan—to the beautiful Charlevoix resort.—Telegram Herald.

Wedding Bells.

Married, in Petoskey, July 20, at the residence of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Orser, by Rev. Mr. Sherman, of the M. E. church, Dorland Osborn and Miss Kitty Orser.

Miss Orser will be remembered by very many of our citizens as having rendered such efficient services a year ago last winter in training our young people for and assisting in the rendition of the cantata of "Lost and Saved," and "Little Red Riding Hood," also as officiating at the organ and occasionally constituting the entire choir in the M. E. church in this place during her sojourn among us.

The marriage ceremony was performed at nine o'clock in the evening, at the conclusion of which the company repaired to the dining room and partook of a sumptuous repast of good ties.

Among the wedding guests were Rev. Mr. Sherman and wife, Rev. Mr. Joslyn and wife, of Adrian; Mr. J. H. Joslyn, of Adrian; Mr. Arthur Joslyn, of Adrian; Miss Hattie Joslyn, of Adrian; Miss Joslyn, of Grand Rapids; Mr. and Mrs. D. C. Loveday and family, of Charlevoix; Miss Lottie Cameron, of Albion; Miss Hattie Orser, of Grand Rapids; Mr. and Mrs. R. M. Orser, of Edmore; Mrs. R. W. Smith and daughter, of Stanton; Mr. and Mrs. Call, of Petoskey; Mr. and Mrs. Lawton, of Petoskey; Prof. and Mrs. Ewing, of Petoskey; Mr. and Mrs. Guinon, of Petoskey; Mr. and Mrs. M. C. Orser, of Petoskey; Mr. and Mrs. Hunsberger, of Petoskey; Miss Horner, of Petoskey; and others.

After supper the company passed a few hours in social convesation interspersed with very fine music both vocal and instrumental.

THE WAY WE DID IT.

BY WILLIAM HAUGHTON.

We made our home as bright and fair
  As willing hands could make it,
It laughed with sunshine everywhere,
And many a cozy nook was there
  When Maggie came to take it;
Just such a spot where love might dwell,
And loyal hearts protect it well.

But, oh! the sunlight and the song,
  The heaven of joy that thrilled it;
The love that made its life so strong,
And shed sweet music all day long,
  Was one dear life that filled it;
Sweet angel by the hearth was she,
Who gave her girlhood love to me.

The shadows fall, as fall they must;
  The tempest raved around us;—
Full many a hope lay in the dust,
And yet our faith looked up in trust
  To Him whose blessing found us—
We shut the door in sorrow's face
And kept for love the inner place.

We called our troubles kinder names,
  And put them in love's keeping—
We heard, but laughed at pleasure's claims,
At fortune, worst of fickle dames,
  And kissed away our weeping—
We took life's burdens, heart to heart,
Each seeking most the heavier part.

Some day the Master's voice will call,
  And one of us must hear it—
Pale death and darkness, shroud and pall,
May come, but will not end it all—
  We wait, but do not fear it,
For parted hands again will press,
The hands they love, in blessedness.

THE TRAIN-WRECKERS.

BY CAPTAIN JAMES MONTFORD.

"During the winter of 1861-2 a continual warfare was kept up in Missouri with the guerrilla bands.

"They are the most terrible pests of a country, even when anxious to defend it, and the ordinary guerrilla is a friend to no one but himself.

"I was often out upon the chase, and several fierce skirmishes took place. A band of guerrillas had taken possession of the Missouri Railroad, and burned the bridges, tore up the rails, and brought about a desolation that half a dozen battles would not have caused.

"I met with an adventure at this time which evidences the bloody and ruthless character of these outlaws.

"I think it was about the last of December that I started from the command for a small station some twenty miles distant.

"I had business with a gentleman in the village, and rode across the country, intending to leave my horse—I owned a good one at the time—with my acquaintance, and return with the supply train, which was expected at that time.

"The day was as bad a one as I could have well chosen; the bleak air swept over prairies, chilling horse and man to the very bone.

"I should have waited for a fairer day; but the train was expected up in the morning, I was anxious to go, and had already been delayed several days.

"So I started early, and rode along cheerfully enough for the first five miles, when a genuine Western storm arose, and began to rage with the fury that is only witnessed in those treeless districts.

"I was soon soaked through to the skin, the rain beat upon my face fiercely, and I wished myself back at camp, or anywhere else out of the storm.

"I believe we were five hours traveling the succeeding five miles, and at the end of that time I was nearly frozen.

"The fear of losing my way added still more to my distress, for there were no fences or other landmarks, and the ground was being fast covered by the beating snow, which succeeded the rain.

"My clothing was frozen stiff, and the neck and breast of my horse was covered with sheets of frozen breath and blood which had oozed from his swollen nostrils.

"I must find shelter, I thought, or perish in the most horrible manner.

"Suddenly I noticed smoke arising in the distance. No house was visible, and it has seemed remarkable to me that I observed the smoke; a fortunate chance was the cause, perhaps.

"No house was to be seen, the place was in the hollow of the prairie, and I rode within twenty rods of the door ere I saw the way.

"Getting off the horse with difficulty, my limbs had become stiffened with cold, I was about to approach the house, when it occurred to me that it would be as well to reconnoiter a little.

"A band of outlaws might be harboring there, and then I would wish myself outside again, cold as it was.

"Speaking kindly to the horse, who stretched his nose against me for warmth, I fastened the bridle to a shrub and stole cautiously toward the house.

"Making a circuit, I approached from the back of the building. It was a poor affair, the habitation of a prairie farmer, evidently; but there was shelter for man and beast.

"As I came up the door at the side opened. I had but time to escape around the corner when three men issued out.

"They were rough looking fellows, warmly clad, and I at once concluded to give them a wide berth.

"With some imprecations at the weather, they hurried to the stable, which fronted the road.

"When they reappeared it was upon fleet-looking horses, and they then rode away toward the north.

"I watched them out of sight, and then approached the cabin again. Listening, I could hear no one, and conceived that the place was untenanted.

"I resolved to take advantage of the shelter, and hastening back to my poor horse I soon left him munching hay in the little stable, and myself hurried on to the house.

"I was nearly ready to drop with fatigue and cold, and, waiting for no ceremony, I opened the door and entered.

A fire was burning on one side of the poorly furnished apartment, and hurrying forward I spread out my person to the blaze.

"I had seen no one as yet, but a voice sounded from a back room a moment later.

"'Is that you, Carl?" asked a woman's voice.

"I explained that I was a traveler, nearly frozen, and had taken the liberty to enter the house, as I saw no one about.

"A tall, wrinkled old woman, with a very erect carriage, came in from the kitchen.

"She looked at me searchingly, as I made my excuses, and I thought a sad expression appeared upon her face. What could it mean, or was I mistaken?

"I decided that the latter was the case, and lying back in the hard chair, I enjoyed the fire as a man only can when he has been chilled through to the bone.

"My dozing was broken by the sound of voices outside; men were approaching the house. The old woman seemed to shrink with fear as she heard the sound.

"Rising to my feet, expecting some disaster, I placed my hand upon my pistol and waited.

"The door opened, and twenty men, I counted them as they came in singly, filed into the room.

"They were all armed with rifles, and an entire arsenal of small arms, and I knew I was in the presence of a band of guerrillas.

"There was no help for it, however, the men had seen my horse, and doubtless knew my character.

"'Put up your shooter and surrender,' said a tall, red-headed man, who seemed the leader. 'You shan't be hurt so long as you remain quiet.'

"'But who are you?' I returned with as much resolution as I could summon up. 'It would not be policy to surrender until I know to whom I——'

"A loud laugh from the entire crowd cut off my speech.

"'That's a good one,' said the tall individual. 'T'was jist lettin' you down kinder easy 'cause you cum into my place unawares. We can kill you easy enough, if you insist upon it.'

"I did not. Resistance would be the last thing I should attempt against such overpowering numbers.

"I handed over my weapons to the leader, and he ordered two of the gang to take me into the back-room and watch while they conferred together.

"I passed nearly an hour in the back-room, listening to the talk going forward in front. From the broken words I heard I pieced out the following:

"The supply train, due to-morrow, was to pass this afternoon, and the outlaws were plotting its destruction.

"The track was nearly a mile from the house, and the leader concluded to go at last. He entered the room where I sat, and ordered the guards to watch me closely.

"One of them pleaded so strongly to go upon the expedition that the leader submitted, and when the men left I was alone with the old woman and the single robber.

"My own fears and troubles had been swallowed up by the more important news I had received regarding the train.

"It was quite valuable, besides being much required by the troops at the time. There were several officers on board, also, and their capture or death would be a great loss.

"To shorten a long story, I had a flask of liquor in my pocket; the outlaw had a larger in his own possession, and he also had an appetite for a larger quantity than was obtainable.

"He drank up the liquor in his own flask in a very few minutes, and my own followed immediately afterward.

"As might have been expected, the cold and the liquor threw him in a drunken slumber. I now decided to leave the house at any risk.

"The old woman had remained in the front room. Slowly I drew away the ruffian's weapons. I had been left unbound, and warned by my own escape, I proceeded to secure the fellow without awakening him. I then entered the front room and prevailed with the old lady to allow me to serve her in the same way.

"Five minutes later I had mounted my horse and was riding at break-neck speed toward the railroad track.

"I heard the engine whistle shrilly as I left the stable, and knew the probabilities were against my reaching the spot in time to do any good.

"I rode with the speed of the wind over the snow-covered ground, and came into view of the track just as the train halted.

"Running the steed back, I looked at the cars; they were already in the possession of the outlaws.

"A couple of the men had gone up the track with a red flag, and had halted the train—in an ambush of their fellows.

"They jumped on board, with shouts and screams of triumph, while the bullets rattled fiercely.

"Disappointed that I had not been a few minutes earlier, I watched the rascals.

"The soldiers upon the train were soon all dead or prisoners, and then the outlaws left the cars.

"Standing together in a body, they consulted for a moment, and then the engine was uncoupled, two men leaped upon it and drove down the track.

"I watched them with bated breath. What did they intend to do? It was soon explained.

"The locomotive was stopped again a few miles away, then the lever was thrown back, and the engine rushed back upon the cars with the speed of the avalanche.

"A moment, and it collided with the foremost car, plowed its way through, and soon the valuable supply train was but a mass of smoking ruins."

The Colonel stopped and drew a long breath.

"I tell you it was a thrilling night," he said, after a moment; "but the guerrillas soon paid for the damage.

"I escaped without difficulty, and reached camp again that night. The following week witnessed the destruction of that band of bushwhackers, for the soldiers were maddened by the loss of their supplies and rested not a moment until they revenged it."

Friendly Advice to the President.

HUDSON, Wis., June 3, 1886.

The Hon. Grover Cleveland, Washington, D. C.—MY DEAR SIR: You have now assumed a new duty and taken upon yourself an additional responsibility. Not content with the great weight of national affairs, sufficient to crush any other pachyderm, you have cheerfully and almost gleefully become a married man. While I cannot agree with you politically, Grover, I am forced to admire your courage.

This morning a new life opens out to you—the life of a married man. It is indeed a humiliating situation. To be a President of the United States, the roustabout of a free people, is a trying situation; but to be a newly married President, married in the full glare of official life, with the eye of a divided constituency upon you, is to place yourself where nerve is absolutely essential.

I, too, am married, but not under such trying circumstances. Others have been married and still lived, but it has remained for you, Mr. President, young as you are, to pose as a newly wedded President and to take your new mother-in-law into the Cabinet with you. For this reason, I say freely that to walk a slack rope across the moist brow of Niagara and carry a nervous man in a wheelbarrow sinks into a mere commonplace. Daniel playing "tag" with a denful of half-starved lions becomes an historic cipher, and the Hebrew children, sitting on a rosy bed of red-hot clinkers in the fiery furnace, are almost forgotten.

With a large wad of civil service wedged in among your back teeth, a larger fragment, perhaps, than you were prepared to masticate when you bit it off; with an ugonized Southern Democracy and a clamorous Northern constituency; with disappointment poorly concealed among your friends and hilarity openly expressed by your enemies; with the snarl of the vanquished Mr. Davis, who was at one time a sort of President himself, as he rolls up future majorities for your foes; with a lot of sharp-witted journalists walking all over you every twenty-four hours, and climbing up your stalwart frame with their telegraph-repair boots on, I am surprised, Grover, honestly, as between man and man, that you should have tried to add housekeeping to all this other agony. Had you been young and tender under the wings I might have understood it; but you must admit, in the quiet and sanctity of your own home, Grover, that you are no gosling. You have arrived at man's estate. You have climbed the barbed-wire fence which separates the fluff and bloom and blossom and bumble-bees of impetuous youth from the yellow fields and shadowy orchards of middle life. You now stand in the full glare of life's meridian. You are entering upon a new experience. Possibly you think that because you are President the annoyance peculiar to the life of a new, green groom will not reach you. Do not fool yourself in this manner. Others have made the same mistake. Position, wealth, and fame cannot shut out the awkward and trying circumstances which attend the married man even as the sparks are prone to fly upward.

It will seem odd to you at first, Mr. President, after the affairs of the nation have been put aside for the day and the Government fire-proof safe locked up for the night, to go up to your boudoir and converse with a bride with one corner of her mouth full of pins. A man may write a pretty fair message to Congress, one that will be accepted and printed all over the country, and yet he may not be fitted to hold a conversation with one corner of a woman's mouth while the other is filled with pins. To some men it is given to be great as statesmen, while to others it is given to be fluent conversationalists under these circumstances.

Mr. President, I may be taking a great liberty in writing to you and touching upon your private affairs, but I noticed that everybody else was doing it, and so I have nerved myself up to write to you, having once been a married man myself, though not, as I said, under the same circumstances. When I was married I was only a plain justice of the peace, plodding quietly along and striving to do my duty. You was then sheriff of your county. Little did we think in those days that now you would be a freshly married President, and I the author of several pieces which have been printed in the papers. Little did we think then, when I was a justice of the peace in Wyoming and you a sheriff in New York, that to-day your timothy lawn would be kicked all to pieces by your admiring constituents, while I would be known and loved wherever the English language is tampered with.

So we have risen together, you to a point from which you may be easily observed and flayed alive by the newspapers, while I am the same pleasant, unassuming, gentlemanly friend of the poor that I was when only a Justice of the Peace and comparatively unknown.

I cannot close this letter without expressing a wish that your married life may be a joyous one, as the paper at Laramie has said, "and that no cloud may ever come to mar the horizon of your wedded bliss." (This sentence is not my own. I copy it verbatim from a wedding notice of my own written by a Western journalist who is now at the Old Woman's Home.)

Mr. President, I hope you will not feel that I have been too forward in writing to you personally over my own name. I mean to do what is best for you. You can truly say that all I have ever done in this way has been for your good. I speak in a plain way sometimes, but I don't beat about the bush. I see that you do not want to have any engrossed bills sent to you for a couple of weeks.

That's the way I was. I told all my creditors to withhold their engrossed bills during my honeymoon, as I was otherwise engrossed. This remark made me a great many friends and added to my large circle of creditors. It was afterward printed in a foreign paper and explained in a supplement of eight pages.

We are all pretty well here at home. I may go to Washington this fall if I can sell a block of stock in the Pauper's Dream, a rich gold claim of mine in Elk Mountain. It is a very rich claim, but needs capital to develop it. (This remark is not original with me. I quote from an exchange.)

If I do come over to Washington do not let that make any difference in your plans. If I thought your wife would send out to the neighbors and borrow dishes and such things on my account I would not go a step.

Remember that I have not grown cold toward you just because you have married. You will find me the kind of a friend who will not desert you just when you are in trouble. Yours, as heretofore,

BILL NYE.

P. S.—I send you to-day a card-receiver. It looks like silver. Do not let your wife bear on too hard when she polishes it. I was afraid you might try to start into keeping house without a card-receiver, so I bought this yesterday. When I got married I forgot to buy a card-receiver, and I guess we would have frozen to death before we could have purchased one, but friends were more thoughtful, and there were nine of them among the gifts. If you decide that it would not be proper for you to receive presents, you may return the card-receiver to me or put it in the cellar-way till I come over over there this fall. B. N.

Light Two Miles Under Water.

In the Lake of Geneva Messrs. Fol and Sarasin found sufficient light to affect very sensitive photographic plates at about five hundred and fifty feet the light at that depth being about equal at mid-day to that at the surface on a clear moonless night. In the Mediterranean during bright sunlight the last trace of light was lost at a depth of 1,500 feet. But an examination of the eyes of certain crustaceans lately dredged from the abyssmal regions of the Atlantic convinces Prof. S. I. Smith that despite the objections of physicists, some light probably reaches even beyond 12,000 feet. He thinks that, on account of the purity of the water in mid-ocean, light might reach this depth as readily as 3,000 feet or even 1,200 feet near the shore.

THE PURCHASE OF ALASKA.

History of the Purchase—President Lincoln Alone Should Have Credit for It.

I have lately seen it in print for the first time that Wm. H. Seward said that the one act of his life most to be proud of was the acquisition of Alaska. This, to those who are not ignorant of the facts, is a remarkable claim. As I was minister plenipotentiary from the United States at St. Petersburg, Russia, during the time of the purchase and addition of Alaska to the Union, and Seward Secretary of State—however, we might both claim to be the peers of Lincoln in ability—Lincoln was our chief, and the honor of that expansion of territory belongs to him. It is the general-in-chief who wears the laurels of victory, however gallantly his subordinates may have fought. So far, then, as Seward and myself are concerned, I lay the facts before the world for the award of honor.

Collins, having explored the route from America, through Alaska, the Aleutian Isles, and Siberia to St. Petersburg, united with Sibley, the President of the Western Union Telegraph Company, to extend their line to the Russian capital. They placed this project in my hands, and I got a very favorable charter from the Russian Government, one clause of which was the privilege of a "rebate," or gratuity, in common phrase, for all words transmitted from the Pacific to St. Petersburg on Russian lines. Another project of mine was to secure to American citizens the perpetual lease of the splendid coal mines on the island of Saghalien, on the eastern coast of Russia. A third was a grant of the Russian Fur Company's privileges—for an equivalent—to an American company, in the vast regions of Alaska. Heretofore the Russian Pacific coast was not open even to foreign consulships, but an American consulship was now allowed.

These projects of mine were all cognate. The telegraph would free us from dependence on the enemies of the Union by lines in our own possession. The coal mines of Saghalien were almost a necessity of our commerce with China, Japan, and the Corea. And our acquisitions in Alaska would offer a combined force of Americans and Russians against a war with England, which then seemed imminent. Collins and Sibley asked not only for a right of way through Alaska, but for land grants for the lines and stations, all of which were freely discussed by me and Russian officials in a private and personal way. I found the resources of Alaska to be beyond price in minerals, and fisheries, and forests, and furs, and commercial promise. I wrote to Gov. John A. Andrew, of Massachusetts, and other distinguished citizens and capitalists about these projects. A company was formed in San Francisco, and I was engaged to contract with the Russian Fur Company for a transfer of its chartered rights to the Americans.

Everything was favorable, when Seward opened up his unfortunate Perkins claim and completely disgusted the Russian autocrat and Gortchakoff with American projects. The Saghalien enterprise was cut short. The telegraph line was refused the "rebate" and dropped out, notwithstanding Collins, Sibley, and I did all we could to have the terms confirmed which had been made by the Minister of Telegraphs, Count Tolstoi.

Still, the advantages of the transfer of Alaska were so apparent that, having sounded the Russian authorities, I had formal meetings with the Russian Fur Company, and the terms were all agreed upon. When the news came that Alaska was purchased outright by the United States, Seward sent me a treaty upon "trade marks," which I signed and delivered; but he negotiated the Alaska purchase, for which he had no more reason to claim credit than for Jefferson's acquisition of Louisiana. There was no American so odious to the Russians as Seward, and I had worked up the project and cultured the tree until the fruit was ripe and fell, by the necessity of the case, into his basket.—C. M. Clay, in New York Sun.

Fish by the Square Mile.

Some faint idea of the vast and inexhaustible number of fish on our shores may, perhaps, be obtained by a consideration of the fact that yesterday no fewer than 6,000 barrels of porgies were caught off Newport. If the sea, through the Vineyard and Long Island Sound is anywhere near as rich in porgies, mossbunkers, and other varieties of the most abundant kinds of fish, what an unimaginably teeming world of life there must be beneath the waves! And it is, even more than the striving, pushing world of human life, a scene of rapacity and destruction—the stronger preying upon the weaker and "the survival of the fittest." Enormous as this single day's catch of porgies seems, it is surpassed by some of the big hauls of bony-fish or mossbunkers—the "whitefish" of the evil-smelling fish oil mills on the shore. These creatures actually swarm in millions and are caught and hauled in by the cargo. Schools of voracious blue-fish pursue and drive them flipping and flashing to the surface, where they are promptly pounced upon by the sailing fish hawks and sea-gulls that wait for them out of water. In the sea and on the land the world seems to be a scene of shark and tiger, in one or another form of destructive rapacity.—Hartford Times.

LITTLE is known of the effect of solar eclipses on our atmosphere. To add to our knowledge, Norwegian seamen happening to be in favorable localities have been requested to make barometric and thermometric observations during the total eclipse of August 29 next.

How They Get Confused in Washington

Col. Smith was the guest of Congressman Belford, in Washington, and was returning to his hotel late one night when he lost his way. While browsing about in an aimless, inane sort of a manner, he encountered a policeman.

"'Scuse me, my frien'," said Col. Smith, "but can you tell mé which izee opposite side o' ze street?"

"Why," explained the policeman, "it's over there—the other side."

"Zat's what I thought," said Col. Smith, "but while I was walking over there a few minutes 'go, I asked a man an' he told me zis wazzee opp'site side!"—Eli Perkins.

The Pages of Congress.

Fifty of the brightest boys of the United States are employed at the national Capitol as pages to Congress. Little fellows of from twelve to sixteen years of age, each with a round, shining silver badge on the lapel of his coat labeled with his number, they run in and out of the halls, now darting through the aisles under the very nose of a member who is making a great speech, now carrying great armfuls of documents to one Congressman, and now with a letter to post for another, bringing a glass of water to the man who is speaking.

Here one is moving about with a great album in which he asks each of the members to write his name; and there are others busy taking the cards of ladies in the reception-rooms to some Congressman whom they wish to call out.

The pages of Congress are gathered from the four quarters of the United States. They are chosen by the sergeants-at-arms of each House, and represent nearly every State. The pay of a page is two dollars and a half a day, for the session, including Sundays, though there is no work for them on that day. They generally save some of their money, but they must spend enough of it to keep themselves well dressed. They do not have a very hard time, and on ordinary days their hours are from 9 o'clock until the House adjourns, at four or five. About half of their Saturdays are holidays, as the Congress often adjourns Friday over to Monday.

The daily sessions begin at noon, but the boys must be present earlier and file each Congressman's bills for him. After Congress meets they have plenty to do in running errands. During a night session they grow very sleepy, and as a general thing they are not asked to remain. When a member wants a page he claps his hands, and the pages, who, when not busy, are generally standing about the clerk's desk, in front of the House, or sitting on the stairs leading to the Speaker's chair, run to him for their orders.

There are thirty-six pages in the House of Representatives, and fourteen in the Senate. Two of the House pages are mounted, and it is their duty to carry letters and messages on horseback for Congressmen from the Capitol building to all parts of the city. They ride to the Capitol, put the letters in a pouch, which they carry by a strap across their shoulders, and then ride off for answers to them.

Sometimes these boys carry notes to the President, sometimes to the Secretary of War, sometimes to the Attorney General, and, in fact, to all the great departments of the Government. They enjoy their work, and they are a little envied by the boys who stay under cover. Speaker Carlisle, the tall, grave, smooth-faced man who presides over the House, has a page for himself, as have also the sergeant-at-arms of the House and its clerk.

The pages are chosen by the sergeant-at-arms of the two Houses, and before they are admitted to work they must take the oath of allegiance to the United States.

Is the position a good one for the boys? Well, on the whole, and for, perhaps, one session, yes. The associations are not bad, and if bad boys are discovered among those chosen, they are quickly dismissed for fear they may corrupt the others. The duties of a page compel him to be polite and gentlemanly, and he learns a great deal. During the recesses of the House they often discuss among themselves bills and questions which would be thought beyond their comprehension, and they delight in aping their Congressional masters.—Youth's Companion.

Wail of a Crusty Old Bachelor.

What is married but mismated—too often marred? Nature plays many high old quips and quirks. She wraps gratitude and affection in the hide of a dog, and swaddles baseness and brutality in broadcloth and fine linen. She permits two-legged donkeys to bray in our legislative halls and dine at our Delmonicos, while their superiors in every worthy quality and qualification munch coarse straw in a thousand unchinked country stables. She builds quadrupedal men and bipedal swine. But all her oddest, maddest freaks are tame and rational compared with the wild whimises of love and marriage. Look where you will, what a world of tangles and misfits. All jumbled, lop-sided, ill assorted and middlety-flummixed. No incongruity is too crazy, no vagary too monstrous. Eagles mate with moles, and swans with hedgehogs. Tom Thumbs pine for she Goliaths. Sons of Anak wed human humming-birds. Mighty-brained heroes and statesmen rave over little butterflies, puny wax dolls, taffy-faced pygmies; and women who would grace a court ally themselves with counter-hoppers, numbskulls and boobies. Kings bow down to ballet dancers and queens take refuge in the arms of cooks and coachmen. Who ever heard of a half-dozen Presidents' wives. While Andrew Jackson ran the White House like an emperor, his old wife, for whom he murdered Dickinson, smoked her cob pipe in the backwoods of Tennessee. Where are, and where have been, all the Mr. Hemanses, Mr. Ristoris, Mr. Harriet Beecher Stowes and Mr. Jennie Junes? Every fellow gets the wrong woman, and no woman gets the right fellow. And in all lands and climes, in every condition and estate, the Cupid-wounded, hymen-bound gosling and goslingess have a hard road to travel to a paradise of squash—an imaginary elysium, whose roses are too often rue. To love is to be ecstatically miserable. To court is to vibrate between the orthodox and the Japanese hells—from a hell of fire to a hell of ice. To marry is to plunge headlong into both at once, and to take the chances of looking forever like one-half of a Carolina chariot team, which usually consists of a blind jack and a mooly cow, or a scrubby calf and a knock-kneed jennet. Marriage has been likened to flies on a dining-room window—all on the outside are butting their heads against the glass to get in, and all on the inside are butting their heads against it to get out; and, go which way it will, there is always a pane ahead of them. In view of all the chances, the only wonder is that any flies are foolish enough to want to get in.—Col. Pat Donan.

His Mother.

Captain Jack Crawford, the poet scout, pays the following eloquent tribute to his mother: "I had a Christian mother, my earliest recollections of whom was kneeling at her side praying God to save a wayward father and husband. That mother taught me to speak the truth when a child, and I have tried to follow her early teachings in that respect. It would require a much larger book than this to tell the story of my life and the sufferings of one of God's good angels—my mother. To her I owe everything—truth, honor, sobriety, and my very life. Her spirit seems to linger near me always; she has been my guardian angel. In the camp, the cabin, the field and the hospital, on the lonely trail hundreds of miles from civilization, in the pine-clad hills and lonely canyons, I have heard in the moaning night winds and in the murmuring streamlets,

The voice of my angel mother whispering soft and low.

"And these sacred thoughts have made me forget at times that there was danger in my pathway. Nor will I ever forget

The day that we parted, mother and I,
Never on earth to meet again;
She to a happier home on high,
I a poor wanderer on the plain.

"That day was perhaps the greatest epoch in my life. Kneeling by her bedside, with one hand clasped in mine, the other resting on my head, she whispered, 'My boy, you know your mother loves you. Will you give me a promise that I may take it up to heaven?' 'Yes, yes, mother, I will promise you anything.' 'Johnny, my son, I am dying,' said she; promise me that you will never drink intoxicants, and then it will not be so hard to leave this world." Dear reader, need I tell you that I promised 'yes;' and whenever I am asked to drink, that scene comes up before me and I am safe."—Ex.

A Heartless Boy.

Boys of a certain age are sometimes singularly lacking in every sentiment of tenderness and feeling. When arrived at this trying age, boys are a source of infinite terror and mortification to their family and friends.

They have no secrets; they tell everything they know and more too.

A lady tells the following story in illustration of the lack of feeling manifested by a certain hobble-de-hoy boy at a time of general sorrow among other members of his family.

"The family was poor and ignorant," says the lady. "I heard one day that an older daughter of the family had died suddenly, and I went over to the house to see if I could be of any assistance.

"I found the entire family, with the exception of a boy 10 of years, giving way to the most violent grief. There was such a hubbub I could hardly make myself heard when I spoke.

"After nearly an hour's effort I succeeded in quieting the family down, and was about to take my departure when a girl of 15 or 16 suddenly glanced over her shoulder in the direction of the corpse and screamed out:

"'Oh, my poor sister Nanny!' The boy referred to scowled furiously, clenched his fist, and flying across the room gave the weeping girl a vigorous blow, saying as he did so:

"'Now, you! you want to start maw up again', hey?'

"His reproof came too late. 'Maw' was 'started up again',' and all my efforts to calm her and the rest of the screaming family were unavailing."—Detroit Free Press.

Canvas-Back.

"What kind of a fowl do you call this?" asked a boarder of a K street landlady, as he sawed away at a piece on his plate.

"Why, Mr. Jones, that's duck—the real genuine canvas-back," she answered in indignant astonishment.

"Canvas-back, eh?" he queried. "Well, I should say the canvas had slipped around in front. Bring me a pair of scissors."—Washington Critic.

MEN in the lumbering camps of Northern Maine and Canada have to depend so largely upon salted foods that they have a great craving for acids, and if they can not get raspberries or blueberries will seek and eat with avidity the large black ants which can be readily found in decayed timber.—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Restful Nights, Days Free from Torture, await the rheumatic sufferer who resorts to Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. That this benignant cordial and deprurent is a far more reliable remedy than colchicum and other poisons used to expel the rheumatic virus from the blood, is a fact that experience has satisfactorily demonstrated. It also enjoys the advantage of being—unlike them—perfectly safe. With many persons a certain predisposition to rheumatism exists, which renders them liable to its attacks after exposure, in wet weather, to currents of air, changes of temperature, or to cold when the body is hot. Such persons should take a wineglass or two of the Bitters as soon as possible after incurring risk from the above causes, as this superb protective effectually nullifies the hurtful influence. For the functional derangements which accompany rheumatism, such as colic, spasms in the stomach, palpitation of the heart, imperfect digestion, etc., the Bitters is also a most useful remedy. It is only necessary in obstinate cases to use it with persistency.

He Ought to Pay Some of Them.

A gentleman met Senator Beck for the first time in a dozen years, and the greeting was cordial.

"Ah, Senator," said the friend, "you don't look a day older than you did the last time I saw you."

"I'm a little grayer, possibly," suggested the Senator, with a pleased smile.

"You are looking in excellent health, too," pursued the friend.

"Thank you. And do you know," continued the Senator, "that I am 64 years old and I never paid but one doctor's bill in my life, and that for a broken arm.

"Is that so?" asked the friend in surprise.

"Fact, I assure you."

"Well, Senator," said the friend, with a significant smile, "don't you think it is almost time you were paying some of them and preserving your credit?"

The Senator moved for an executive session and presented a bill of exceptions.—Washington Critic.

We called in a family physician, but he failed to do her any good. At this time a friend who had been cured by DR. WM. HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS advised me to give it a trial. We then got a bottle, and she began to improve, and by the use of three bottles was entirely cured."

Advice to Consumptives.

On the appearance of the first symptoms—as general debility, loss of appetite, pallor, chilly sensations, followed by night-sweats and cough—prompt measures for relief should be taken. Consumption is scrofulous disease of the lungs; therefore use the great anti-scrofula, or blood-purifier and strength-restorer,—Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery." A QUESTION ABOUT

Brown's Iron Bitters

ANSWERED.

The question has probably been asked thousands of times, "How can Brown's Iron Bitters cure everything?" Well, it doesn't. But it does cure any disease for which a reputable physician would prescribe IRON. Physicians recognize Iron as the best restorative agent known to the profession, and inquiry of any leading chemical firm will substantiate the assertion that there are more preparations of iron than of any other substance used in medicine. This shows conclusively that iron is acknowledged to be the most important factor in successful medical practice. It is, however, a remarkable fact, that prior to the discovery of BROWN'S IRON BITTERS no perfectly satisfactory iron combination had ever been found. BROWN'S IRON BITTERS does not injure the teeth, cause headache, or produce constipation—all other iron medicines do. BROWN'S IRON BITTERS cures Indigestion, Biliousness, Weakness, Dyspepsia, Malaria, Chills and Fevers, Tired Feeling, General Debility, Pain in the Side, Back or Limbs, Headache and Neuralgia—for all these ailments Iron is prescribed daily. BROWN'S IRON BITTERS, however, does not cure in a minute. Like all other thorough medicines, it acts slowly. When taken by men the first symptom of benefit is renewed energy. The muscles then become firmer, the digestion improves, the bowels are active. In women the effect is usually more rapid and marked. The eyes begin at once to brighten; the skin clears up; healthy color comes to the cheeks; nervousness disappears; functional derangements become regular, and if a nursing mother, abundant sustenance is supplied for the child. Remember Brown's Iron Bitters is the ONLY iron medicine that is not injurious. Physicians and Druggists recommend it.

Our Appeal to the Young.

BY W. JENNINGS DEMOREST.

Of the many and devious paths that are open to youthful feet, none are so dangerous as the temptation to alcoholic drink; wine, beer, or cider, whiskey, brandy or gin, and a numerous and long list of names that are applied to the various kinds of stimulating drink, all containing more or less poison—poison for the stomach, poison for the brain, poison for the body, poison for the mind, poison for to-day, poison lasting through to-morrow, and poison that will burst our hopes for all eternity. Poison for ourselves, poison for our homes, poison for our country, and every department of life, every stage of progress and all our interest, both for the present and the future, are blighted and blasted by this hideous consuming curse of rum. And the most responsible parties are those who offer the allurements—the rum-seller, whether this be in a gilded saloon or in one of the lowest dens of our city.

If the liquor traffic is annihilated by a majority of your votes, if rum selling is outlawed, and to sell intoxicating liquor is made a crime, and the people combine to enforce such provisions of law, this will banish the vile stuff out of the city and all over the country, then we shall raise our voices with a grand hallelujah of praise and thanksgiving; our country will be redeemed from one of the vilest and most debasing scourges that might have brought down on our heads the vials of God's wrath; but we expect to hail the glad day when the rum power shall be overthrown, and this dawn of the millenium will prove a cloud of mercy to shower blessings on our glorious country.

The horror of our lives should be the possibility of being tempted to take the intoxicating cup; if we do not take the first glass, there is but little danger that we will be moderate drinkers, and if we are not moderate drinkers, we are perfectly sure that we are safe from the drunkard's doom. Therefore the only safe and sure guarantee of our freedom from this awful curse of a craving appetite for alcoholic liquor is, "Touch not, taste not, handle not, for at last it biteth like a serpent, and stingeth like an adder." A few more fleeting years, and all our boys, and most likely our girls too, will be privileged to cast their ballots for those who will have the making and executing the laws. In this country we are all sovereigns, and it depends on you to say whether the rum-power shall rule the land or whether prohibition of the liquor traffic shall be our grand ambition.—From Demorest's Monthly for July.

Beer and Disease.

In the last quarterly report of the Washingtonian Home at Boston, Mass., Dr. Day, the superintendent, says "that of the one hundred and sixty-five new cases admitted thirty-four had delirium tremens. The increase of patients each year brings a large number of cases of diseases of the kidneys. Formerly not over one in six cases which came under treatment had disease of the kidneys. Now, one in every three has this affection, which I believe to be owing to the great increase in the use of beer. Many of these cases try to substitute beer for stronger spirits, and in this way fix the kidneys severely. Those who have used beer for years always have diseased kidneys. I am confident that, of cases of drunkards were more common in the cases which came for treatment during the last four years. My experience sustains the views of Dr. Crothers and others that inebriety is increasing, and the insane types of inebriety are also increasing. This, I believe is due in part to beer-drinking and increased nervousness. Nothing can be done practically, until society recognizes the physical nature of inebriety; then its cure and prevention may be expected."

Almost a Hint.

A Texas merchant is the father of several marriageable daughters. In fact they have been marriageable for a number of years. Not long since one of his clerks left his employment.

"You are a most excellent young man, and enjoy my perfect confidence. I would like to present you with something to remind you of me during the rest of your life," said the merchant.

"I'll be only too glad to take anything you may have to offer," replied the clerk.

"I am rejoiced to hear that. Take your pick of my daughters. You need a good wife."

The clerk took—his leave.

A Novel Dance.

Each village in the Black forest has its differences in dress, besides which there is a difference in the local customs and sports. We witnessed what is known as "the cock dance." It was going on in a barn, and our obliging driver told us of it. We were the only strangers in a group of some thirty couples. A glass full of water was hung from the rafters at a considerable height above the floor, and after executing a figure which brought a dancing couple directly under this glass, the girl bent her knees, rested her open hands on them in such a way that her partner could step on them, then she did her best to fill him high enough to kick the glass.—Cor. San Francisco Chronicle.

Averse to Improved Machinery.

United States Consul Smith at Carthagena, United States of Columbia, has sent an interesting report to the State department in regard to the harvesting and hulling of rice in that country. He has illustrated his report by two drawings which shows the women of the country first engaged in pounding the hulls of the rice in mortars and then winnowing it in the open air. He says that while the improved machinery now in use in the United States has been tried there, it has always been pronounced a failure and they have gone back to the primitive way. He suggests that if the manufacturers of rice machinery, or those interested in the rice product, would send experts there to teach the natives the new methods, a great deal of good might result to all concerned. He feels certain that many thousands of dollars' worth of machinery might be sold.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

D. one thousand eight hundred and eighty-four, and executed by Walter Manney and Amelia Manney, his wife, to the Pine Lake Iron Company, a corporation created and existing under the laws of the state of Illinois, and doing business in the county of Charlevoix, in the state of Michigan, which mortgage was recorded in the office of the register of deeds of the said county of Charlevoix, in Liber 8 of mortgages, at page 500, on the 9th day of September, in the year A. D. one thousand eight hundred and eighty-four, and the said mortgage is now owned by the said Pine Lake Iron Company; and whereas, the amount claimed to be due on said mortgage at the date of this notice is the sum of one hundred and fifty dollars and forty-five cents, ($150.45) which is the first instalment of principle secured by said mortgage with the interest thereon, and a further sum of fifteen dollars ($15.00) provided by law as an attorney's fee in the foreclosure of said mortgage, which is the whole amount of the first instalment of said mortgage with the interest thereon, and is all that is sought to be collected by the foreclosure thereof, and no suit or proceeding at law or in chancery having been instituted to recover the debt now remaining secured by the said mortgage or any part thereof, whereby the power of sale contained therein has become operative. MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the payment of the money secured by a mortgage dated the 25th day of October, A. D. 1882, executed by Thomas H. Dale and Emma J. Dale, his wife, to Ellen T. Kirkland, which mortgage was recorded in the office of the register of deeds of Charlevoix county, Michigan, on the 30th day of October, 1882, in liber 6 of mortgages, on page 146. And the said mortgagee having elected to consider the whole amount due because of said default, the amount claimed to be due at the date of this notice is the sum of five hundred and ninety-three dollars, principal and interest, and the further sum of thirty-five dollars as an attorney's fee, stipulated for in said mortgage, and no suit at law or in equity having been instituted to recover the debt so secured or any part thereof. Now, therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage and in pursuance of the statute, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises therein described, at public auction, to the highest bidder at the front door of Lewis' hall (that being the last place of holding the circuit court) in the village of Boyne City, Charlevoix county, Michigan, on the 6th day of September, 1886, at 11 o'clock in the forenoon.
